Mr. LEE. The Senator may go ahead. I have been waiting all day for an opportunity to offer an amendment, and I understood that the Chair was about to recognize me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no way of telling when Senators desire recognition unless they rise.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield to me to make a motion, which will take only a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has the floor. To whom does he yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which my amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, does the Senator from Tennessee yield for that purpose?

Mr. McKELLAR. I cannot yield for a motion. I shall be glad to yield for a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has the floor and declines to yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated. I wish to assure the Senate that I shall take less than 5 minutes to discuss the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 25, after the word "Rate", it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That alcohol used exclusively for manufacturing drugs shall bear the present tax of 2.25, and such medicinal manufacturers using such alcohol shall make bond conditioned that no alcohol bought by them shall be used for beverage purposes; such bonds shall be made under such regulations and in such amounts as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, my reason for offering the amendment is that one of the principal ingredients in all patent medicines is alcohol. The rate on alcohol has been raised by the bill. I think there is a difference between beverage alcohol and medicinal alcohol. Alcohol is used in considerable quantities for patent medicines, and patent medicines are the poor man's doctor. Poor people use patent medicines. I myself use them. They are my principal doctor. I think everybody recognizes that there ought to be a difference between the tax on alcohol used for beverage purposes and the tax on alcohol used for medicinal purposes. I brought the matter before the committee, and the chairman of the committee advised me that the principal reason why my amendment was not adopted by the committee was that it is extremely difficult for the Department to keep track of medicinal alcohol. Under the terms of my amendment a bond is proposed to be given, which would guarantee that there would be no trouble about keeping track of the medicinal alcohol, no subterfuge concerning it.

I digress long enough to ask the Senator from Mississisippi if he will not let the amendment be passed and take it to conference.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I think the purposes of the amendment appeal to everyone; but we were told by the Treasury Department that the cost of administering the law would be quite heavy, and that it would be almost impossible to administer it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am very sorry that the Senator cannot approve the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. If no one else objects to it, I shall be glad to let it go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

On a division the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I give notice that tomorrow, or the next day we are in session, I shall move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the amendment on the excess-profits tax offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be entered.

Mr. LEE obtained the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, what was the result of the vote on my amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me to make a motion?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wisconsin wants to be that discourteous—a member of the committee who did not present his amendment to the committee and give it an opportunity to argue on it—very well; but I am saying that I give notice that I shall move to reconsider.

Mr. LEE. I cannot yield, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma declines to yield.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Wisconsin may take his choice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma declines to yield. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I should like to yield for that purpose; but under a strict parliamentary interpretation I might be taken off the floor, I suppose. Since this is a question which is controversial I am compelled to decline to yield, as much as I should like to do so.

Mr. President, I have two amendments which I wish to offer, and I shall make my discussion of them as brief as I can. I shall ask for a yea-and-nay vote on each of them.

I send to the desk the first amendment and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to state the amendment.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the remainder of the reading.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I think the Senate ought to know what the proposal is.

Mr. LEE. The Senate will know; and if, after I have finished my explanation, the Senator does not know, I shall be glad to ask to have the amendment stated. I made the request merely in the interest of saving time.

I ask that the amendment be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEE'S amendment is, on page 8, between lines 15 and 16, to insert the following:

SEC. 3½. FEDERAL OBLIGATIONS—

(a) Section 22 (b) (4) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to tax-free interest) is amended by striking out the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"In the case of obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917 (other than postal-savings certificates of deposit), and in the case of obligations of a corporation organized under Act of Congress, the interest shall be exempt—

"(1) Only if such obligations were issued or reissued prior to the date of enactment of the Revenue Act of 1940; and

"(2) Only if and to the extent provided in the respective Acts authorizing the issue thereof as amended and supplemented; and shall be excluded from gross income only if and to the extent it is wholly exempt from the taxes imposed by this chapter."

(b) Section 25 (a) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to interest on United States obligations) is amended by inserting after the words "United States" the words "issued or reissued prior to the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1940"

(c) Section 25 (a) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to interest on obligations of instrumentalities of the United States) is amended by inserting after the words "normal tax" a semicolon and the following: "and (D) such obligations were issued or reissued prior to date of enactment of the Revenue Act of 1940."

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, this amendment, which the late Senator Borah offered several times and which the Senate adopted at one time, proposes to make illegal the issuance hereafter of tax-exempt securities. The Senate adopted that amendment at one time and the President has asked us for legislation on the subject. On April 25, 1938, the President sent to Congress a message asking us to put an end to tax-exempt securities; and in the hearings on June 12, 13, and 14 of this year the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, said:

The Treasury is in favor of a repeal of those statutes granting exemption of interest on future public-securities issues, Federal, State, municipal, and local, including the obligations to be issued under this act.

Mr. President, I realize that this tax bill has been brought in under pressure, as has every other tax bill since I have been a Member of the Senate. We are given the "rush act" every time a tax bill is brought forward for consideration. To refresh our memories, let me say that the chairman of the committee a while ago made a speech which is essentially the same speech that the genial Senator from Mississippi has made for each tax bill, urging us to wait.

To refresh our memories, I wish to read the same request that was made on two preceding occasions.

On April 9, 1938, the following debate occurred:

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, would not the Senator from Idaho be satisfied if his amendment and the amendments suggested by the Senator from Missouri were all referred to the committee? We can give the Senators every assurance that the matter will be taken up by the committee. I am in sympathy with the proposal; but if this amendment should be incorporated in the law, we should have to change almost all the features of this bill. The provision relates to gross income and adjusted net income and the interest rates on Liberty bonds.

Mr. BORAH. The amendment which I have offered would not affect those things. It merely provides that all future issues of bonds or securities by the Federal Government shall be subject to taxation, after a certain date, in the future.

Mr. HARRISON. Would not the Senator be satisfied if this matter did not go into the bill at this time, and would he not be content to let the Finance Committee try to work out something on it?

Mr. BORAH. Would not the Senator from Mississippi be satisfied to take it to conference?

Mr. HARRISON. The experts tell me that it is going to be very troublesome.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the amendment was drawn by one of the experts.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that.

* * * * * * *

Mr. HARRISON. What we want to do is to get the bill through today, so if the Senator insists, and does not accept the suggestion I have made, I suppose there is nothing else to do but vote on the amendment.

* * * * * * *

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desired to point out to the Senator what we were up against. He will notice throughout the bill that in the provisions for taxes on corporations everything is based on the adjusted net income, which means the income less the interest paid on Liberty bonds, intercompany dividends, and so on. The bill was written in that way. If the amendment should be adopted, we would have to go back through the bill and make numberless changes. That is what the parliamentary experts tell me. So it seems to me it would present a very complicated situation if it should be adopted.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it must be understood that this amendment does not deal with anything except future issues.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that.

* * * * * * *

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Idaho that this is a very important matter. The bill is now in good shape, I think, and if the Senator's proposal were involved in it, it would make it complicated. The Senator knows that in a conference, where we are trying to expedite consideration of a measure, the proposal might not receive the consideration which it deserves.

I will say to the Senator from Idaho that a subcommittee and I will consult with the Senator to the membership of the Finance Committee that he desires to be on the subcommittee—will begin work on this plan immediately, and will study the Senator's plan, and the plan with reference to the States and the municipalities, and, so far as the Finance Committee is concerned, we will not let up on it. I wish we could "excommunicate" the Senator's proposal from the bill.

* * * * * * *

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if that is the desire of Senators I hope the Senators will stay here with us until we can vote on these proposals tonight.

And the amendment was agreed to by a vote of 34 to 33.

That was in 1938.

In 1939, last year, some Senators will recall that I offered the proposal; and after the colloquy, which I shall read, I was persuaded by the same persuasive argument to withdraw it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, before the Senator concludes, I wish to express the hope that the Senator will not insist on his amendment. I wish to state what the facts are. During the last session the Senate appointed a special committee to study the question referred to, because it is a very complicated one. The committee was appointed to study the question of taxing future issues of Federal, State, and local securities. There is no question, of course, that Congress has the right to tax the interest on Federal issues. However, many questions are involved. Therefore, the special committee, of which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN] is chairman, proceeded to make a study of the question. The committee did some very valuable work and is now ready to make its report.

Of course, the proposal for such reciprocal taxation must begin in the House. The Senate Committee on Finance is ready to consider the question now.

The Senator from Oklahoma will recall that previously, when the question of reciprocal taxation of State and Federal employees was considered, the Senator from Missouri offered an amendment dealing with the taxation of securities. Assurance was given the Senator that the House would take the matter up and consider it.

The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DOUGHTON] has just informed me that the committee has been working on the social security measure, as the Senator knows, for some 2 months, and also on the tax bill which is now before us. Therefore, the committee has been unable to get to a study of the tax-exempt securities matter until now. The committee will begin work next Wednesday. I do not know how rapidly they will proceed. I cannot speak for the Ways and Means Committee. However, it will not be long before we shall have the question before us. In view of that I hope the Senator will not at this time insist on his amendment to the pending bill, because the House Ways and Means Committee has not yet given the question any consideration. As I said, they will begin considering it next Wednesday.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, does the Senator think we may have it up this session?

Mr. HARRISON. I hope so, but I do not know. The Senate cannot start action on the measure because such action must originate in the House of Representatives. Of course, the Senator is in order in offering the amendment on the pending revenue bill.

Mr. LEE. Of course, the reason for offering it at this time is because such an amendment is limited to tax measures as they come up. Can the Senator give me any assurance of consideration in his committee if such a measure does come over from the House during the present session?

Mr. HARRISON. The committee of which I have the honor of being chairman tries to give expeditious consideration to all matters that come over to us, and I can assure him that if the bill comes over here, the Committee on Finance will begin the study of the question immediately.

Mr. LEE. I will say that if the Senator considers it with the speed that he did the pending tax measure, it will be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. HARRISON. We will give expeditious consideration to the matter.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator from Connecticut as well as the Senator from Oklahoma that here is a great and important committee of the House of Representatives as the Senator knows because he has been a Member of the House. The bill goes to that committee. The question will be referred, if need be, to the conference committee, on which there will probably be five members from the Ways and Means Committee. They would naturally want their full committee to study the question. That will hold up the bill. No question of constitutionality is involved. Many people agree that Congress has the right to tax future Federal securities. Yet they think it is unfair to the Federal Government for the States to continue to issue bonds which are tax free, while the Federal Government puts additional burdens of taxes on them. So there are many and varied ideas with respect to this question. I do not know who is correct about the matter, but we are bound to get this question before us for consideration in the not greatly distant future.

Mr. President, I believe I am logical in my contention that the amendment ought not to be placed on the pending bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator will recall that when that colloquy took place on the floor of the Senate, comparatively early in the last session of the Congress, on the representations of the Ways and Means Committee, made by the chairman to some of the most prominent Members, I was induced to withhold offering my amendment, after I had given notice that I intended to offer it. So far as I know, that is the last that has been heard of that subject from that day to this.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for corroborating my statement.

Later in the debate the following occurred:

Mr. BROWN. In the first place, I do not wish to take offense at the statement of the majority leader that our committee is a subcommittee of the Finance Committee. We are a special committee of the United States Senate.

* * * * * * *

Mr. BROWN. * * * I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] that under ordinary conditions I should favor his amendment. I do not understand just what his amendment provides; but, generally, I understand that it prevents a further issue of tax-exempt bonds by the Federal Government, and applies a tax upon future issues of State and municipal bonds.

Mr. LEE. No; it does not do that.

Mr. BROWN. I agree with the general purpose. I should be pleased if I thought we could now write such an amendment into the tax law of the United States. However, as I view the situation today, the 22d day of June, I am satisfied that we cannot write it into the pending bill. I know that there are Senators present who are so strongly opposed to the measure and its consideration under these circumstances that they not only could but would act in a way that would prevent consideration of the amendment at the present time if they thought it was to be written into the law.

I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that I intend to do my part to write into the law this amendment, or the substance of this amendment, so that it will become effective upon the income taxes which are to be paid in March 1940. However, I am satisfied that the conferees from the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives would not permit the amendment to be added to the pending bill so as to become law on the 1st day of July of this year. So I think the Senator's effort is futile and would not produce the result which he desires to achieve.

Mr. LEE. Does the Senator's contemplation of the proposal preventing tax exemption include State and local tax-exempt securities?

Mr. BROWN. Speaking for myself, I would first prevent the further issue of tax-exempt bonds by the Federal Government. There is no question that we can do that constitutionally. Secondly, by the same reciprocal method we used in applying the income tax to State salaries, I would provide that the States might tax the income from Federal securities, and that the Federal Government might apply its income tax to future issues of State and municipal bonds. That is the proposal which I favor.

Mr. President, of course I did not read these things with any intention except to show that each year we have the same situation. We have a tax under a "rush act," we are given the "rush act" with respect to amendments, and we are given the same assurances, that soon another tax bill will be before the Senate, and that we will have an opportunity at that time to offer the amendments.

No one could do this better than the genial chairman of the Committee on Finance, who is a very kind and pleasant gentleman, and I may add, most effective in slipping a tax bill right on through without amendment. I say in fairness that a great responsibility rests on him. There are many amendments, it is true; but after the President of the United States has asked the Congress for a bill to stop the further issuance of tax-exempt securities, after the Secretary of the Treasury has come out in favor of legislation which would stop the further issuance of tax-exempt securities, after this body has already passed on it by a majority vote, after the people passed the sixteenth amendment, which amendment provided that Congress should have the power to tax a man's income from whatever source derived, showing that the people wanted us to tax income which is escaping, I think it is appropriate that we should attach this amendment to the pending tax bill.

Mr. President, tax exemption is special privilege to a special class. It is not a privilege to the poor man, because he does not own any bonds. It is a special privilege to the rich, and I think it should be stopped. Now, when we are broadening the tax base, at the time when we are reaching down into the lower brackets and requiring the payment of taxes on incomes down to $800, I think we certainly should tap this great reservoir of wealth in this country.

Fifty-five billion dollars of wealth is now hidden in the storm cellar of tax-exempt securities, and we cannot touch it. Yet our country faces such a crisis that we find it necessary to go down into the lower-bracket incomes and tax the man with an income of no more than $800. No doubt we will soon hear the argument, "Not at this time; next time we are going to take that up. We are considering it. We are going to wait until we get it 100 percent perfect." I believe we should go ahead and act on it now.

Mr. President, when I presented this matter on one other occasion, I made a few remarks which are just as appropriate now, and I wish to refer to a few paragraphs of what I said at that time. On May 2, 1939, in a speech on the floor of the Senate, I stated:

> If a person has an income from renting a building, practicing law, teaching school, running a store, or working in a shop, or any other occupation, he must pay income taxes both to the State and Federal Governments, but if he has an income derived from the interest on tax-exempt Government bonds, he is excused from paying taxes on that income, yet there are those who favor the continuation of this tax-exemption privilege.
> If a married storekeeper living in Oklahoma has an income of $5,000, he must pay income taxes amounting to $146.22, but if his neighbor has an income of $5,000 from the interest on tax-exempt bonds, he is excused from paying any income taxes whatever on that income.
> Then, again, if a married man living in Oklahoma, after paying property taxes and paving taxes, has an income of $10,000 derived from renting his own property, he must pay income taxes amounting to $737.85; but if his neighbor has an income of $10,000 derived from the interest on tax-exempt bonds, he is excused from paying any income taxes whatever on that income.
> Then, again, if a married man living in Oklahoma has an income of $50,000 derived from the oil business, he would be required to pay income taxes amounting to $11,132.41; whereas if his neighbor has an income of $50,000 derived from tax-exempt Government bonds, he would be excused from paying any income taxes whatever on that income.
> Then, again, if a poor farmer does not make enough to pay his property taxes, his farm is sold from under him; but if a rich man has an income of $1,000,000 derived from tax-exempt bonds, he is not required to pay one thin dime of taxes on that income.
> Such favoritism is not only unfair and unjust but it is economically unsound.
> The Government is losing millions in revenue because of these tax exemptions. By taxing incomes which are now exempt, the Government will gain much more in revenues than it will lose on account of increased costs, but, of course, those who favor tax exemption argue that if you do not exempt the bonds from taxation you must pay higher interest rates in order to sell them, and that this increased cost offsets the gain in revenue.
> But that is not true, because only those with large incomes are able to purchase bonds, and these large incomes are subject to heavy surtaxes which would return much more in revenues than the additional interest would cost. Mr. Hanes, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, reports that it would not be necessary to increase the interest rate more than one-half of 1 percent at the most, and perhaps as low as one-fourth of 1 percent.
> Therefore, I repeat, the Government loses much more in revenue than it gains in lower interest rates.
> Of course, the savings in revenue would differ according to the tax laws of the different States and also according to the amount of the income of the purchaser, but let us take a specific example.
> Suppose a school district in Oklahoma issues $1,000,000 worth of bonds bearing 3 percent interest, and suppose the entire issue is purchased by a man having an income of $500,000. If the bonds are tax exempt, the Government loses each year in income taxes $21,197.77; whereas if the bonds were taxable the increased cost in interest charges would average only $3,750 a year, according to the estimates of the Treasury Department. The difference between $21,197.77, which would be the loss in revenue if the bonds were tax exempt, and $3,750, which would be the increased cost if the bonds were not tax exempt, is $17,447.77.
> In other words, the net loss in revenue on that $1,000,000 issue of tax-exempt bonds is $17,447.77 each year. Then suppose these bonds were issued for 20 years. The total amount of net loss in revenue on that $1,000,000 issue of tax-exempt bonds would be $348,955.40.
> For that amount many school bells could be kept ringing, and remember that figure represents the savings on only $1,000,000 worth of tax-exempt bonds, whereas altogether there are $50,000,000,000 worth of tax-exempt bonds in the United States today.

Mr. President, I said a while ago, tax exemption is a special privilege to a special class. If a man with an income of $500,000 purchases a bond, the tax-exemption privilege is worth 7 percent interest to him, whereas the tax-exempt privilege to a man with an income of $5,000 is worth only two-tenths of 1 percent to him. Consequently it is a special privilege to the few.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Oklahoma has discussed only the first of the two amendments he has proposed.

Mr. LEE. Yes.

Mr. BROWN. I understand he will discuss the other amendment later?

Mr. LEE. I shall only explain the other one.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I wish to say that I do not blame the Senator from Oklahoma at all for feeling somewhat put out, as he indicates he is, by reason of the lack of action upon this issue. As the Senator knows, it takes the concurrent action of the House and the Senate to pass a measure providing for taxation of bonds. The Senate has at least twice, and possibly even more often than that, passed some sort of measure taxing the interest on Federal bonds. None of those actions resulted in getting such a law upon the statute books.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. LEE. The Senate reversed its own action the last time we passed such legislation. A Senator who had supported it moved to reconsider the vote by which the measure was passed, and under the influence of the chairman of the Finance Committee, whose influence is very strong in that regard, the Senate was persuaded to put the measure aside until the next year. That was last year. Last year we were persuaded to put the measure aside to another year, and that is this year, and now we are no doubt going to be persuaded to put it aside again.

Mr. BROWN. I only know that the Senator is interested in enacting a law that will cover this situation. I have certainly that same interest. I, of course, have no certain knowledge of what the Ways and Means Committee would do if we should adopt the Senator's amendment and put it on the bill and if the matter went to conference. Of course, in order to keep the RECORD straight, the Senator well knows that the Ways and Means Committee and the House of Representatives did not pass upon legislation of this character in the pending House bill that is before us.

From a practical standpoint I do not think it is possible to enact this legislation by adopting the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma, but I think there is a more fundamental objection to the amendment which the Senator proposes. There is no question that the President of the United States, the Treasury Department and, I believe I am safe in saying, a majority of the Members of the Senate, are desirous of enacting legislation which will adequately cover the matter of tax-exempt bonds. Unqualifiedly I believe that we should enact such a law. But I think the Senate would be doing a disservice to the cause which I firmly believe it desires to further, by adopting this particular amendment.

As the Senator will readily admit, I think, his amendment relates solely to Federal bonds. The Senator from Idaho, who was taken from us early in this session, was always in favor of taxing the interest on Federal bonds. He was strongly opposed to the Federal Government taxing the interest on State and municipal bonds. He always drew that line of distinction. He would not have favored a proposal to lay a Federal tax on such bonds, first, because he did not believe it was right to do so, and second, because he did not believe it could be done constitutionally. As the Senator from Oklahoma says, there has never been any doubt about the constitutional power of the United States to tax Federal bonds. The question has always been whether or not we could constitutionally tax State bonds. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that I am satisfied, after a somewhat extensive investigation into this question, that the Federal Government can constitutionally tax the interest on State bonds.

I think the constitutionality of any law we might pass would be aided by the use of the reciprocal plan, that is, taxation of Federal bonds by State authorities, and taxation of State bonds by Federal authorities. But the Senator leaves out of his amendment any reference to State securities. He does not provide for a tax upon State securities.

For the reasons I have stated, I think that we ought to do the whole job at once; that is, pass a reciprocal-tax law. On this subject, the Senator knows that the Supreme Court of the United States has approved that type of legislation. It was the opinion of the Attorney General and of the General Counsel of the Bureau of Internal Revenue that the reciprocal plan would aid the constitutionality of the bill.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. LEE. Of course, the adoption of this amendment would not preclude the passage of a reciprocal law. The effect of the pending amendment would simply be to prevent the Federal Government itself from issuing securities under a contract with the purchaser that it would not tax them. That would not in any way hinder the passage of such a law as the Senator refers to. In my opinion, that is the first step we should take toward stopping the tax-exempt privilege. We are facing a time when it will be necessary for the Treasury Department to borrow a great amount of money. There will be a tremendous temptation for the Treasury Department to issue tax-exempt bonds. In spite of the Secretary's statement that he proposes not to issue any more tax-exempt bonds, when he faces the situation and wants the bonds purchased, he will be under a tremendous temptation to issue tax-exempt bonds again. But if we should adopt this amendment it would make it illegal for him to make such a contract with a purchaser.

Mr. BROWN. My point is—and it is contrary to what the Senator said in the earlier part of the last statement he made—that it would be easier to get a bill through the Senate which taxes both State bonds and Federal bonds than to pass such legislation piecemeal. I have no doubt that many Senators who are quite strongly insistent upon the principle of State's rights would readily vote for a proposal to tax Federal bonds, and we could probably pass that kind of a law today; but when we came to the matter of passing a law which taxes State bonds, we should be met with strong opposition from Senators who entertain such views.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. LEE. The Senator does not argue that it is now necessary to pass any law to tax Federal bonds, does he? If the Federal bond does not contain a contract with the purchaser which forbids taxation, no such law is necessary.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator refers to State bonds, does he not?

Mr. LEE. No; I mean Federal bonds. The Government issues some bonds which are subject to certain taxes.

Mr. BROWN. That is correct.

Mr. LEE. If the taxation is not precluded by contract with the purchaser, the Federal Government may tax them now.

Mr. BROWN. The Federal Government does tax a great many Federal bonds to a certain extent at the present time.

Mr. LEE. To a certain extent. That is true. The point I was making is that there is no need for a law to give the Government the right to tax its own bonds. The only law we need is a law to make it illegal for the Government to make a contract with the purchaser that it will not tax them.

Mr. BROWN. I think the Senator is correct in that respect; but that does not overcome my proposition, that it would be easier to obtain a complete law which would prevent the issue of all tax-exempt bonds by the Federal Government, by State governments, or by municipal governments, than to do so by piecemeal legislation.

I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that as to the $4,000,000,000 of securities which may be issued by the Treasury Department to finance national defense—the authorization which is contained in the pending bill—the Secretary has plainly stated that he will not issue tax-exempt notes. Let me read what the Secretary said:

> On these new securities, if I have the discretion, I want to make them fully taxable. * * * To make this thing fair all around I don't think we should increase the taxes $1,000,000,000, and then give the people who lend the money a special privilege through tax exemption.

The Secretary said in another place:

> I want to indicate clearly the Treasury's position with respect to repeal of tax exemption affecting interest on all public securities. I am opposed to any action modifying contractual obligations exempting from taxation interest on outstanding Federal securities.

The Senator does not propose to interfere with that situation by his amendment.

> The Treasury is in favor of a repeal of those statutes granting exemption of interest on all future public-security issues, Federal, State, municipal, and local, including the obligations to be issued under this act. However, if the tax exemption affecting future State, municipal, and local issues is not repealed at this time, the Treasury wishes to reserve the discretion it now enjoys under the Second Liberty Bond Act, and it will make the interest on the notes to be issued under this act subject to Federal taxes.

I take that, along with the other statement which I read, as a plain indication on the part of Secretary Morgenthau, who will handle this issue, that he will not issue any more tax-exempt securities to take care of this particular $4,000,000,000 of financing. So I think the result which the Senator seeks is already achieved. The present administration is against the use of tax-exempt bonds; but I am fearful, as I said before, that there are several Senators whose votes we sorely need, and that we shall lose them if we place before them the single and sole issue of the right of the Federal Government to tax State and municipal securities. I wish to put that question before the Senate in one bill, and not in several bills.

I wish to say to the Senator again that I am further satisfied that the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives—and the Senator and I have both been Members of the House of Representatives—is very jealous of its prerogatives.

Heretofore they have at least twice, and I think more often than that, refused to accept an amendment of this kind on a tax bill. I think it is utterly futile for us to put it on a bill which the Senator from Mississippi tells us it is hoped will be passed by Saturday night.

I shall not again ask the Senator from Oklahoma to withdraw his amendment. I do not think I would have any success if I made such a request; but I say to the Senate, and particularly to those who desire this type of legislation, that if we want a good bill prohibiting the further issuance of tax-exempt bonds we should do it at a time when we can cover the entire problem; that is, the issue of Federal tax-exempts and the issue of State and municipal tax-exempts. If we are to do the job thoroughly, we must do it at one and the same time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE].

Mr. LEE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. I hope the Senate will give me a vote on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. LEE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Donahey	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Andrews	Downey	Lucas	Sheppard
Ashurst	Ellender	Lundeen	Shipstead
Austin	George	McCarran	Slattery
Bailey	Gerry	McKellar	Smathers
Bankhead	Gillette	McNary	Smith
Barkley	Green	Maloney	Taft
Bilbo	Guffey	Mead	Thomas, Idaho
Bone	Gurney	Miller	Thomas, Okla.
Bridges	Hale	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Harrison	Murray	Tobey
Bulow	Hatch	Neely	Townsend
Burke	Hayden	Norris	Truman
Byrd	Herring	Nye	Tydings
Byrnes	Hill	O'Mahoney	Vandenberg
Capper	Holman	Overton	Van Nuys
Caraway	Holt	Pepper	Wagner
Chandler	Hughes	Pittman	Walsh
Chavez	Johnson, Calif.	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Clark, Idaho	Johnson, Colo.	Reed	White
Clark, Mo.	King	Reynolds	Wiley
Connally	La Follette	Russell
Danaher	Lee	Schwartz

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I desire to have a yea and nay vote on this amendment which proposes to prevent the further issuance of tax-exempt bonds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are requested. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, between lines 6 and 7, it is proposed to insert the following:

(a) Section 12 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Definition of 'Surtax net income': As used in this section the term 'surtax net income' means the amount by which the net income together with exclusions from gross income under section 22 (b) (4) exceeds the credits against net income provided in section 25 (b)."

On page 1, line 7, before the word "section", it is proposed to insert "(b)."

On page 6, between lines 5 and 6, it is proposed to insert the following:

(c) The Internal Revenue Code is amended by inserting therein, immediately after section 33, a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 34. In the case of an individual, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax an amount equal to the surtax on a surtax net income equal to $4,000 plus the exclusions from gross income under section 22 (b) (4); but the credit shall not exceed the portion of the tax attributable to section 12."

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, this amendment provides for adding the tax-exempt income to the taxable income for the purpose of determining the rate which would be applicable only to the taxable income. In other words, it would mean that if a man had an income of $10,000 from tax-exempt securities, and if he had an income of $10,000 from taxable sources, we could consider the $10,000 of tax-exempts as in the lower brackets, so as to push the taxable income up into the upper brackets and increase the rate. This has been considered by those who have studied the question as an entirely proper and legal method of reaching income which is now escaping taxation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, this probably is not the most auspicious moment for offering to the pending bill the amendment which I intend to tender at this time. I shall ask that the clerk report the amendment I have offered, but I ask unanimous consent that the reading of it be waived, because I think all Senators are aware of its contents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state where the amendment is to be placed in the bill.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 33, to add a new section, to be numbered section 404.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, if the Senator will permit, that hereafter in referring to the amendment it be referred to as the "War Profits Taxation Act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, so that the record may appear in an orderly way, I am glad to concur in the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi. The amendment I have tendered, and which I now propose to discuss, has appeared in the Senate under various bill numbers. The last bill, which is the one tendered as the amendment, was known as Senate bill 1885. I think Senators are familiar with the bill, because it has appeared in this form for 5 years, the bill first being introduced in 1935.

The bill is in reality the work of the Senate Munitions Committee. To more completely identify it, let me say to Senators that in 1938 the bill received the endorsement of the organization known as the Veterans of Foreign Wars, who publicized it all over the United States and urged its adoption. In 1939 the Veterans of Foreign Wars again put on a Nationwide campaign to bring about the adoption of this particular piece of legislation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Would the Senator be willing, if it meets with the approval of the Senate, to have his amendment, together with the substitute for it offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] accepted by the Senate to go to conference? I cannot give any assurance how long it will stay in conference, but we will at least treat them both fairly. [Laughter.]

Mr. BONE. I am rather inclined to accept the suggestion of the able Senator from Mississippi. I think that, in any event, if it were adopted by the Senate, the conferees would exercise their best judgment on the amendment.

If the Senator will give me about 5 minutes, so that I can explain to my colleagues something of the background of the amendment, I will not attempt to go into its merits. I think I shall be happy to avail myself of the offer the Senator has made to have the amendment go to conference.

Without discussing the merits of the amendment, let me say that no group of men in the United States is more sincerely interested in the question of war profits than are the veterans of the United States who saw service overseas. They, in common with all other patriotic citizens of the country, were shocked and filled with a sense of outrage that anyone could remain in the United States during a time when our soldiers were engaged in a foreign war and pile up enormous profits.

I have in the mass of papers before me an editorial from one of the most conservative papers on the Pacific coast, pointing out that the records of the Treasury indicated that during the World War 23,000 men in the United States were permitted to become millionaires.

I think, first, that the country would never survive the economic shock of that sort of an operation were we even to attempt the experience of the former war in allowing individuals and firms to make enormous profits again. Second, I think the proposal of this kind of legislation must at this time appear rather mild to Members of the Senate.

I had intended, had I occupied the floor at any length, to emphasize what I have just stated. A few days ago the able Senator from Florida said that this tax bill was tax bill No. 1, that tumbling one on the heels of the other would come a succession of tax bills, each one devoted to the purpose of making it impossible for anyone to enrich himself during wartime.

We are now confronted with the inevitability of a draft of young men. A great many of us are fathers. We face the necessity of seeing our boys drafted into the Army, and it will be sufficient to say to my colleagues that if a war should come to our country and my boy and their boys were taken into the Army, that draft would not preserve for them any part of their prewar earnings. It would be a draft of 100 percent of their bodies. The draft would include their health, their sanity, and all they have realized out of life up to the time they are drafted.

Now let me be more concrete and specific. Suppose—and I think we should have these things in mind when we pass tax bills, because I want to say frankly to my colleagues that, so long as I am a Member of this body, I shall not be tolerant of the efforts of anyone to make profits during a war—suppose a boy were a university boy, of sound mind and good body, that all he had in life was his health and a good education. At the time he was drafted he was earning, we will say, $6,000 a year. He might not be good officer material at the moment, because that requires some sort of training, and therefore he would have to become a buck private at $30 a month.

What would Army officials or Navy officials say to that boy if, when he appeared before the drafting officer, he sat down, as businessmen are wont to sit down when they discuss business matters with Government officials in wartime, and said, "Now, gentlemen, before we go through the formalities of my being inducted into the Army, I want to have a little heart-to-heart discussion with you about business matters. I am sure you, having a profound respect for all the orthodoxies of the capitalist system, will understand that I have a property right in my body, and that property is protected under our Constitution. I have been holding down a pretty good job, receiving $500 a month. I want now to discuss with you the possibility of my being able to retain part of that. Since I have severed my connection I will expect the Government Treasury to make up the balance for me."

Suppose such a boy appeared before the National Council of Defense and made such an argument, what do you think, Mr. President, he would be charged with being? He probably would be immediately charged with being a "fifth columnist" or a Communist, or something of that sort. Yet I ask here and now, in good faith, what is the difference between that boy demanding the preservation to him of a portion of his pre-war earnings and the businessman whose profits we have to consider? Does a boy have no property right in his life? Can that be so under a parliamentary government which day in and day out emphasizes in America the sacredness of property rights, emphasizes the fact that if we destroy what we call property rights, then our civilization falls? Can it be possible that under our form of government, with altitudinous elan and wild acclaim in a burst of passion accompanying a declaration of war, to set aside all that boy's property rights in his own body, but at the same time to have a tenderness and solicitude and sympathy in listening to the claims of businessmen to make profits?

The other day there was called to my attention an article appearing on the financial page of a large eastern newspaper, which I shall put in the RECORD a little later. I call the Senate's attention to this because it is going to make for a condition, unless we are emotionally dead, which will bring about such a revulsion of feeling here as will clean the boards in America, and I hope they will be cleaned without the United States getting into the war.

The writer to whom I referred spoke about the English system of taxation. He said there is very serious question in the minds of businessmen in Britain about the effect of the heavier taxes now being levied over there. The picture changes so rapidly that it may have changed since the article was written; but the picture was predicated on this kind of a set-up, that there is a determination made of the normal profits over a certain period, and beyond that the Government takes all. In other words, the excess-profits tax takes everything, 100 percent, over and above the prewar earnings. In commenting on it this American writer, who probably would have no hesitancy in grabbing 100 percent of the body, said there is grave question now in the minds of many businessmen in England as to the effect of this, because if you remove the hope of profit, if you remove this great motivating force, which is of course profit above the normal profit, there is nothing left for the businessman, nothing to animate him except the vague thing we call patriotism.

Merciful God, just the vague thing called patriotism. If my brethren thought as I do, we would not waste 5 minutes on these bills.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] said the other day that we will take over the property of the United States. I am sure that we all understood that he did not quite mean that.

I will say to my Republican and Democratic brethren who do me the honor to listen to me, that both parties in their platform declarations made definite specific pledges to the American people on this subject. Do Senators know what those pledges were? That pledge in each party platform was the reason why the veterans of America got behind this bill, S. 1885. This is what these pledges said—pledges made by your party and by my party—"In the next war we believe in drafting property exactly as we draft men."

Do Senators think there ought to be any reason why a committee of conferees of both Houses should not be willing to accept the proposal contained in Senate bill 1885? If Senators have no doubt, I shall take time to read the platform declarations to them. Perhaps it can be understood now why the Republicans are going to meet in a few days and adopt a plankless platform. I do not blame them at all. Imagine the party of Lincoln having a plankless platform! That is the kind of platform they ought to have if we "weasel" on this business of war profits. That is the sort of a platform the noble Democratic Party ought to have if it lacks the "guts" to take all the profits in wartime when it takes the bodies of our boys.

There are two other considerations which I think should move us. If one-tenth of 1 percent of the horrors of war that have been pictured to us repeatedly in the columns of the press day after day are true then we will have a struggle to retain our republican form of government if a war comes to us. We will not have to worry over whether we shall make profits or not. I am as firmly convinced of one thing as I am that I stand here today, as I am that I live, and that is that if war comes to us these men, after awhile, are not going to worry about profits. They are going to face the question of whether there shall be a capital levy on all property in the United States.

We can go ahead and concern ourselves about these taxes, and concern ourselves hour after hour in debate as to how much profit men shall have, but if mothers and fathers have not become utterly soft they will never let their boys go to war and be shot to death until they know that all the property in the country has been drafted precisely as the boys have been. They will not be good Americans if they do not do so.

What is there sacred about property that does not apply with equal force to a boy's life? If war comes, I shall not if I can help it, allow anyone to make profit out of war while my boy is in the trenches.

Already we are told that we shall be obliged to have a totalitarian government. I think the Senator from Florida suggested the other night that we had better abandon some of our pretensions and go to it right away. If we must have a totalitarian government do not think that it will protect property. The urge to live is as implicit in government as it is in men's minds. It is embedded as deeply there as it is in the hearts and souls of men. So I think we need not worry about that.

If we proceed with our preparedness program, if we build a two-ocean Navy, we shall be obliged to spend much more than the $20,000,000,000 the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] referred to the other day. I think he was quite modest in his estimate. I believe the Senator from Virginia has been very realistic in talking about this matter of defense. We will not spend merely $20,000,000,000 in preparations. We will spend two or three hundred billion dollars in preparations, and then how long do Senators think we will stand around and talk about profits? Profits! We are discussing the matter of profits, but when making such tremendous outlays there can be little question of profits.

This morning we had a long confab in the Naval Affairs Committee about whether or not shipbuilders, airplane builders, should have 10-, 12-, or 14-percent profits. Suppose the boys are called to the colors, do you think, Mr. President, the American people will with any tolerance listen to long, tedious debates here whether a manufacturer shall make 14-percent profit?

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. I wonder if the Senator remembers that before the Naval Affairs Committee this morning one of the witnesses testified that if we take away any portion of the profits in this construction work, which we are trying to hurry to a culmination, it would destroy the efforts we were making to expedite the construction for defense? Does the Senator recall that?

Mr. BONE. Yes, I do; and very vividly. I hope every Senator will read the statements of witnesses who appeared before the Naval Affairs Committee this morning. If the people of the United States could read them, they would find them very revealing.

Such statements have been made before committees, not only this morning, but during the years back to 1934, when I tried to have our navy yards expanded, and the Navy objected to it, stating that it did not want to expand them, that when we got into trouble it would have private concerns build the ships. I reminded the Navy Department officials of what private concerns had done to us in the World War. They took our shirts. These patriotic businessmen, these fellows who are waving flags and bellowing to high heaven about their Americanism and patriotism, and who are squawking all the time about "fifth columnists," said to us, to Senators of the United States, "If we cannot make that much profit, of course, our enthusiasm will wane."

Let a soldier's enthusiasm wane, and what would happen to him? There would be a drumhead court martial, and he would be shot to death. But the patriotism of one of these fellows who makes 24-percent profit on airplanes can wane, and we do not do anything about it. I should like to be in command of this business for a while and have the patriotism of one of these fellows wane. He would wane permanently. That would be his last waning. His wail about waning would be classified among famous last words. When my boy is taken into the Army, do Senators suppose that his patriotism will be permitted to wane when he gets into a trench?

Mr. President, it is funny business. It is un-American. It is indecent. It is a consummation of all the vulgarisms and of vulgarities of all time for men to talk about the profit they must make so that they will work well. These businessmen suggested to us—and a number of Senators were present—that they felt very sure that they could not do a very good job if their profits were cut down to 7 or 8 percent.

They could not do a very good job. Therefore, they would be very loath to assure quick action on tanks, airplanes, and other things if they had to live on a measly, wretched 7 or 8 percent. Their stockholders would not like it. God would be insulted. The angels in heaven would wear their wings at half mast if we did such an atrocious thing to them.

Mr. President, what do you suppose would happen to a boy in the Army who told his colonel, "Now, Colonel, you know I was getting a good salary before I came here, and I am getting only 30 "bucks" a month now. I find my urge to serve my country waning. I am fearful I cannot stage a good fight for you. My profit motive is impaired." What do you think would happen to that boy? My people have soldiered in every war, back to and including the Revolution. I think they had some "guts", and I do not think one of them ever got into an argument with his colonel or division commander about whether or not he was getting enough while he was trying to bring the Republic into existence, or keep Britain from strangling it in its cradle, or to preserve it afterward in all the wars down to the present.

That is the reason why, in my judgment, the bill which I have introduced and which has now been offered in the form of an amendment, which the Senator from Mississippi has been generous enough to agree to take to conference, is the thing we shall have to face. I think it is a mild bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought we had arranged matters so that the amendment, which is quite long, need not be printed, but that we might refer to it by title, which would not necessitate the expense of printing it. I think it would be well for the Senate to pass on the question, because I find that printing it would be quite costly.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I had several hundred copies of it printed. That may solve his problem. I think the clerk in charge of printing had several hundred copies printed for me, and I think that will solve the Senator's problem for him.

I was diverted, and I am sorry, because I intended to conclude in a moment. I call attention to the fact that Australia and Canada are preparing to take over not merely the income from property, but the corpus of the property, if necessary. The total war of today is altogether different from anything man ever has dreamed of. It has been suggested that we adopt totalitarianism as a necessary thing. It seems strange, does it not, to all of us to have an honored Member of the Senate rise in our midst and urge upon us as a matter of self-defense that it is necessary to adopt totalitarianism to preserve the Republic—to urge upon men who are the sons of men who fought at Gettysburg that we must go to totalitarianism in this country?

If we do so a Fascist government will be set up in this country. We may call it anything we please. I do not care who might head the Government—President Roosevelt, a Republican President, or anyone else—it would be a Fascist government. To fight an evil, to fight a monstrous thing, we must embrace it. And yet we have been told this week that we must embrace fascism or its equivalent.

As I see fascism and communism in operation in the world today, there is not much difference between them, except that the Fascist movement, or the Nazi movement, or the totalitarian or authoritarian type of government takes over the whole of the economy in a succession of bites—half a dozen or a dozen bites, including capital levies, and what not. The Communist movement merely makes one big gulp and absorbs the whole thing at one time. If Senators have any choice of executioners, if they prefer to be burned at the stake to being boiled in oil, I shall not quarrel with them about how they shall be incontinently and improvidently removed from this vale of tears. So far as I am concerned, I prefer to live here. In the words of Walter Lippmann, I am one of the soft Americans who like to live in America and have automobiles and things which the fecund genius of America has given us in unlimited quantities—things which I think, if we have any sense at all, we can retain.

No; we are not to retain those things. We are to embrace a totalitarian form of government, we are told, and rush into it so that Senators may save themselves unnecessary worry about the little tax bill which the veterans endorse.

As I was about to say a moment ago, I feel almost ashamed to offer the bill. It is such a flabby, washed-out little thing compared with the thing which has been suggested is necessary in America that in a way I hate to offer it. All it does is to provide a level of taxation preserving, I may say parenthetically, those deductions and allowances in existing law. It would allow a corporation to retain nearly 5 percent of its net profit. It would take in private income almost everything above the $10,000 level. I hate to bring the sad news to Senators. I may never smile again after I tell Senators that it would take $2,600 of taxes out of the salary of each Senator. Senators are now paying income taxes. If any Senator thinks that my proposal is too God-awful for words, and that it would be an assault upon the American form of government to take $2,600 out of his salary, if he thinks that is too great a sacrifice to make to preserve America, I will withdraw the bill.

It has been suggested that the rich may suffer greatly. Had I been disposed to make a long argument, I could have read to the Senate some figures on the incomes of twenty-nine and a half million American families. About 98 percent of them would not be touched by the bill.

Mr. President, I shall not waste my time wailing over the miseries of 1 percent of the vulgar rich in America. They can somehow take care of themselves. If we tax them on their incomes during war and take all but $10,000, I hope Mr. Morgan can get along. I use him as an illustration. I do not pick him out as a personal devil, or anything like that, or single him out as a rich man. If we were to take all but $10,000 or $12,000 of his income, I feel certain that Mr. Morgan has enough assets tucked away to live fairly well for a year or so while the boys are out in the trenches.

If anyone disagrees with that conclusion, and will assure me that Mr. Morgan is "busted" and could not possibly live through a few months of adversity, then I shall ask him why he voted against the increase in the W. P. A. allowance for poor devils getting 50 "bucks" a month, who break bread with beggars and sleep in the brush. Millions of them have no place to turn—no place to lay their heads. So I am not going to worry about Pierpont Morgan or any of the other gentlemen who might be touched by the higher income brackets.

The amendment would take 93 percent in the higher brackets, and I think that is a very modest amount when the country is in the throes of a great and bloody war.

I hope—and I know I am expressing the hope that is in the heart of every man—that we will not get into war, because I think that would destroy the Republic. The impact of debt alone would destroy us. If we are going to spend $200,000,000,000 in preparation, as has been suggested here—and it might lead to that over a long period of years—obviously we never in God's world could hope to preserve intact the thing we call the United States of America if we ever got into war.

There is one final thing which has, I think, made the veterans very anxious to have this done. They knew that if we ever attempted to pay for another war with debt instead of paying for it out of the income of the country as we fought the war, we would merely balloon up the present debt level to a point where it would be intolerable, and in itself would destroy the Republic. Second, it would not be possible to pay a dollar of pensions to veterans of the World War, let alone veterans of the new war; and I am not so certain how long we are going to be able to carry the present debt. I agree with my friend from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] about that. I frequently am in disagreement with him, but he has been very realistic about the tax situation. I think the American people are not going to pull in the belt one or two notches. They are going to get hold of one end of the belt and start pulling and never let the little pin fall into the slot. The point where you let the little belt buckle finally come to a hole is past in our time. No man in this Chamber will live long enough to see the end of the spending splurge we are on now. So, knowing that, if we are realistic enough to know it, we might as well get ready to make all the levy we can on the net incomes of Americans.

We did not create this condition. God help us if we should get into war. There would not be anything left. We would first make a capital levy on the property of the country. We would finally do what New Zealand and Australia are planning to do. Mr. Menzies, the Prime Minister of Australia, said the other day, "We are going into this struggle, and we are going to fight it through, and we are going to win it through, if we take every dollar of property in Australia." Well, we may be in a war ourselves pretty soon. If some of the ardent folks in this country who scream for blood, and yearn to send their manly briskets against the bristling bayonets of the enemy, have their way, we shall be in war pretty soon, and then the proposals of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] and myself will look like child's play. It will take more than chicken feed to carry on that kind of a war. It will mean a totalitarian form of government, where the draft is simply a situation in which an officer walks in and says, "Brother, get out of your factory." "This is my factory. The fifth article of the Constitution of the United States says"—and about that time he would be called an "eighth" or "ninth" or "tenth columnist." We would have graduated from the "fifth columnist" class by that time. He would be up in the higher brackets of infamy.

"We want your factory." If you make the slightest demur, someone will call in a private and say, "This fellow does not like what we are doing here. Stick a bayonet in him, or take him somewhere and send him off into a corner. He is an alien enemy." "Oh, no; I was born in Pittsburgh." "The hell you were. It does not sound like it. You are an alien enemy. We have a fellow at the head of the Government like Hitler." That is what he will tell the boys running the show in this country, and he will not mince matters in doing it, either.

I understand that the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is going along; and my only quarrel with that proposal is that it is not high enough. I think he has been entirely too generous. The Senator from Texas has a feeling that perhaps this thing can ride along, and he is trying to give the taxpayers every break in the game. I think he has not kept up with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] and the rest of us here, and does not understand what is going on.

I do not like the social controls in these measures, but in the mutations of time they may be so mild that we will look back and say that the Senator from Texas was a standpatter; and God knows I absolve him from that crime now. I hope the conferees, when they get out there, will just look realistically at this matter, and know that this is what we will call tax bill No. 2. It does not become effective unless war breaks out, so no one need beat his or her breast in wild fear and agony if it should go on the statute books as a result of the action of the conferees. No one would be hurt, but the feelings of some of the boys would be hurt because, oh, ye gods; how they yearn and how they lust after the fleshpots of war profits.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LEE. Of course, I am in agreement with the Senator on his amendment; but there is one source of war profits that even the Senator's amendment will not touch. In the last World War the interest on the bonds which we sold to finance the war yielded, up to 1934, $12,000,000,000, which we paid in high interest rates, which was tax exempt, which even the Senator's amendment will not reach. I merely mention that; so that even after we adopt the Senator's amendment we still must deal with the other field of borrowing on a tax-exempt basis, and guaranteeing profits, and guaranteeing that the profiteer may keep them.

Mr. BONE. There is truth in what the Senator says. I am sympathetic with his amendment. I think we are going to have to ask ourselves how long we can keep floating bonds, even for the enormous preparation program that confronts us, and, beyond that, how we could possibly hope to float bonds to finance an actual war. I do not believe there is anyone in the Senate who has even seriously thought about what that would mean. Suppose we should try to unload a hundred billion dollars or two hundred billion dollars of bonds, in a long-drawn-out war, on the banks of America. Every one of us knows that it just could not be done; that is all. We would destroy all the banks. If bonds went off 10 percent now, it would wipe out the capital of most of the banks. If we attempted anything like that, the economic structure of America would not have to be pulled down; it would collapse of its own weight. Everyone in this body knows that. Everyone knows it.

Taxation is now a deadly necessity. As a matter of fact, something of the proposals in this amendment ought to be clamped on now. We should raise as much as we could in the way of revenue out of current earnings of the country, and perhaps underwrite some of the bonds that the Senator from Oklahoma proposes in his suggestion. None of these things are weird and bizarre. They are going to be deadly necessities in case of war.

So I am going again to express the hope that the committee will seriously consider this matter, and put on one of these amendments. I certainly hope it will be Senate bill 1885.

If, however, they think this thing is too drastic, they had better adopt the proposal of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] as a less drastic alternative. At least the presence of either of these proposals on the statute books of this country would do no harm, and I am inclined to think it would have a very salutary influence.

Mr. BARKLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want the Senator from Washington to take his seat under a misapprehension. I do not think it feasible to accept the two amendments, as I suggested, because of the peculiar situation. I understand it would cost $2,100 to engross and send to conference both of these bills, the Connally bill and the Bone bill, which are very long. So I think it better that the question of the adoption of the substitute be put, and the Senate be allowed to decide which it will take, the Bone amendment or the proposed substitute. I hope it will not take either one.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I should like to say, then, that, in view of the fact that the bill of the Senator from Texas covers much lower levels of taxation, particularly in the higher brackets, and somewhat higher levels in the lower brackets, and because it does not approach this problem and absorb the amount of net revenue which I think should be absorbed, if there is any inflation and ballooning of prices and taking advantage of the margins of profit which are allowable under the bill, I would, of course, object to the bill of the Senator from Texas. I am sure he will understand that I only object to the levels. I wish to say that I have no quarrel with any Senator who agrees with the levels presented.

Fifty Senators put their names on the bill I introduced with the idea of having it considered. Some columnists—and the country would be desolated without columnists—said that Senators had not read the bill. I know several Senators have read the bill of the Senator from Texas. We have here a revenue measure of 158 pages in fine type. Aside from the Senators who actually worked on it in the Committee on Finance, if there is a Senator in this body who will now rise and tell me that he has read the bill, I will sit down and not utter another word. Will one Senator in the whole body rise and tell me he has read the revenue bill of 1939, except the Senators who worked on it in the Finance Committee? And they did work.

Of course, the columnists read everything. [Laughter.] The day this bill was introduced, even Dorothy Thompson, who apparently is the best-informed person in the United States, stated that the bill did not allow an exemption for the payment of taxes to a State or its political subdivisions, and when the attention of all the country was drawn to section 23 of the bill, which made that very provision, were any of those folks, these publicists, who guide the country in all the glory of their transcendent genius, gallant enough, courageous enough, and forthright enough to admit they fibbed a little about the bill? Oh, no. The next afternoon out came a blast again, and when it was pointed out that they were completely in error, did they admit it? Oh, no.

The United States News, David Lawrence's paper, had the courage to come out and say that a number of these columnists had made an error and had misinformed the country, but I have not noticed that one of the columnists has admitted he was dead wrong.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars, who filed 4,000,000 petitions asking that this country be kept out of war, and asking for the passage of this bill, for reasons which were cogent with them, their leaders having read the bill and having satisfied the veterans that these high tax levels were desirable, wanted the bill passed. Certainly the veterans of this country, who are now the victims of the last war, not only have a right to express an opinion, but their opinion should weigh heavily.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no desire to take the time of the Senate, but inasmuch as the amendment, which really is in the form of a bill—it is a complete tax bill within itself——

Mr. BONE. Yes; it would take the place of all other forms of Federal taxation, and would automatically end when the war ends.

Mr. BARKLEY. It applies to income taxes as well as corporation taxes and all other taxes. It is a bill which contains 183 pages. It has not been read to the Senate, and therefore I wish to make a very brief statement, not an argument, but a brief statement as to what it contains.

The individual normal tax is 6 percent, instead of the rate of the present law, while the personal exemptions are $1,000 and $500, respectively, for married and single persons, with a credit of $100 for each dependent, instead of the present $400.

No earned-income credit is allowed. The individual surtax provision contains five brackets, the first of which embraces that portion of the surtax on net income in excess of $3,000 and not in excess of $5,000. The last bracket embraces the portion in excess of $20,000. The rate applicable to the first bracket is 10 percent and to the last bracket 93 percent.

Beginning with a net income of $40,000, the bill would take 74 percent, and the rates are increased so that in the case of a million-dollar income the bill would take 98 percent of the income.

The general corporate income taxes are based on net income, and the rates are graduated in accordance with the relation of the adjusted declaration of declared value of the capital stock of corporations, and the net income based upon the declaration of value for 1934.

Mr. BONE. That adjusted declared value was adopted in 1934 and has been carried in the subsequent law. I understand it is the basis of our present taxing law.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Treasury informs me that the adjusted declaration values as of 1934 for the purposes of capital-stock tax vary from the book value to the market value as high as 84 percent, so that on a basis of declared value for capital-stock tax purposes in 1934 there would be many corporations in the country which would have 84 percent less than their actual value; that is, their book value or their present market value. So that, while the bill provides that all above 60 percent included in the declared value as of 1934 is taken in the tax, in cases where the declared value of 1934 represents a value much less than the present value, the result would be that probably all above 3 percent would be taken by the Government.

Life-insurance companies, and mutual-insurance companies other than life-insurance companies, are taxed 95 percent on their net income under the bill.

A tax of $100 per share or any fraction thereof payable by the issuing corporation is imposed on stock issued as dividends. In other words, if a corporation makes a certain profit and desires to use the profits in the financing of its plant and does not pay it out in cash and in dividends but pays it in stock instead, an increased issue of stock representing the profit, the bill takes all of it; that is, it takes a hundred dollars a share or any fraction of a share. If the par value were a hundred dollars it would take all of it. If the par value of the shares were $10, it would still take a hundred dollars a share on the basis of the $10 value. So that it would take 10 times as much as the value of the stock issued in lieu of a dividend.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas about the various levels in Senate bill 1248. I do not know whether or not the Senator has changed the levels in the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is the Senator speaking of the total amount collected?

Mr. BONE. No; the various amounts which would be collected under the various levels of income which were taken from Senate bill 1248, which was the last bill the Senator introduced.

Mr. CONNALLY. It was House bill 5229.

Mr. BONE. No; that bill was introduced in the House, and it was a companion bill to the other bill. The first bill the Senator introduced was Senate bill 1248.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not remember the number.

Mr. BONE. That was introduced in 1937, the first session, on February 1.

Mr. CONNALLY. That was based on a different proposition. That was based on undistributed dividends. This bill has been changed to integrate it into the regular tax system, which succeeded the undistributed profits tax.

Mr. BARKLEY. The schedule of general corporate income tax is as follows:

On any net profit not over 2 percent of the adjusted declared value of capital stock as of 1934, the tax would be 15 percent.

Over 2 percent and not over 6 percent of the adjusted declared value of capital stock the tax would be 25 percent.

Over 6 percent of the adjusted declared value of capital stock the tax is 100 percent.

In other words, the bill taxes at the rate of 15 percent on profits up to 2 percent on the adjusted declared value, and then it taxes the profits above 2 percent and not above 6 percent at the rate of 25 percent, and then on everything over 6 percent of the adjusted declared value of capital stock it takes 100 percent of all there is above 6 percent.

So under the bill if a tax of 15 percent is levied on the profit up to 2 percent, and 25 percent on the profit between 2 and 6 percent, and then 100 percent tax on all profit above 6 percent, the actual tax might amount to as much as 85 percent or 90 percent.

I mention that simply in order that the Senate may know on what it is voting.

I have here a letter to the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee from the Secretary of War, to whom the bill was referred for comment and report. I shall not read the letter. It calls attention to the fact that under the National Defense Act they are required not only to coordinate the military but the economic situation in the country in order to bring about the best possible national defense, and they comment on the fact that there is a point beyond which even in time of war we cannot go and expect to raise any revenue.

I ask that the letter from the present Secretary of War, commenting on the bill, be printed at this point in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 5, 1939.

Hon. PAT HARRISON,
Chairman, Committee on Finance, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR HARRISON: Careful consideration has been given to the bill, S. 1885, "To tax the profits out of war by steeply graduated income and other taxes in order to provide for effective national defense, to promote peace, to encourage actual neutrality, to discourage war profiteering, to distribute the burdens of war, to keep democracy alive, and for other purposes," which you transmitted to the War Department under date of March 22, 1939, with a request for information and the views of the Department relative thereto.

The effect of the proposed legislation will be to enact a new revenue law to become operative immediately upon a declaration of war.

While it is outside the scope of War Department activities to determine the manner in which war necessities shall be financed, the Department is charged by law with the preparation in peace of plans for the mobilization of the economic and industrial resources of the country essential to wartime needs. These plans, after many years of intensive effort, have reached an advanced stage. They are based on the principle that the cooperation of all elements of the population is necessary and will be had in carrying out the defense program. In preparing these plans it has been considered essential to avoid all experimental and uncertain methods and proposals in favor of those the technique of which is well understood by the industries and business interests of the country. Only in this way is it considered possible to avoid confusion and disruption of economic processes, especially in the early days of an emergency, when national efficiency is of major importance.

In the opinion of the War Department, the proposed legislation will endanger the operation of plans prepared for national defense in a most critical period. The operation of this legislation may well result in the disruption of the cooperative spirit upon which the execution of the procurement plans depends and result in the liquidation of securities of industrial concerns in a period when they should be operating at maximum efficiency.

The War Department, while in complete sympathy with the desire to equalize the burdens of war and to prevent profiteering, believes, and has at various times in the past recommended, that the subject of war finance and taxation be made the subject of a deliberate and careful study in peace by the Treasury Department. It is believed that as a result of such a study revenue legislation may be drafted in peace in such a manner as to avoid endangering the general defense plans. Legislation so drafted could then be kept continually revised ready for presentation for legislative action by Congress when the emergency so required.

As an aid in developing governmental policies effective in support of plans for national defense, the War Department recently requested the Brookings Institution to undertake a comprehensive study on the economics of price control in war in its relationship to the efficient conduct of the war, the prevention of profiteering and inflation, and the equalization of the burdens of war. This study is now being actively pursued but will not be completed for several months. It will suggest legislation which will serve as the basis of recommendations to Congress with respect to a sound economic preparedness program. When the results of this study are available to the War Department it will be in a much better position than at present to assist in developing constructive legislation relating to the subject under consideration.

The War Department is of the opinion that the bill S. 1885 would be detrimental to the interest of national defense and recommends that it be not enacted into law.

This report was submitted to the Bureau of the Budget, which advised that there would be no objection by that office to its submission to your committee, it being understood that no commitment would thereby be made with respect to the relationship of the proposed legislation to the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY H. WOODRING,
Secretary of War.

Mr. BARKLEY. I also have a letter from the Secretary of the Navy with respect to this proposal, which takes the same position as that taken by the Secretary of War. I shall not read it, but ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 7, 1939.

The CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON FINANCE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The bill S. 1885, "To tax the profits out of war by steeply graduated income and other taxes in order to provide for effective national defense, to promote peace, to encourage actual neutrality, to discourage war profiteering, to distribute the burdens of war, to keep democracy alive, and for other purposes," was referred to the Navy Department by your committee with a request for a report thereon.

The bill S. 1885 proposes to impose upon the people and corporations, immediately upon declaration of war and until Congress shall declare the war emergency to be at an end, a system of steeply graduated taxes. The rates of income tax now prevailing on individuals are increased and exemptions decreased. The normal tax rate is increased from a minimum of 10 percent upon surtax net incomes between $3,000 and $5,000 to a maximum on incomes of over $20,000 of $9,880 on the first $20,000, and 93 percent on all surtax net incomes above $20,000.

The corporation taxes proposed run from 15 percent of such portion of net income as is in excess of 2 percent of capital-stock value to 100 percent of such portion of net income as is in excess of 6 percent of capital-stock value. Holding companies' net incomes would also be drastically taxed. A levy of 98 percent of their undistributed net income is proposed, and in no case would any such company be able to accumulate over $100,000 undistributed net income in any one year.

The least possible adverse effect that could be expected from such legislation as that proposed by the bill, S. 1885, would be a drastic change in the entire economic structure of the country at the very time when the least possible disturbance thereto is imperative.

Once war is upon us, the entire national economy must be geared and adjusted to its successful prosecution and earliest practicable termination. Incidentally, price-control measures will undoubtedly be installed upon inception of war. In fact, they are provided for in the industrial mobilization plan. They, in themselves, will tend to prevent undue accumulation of profits. This contemplated procedure should allay the fears of those who are concerned over profiteering and excess profits after war is upon us.

The Navy Department recommends against enactment of the bill S. 1885.

No commitment is made with respect to the relationship of the legislation proposed in the bill S. 1885 to the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM D. LEAHY, Acting.

Mr. BARKLEY. I also ask unanimous consent to have printed as part of my remarks a statement which has been prepared by the Treasury experts who are working with the Finance Committee in respect to this tax bill, which includes a paragraph or two from the report of the House Committee on Ways and Means on the pending bill, in which it states that they are giving consideration to the question of excess-profits taxes, and also to the question of war-profits taxes, with the view to bringing in a sound measure dealing with that subject at a very early date.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The proposed amendment relates to the general subject of taxation of war and excess profits. Because of the complicated structure of our economic and financial systems and because of the extremely high rates involved in such taxation, this field presents many extremely difficult and intricate problems. It is, of course, essential that individuals and corporations be prevented from unduly enriching themselves through rearmament or war. The problems of war and excess-profits taxation require detailed and intensive study before reasonably adequate and satisfactory solutions can be found. Recognizing the importance of these problems and the necessity for seeking adequate solutions, the report of the Committee on Ways and Means on the pending bill contains the following paragraph:

"During the executive sessions, there have been discussed proposals to provide special amortization for national-defense industries and to provide for the imposition of excess-profits taxes. These two measures—each in itself requiring a complicated and exhaustive legislative project—must be considered together. It is the desire of this committee, which is favorably reporting a bill which will enable a larger proportion of our citizens to participate in the responsibility of providing an adequate national defense than has ever been the case before, that there shall not be an opportunity for the creation of new war millionaires or the further substantial enrichment of already wealthy persons because of the rearmament program.

"Accordingly we have instructed our technical assistants and the appropriate Treasury officials to accelerate their work in these two fields so that bills will be prepared for submission not later than the opening of the next session of Congress, which if passed by the Congress may become retroactive and apply to income earned during the calendar year of 1940, or may become effective upon any other date which Congress, in the light of information it then possesses, may deem advisable."

This proposed amendment is substantially identical with legislation which was considered by a Subcommittee of the Finance Committee in 1936. With respect to that legislation the Treasury Department expressed its views in such detail and at such great length that it is impossible to review all of its recommendations at this time. Suffice it to say that many of the questions raised by the Department involved the underlying structure of this proposal (hearings before a Subcommittee of the Committee on Finance, United States Senate, 74th Cong., 3d sess., on H. R. 5529, pp. 17, 95, and 131 et seq.). For example, there may be doubts as to the wisdom of using as a base for the taxation of corporations the "adjusted declared value" of the corporation's capital stock. Also the deductions allowed are so restricted in scope as to perhaps be grossly unfair in the case of a tax having rates as high as 100 percent of the net income in excess of 6 percent of the adjusted declared value of capital stock in the case of corporations and as high as 99 percent of the surtax net income in excess of $20,000 in the case of individuals.

The proposed amendment was drafted at the time the Revenue Act of 1936 was being considered by the Congress. It is thus geared to a tax law long since out of date. Substantial technical revisions of the revenue structure have since been enacted, notably the Revenue Acts of 1938 and 1939. It is therefore necessary to devote considerable time and study to integrating the proposed amendment with the existing tax law in order to prevent the amendment from operating harshly or inequitably either against taxpayers or against the Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize that Senators who are interested in this legislation will probably feel that that is a sort of an evasive situation, where promises are made that the situation will be studied and a tax bill brought in. But I feel that we ought to keep in mind that we are not at war. We are not really writing a war-tax bill. No one wants any corporation or any individual in this country to reap profits out of war. I know of no sensible person who is not willing to go as far as it is possible to go in making property and profits amenable to a war situation as completely as men are made amenable to a war situation.

I think we ought to keep in mind that we are not at war; and if and when we do go to war, if we ever do—which I hope we will not do at any time—we will then be confronted with writing a war-tax bill in view of the conditions which exist in war. We are not now writing a war-tax bill. We are writing a bill designed to raise revenue at least in part to cover the expenses of preparing against war.

With all due respect to my dear friend, the Senator from Washington, in whose sincerity I have the utmost faith, and of whose ability I find myself frequently envious, his proposal that we shall write here a tax bill, which is really a substitute for the bill we are considering, a measure 183 pages in length, which has not been given any consideration by the tax-writing committees of the two Houses, calls upon one to be a little more credulous than I myself feel like being at this time.

I want these facts to go into the RECORD so that if this proposal should go into the pending bill and should go to conference, the conferees will have the benefit of the facts which I have set forth in considering whether the amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. BONE. I am sure the Senator does not want to have remain in the RECORD a statement that my amendment is a substitute for the pending bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, in the sense that it is a complete tax bill, and it is inconsistent with the bill we are now considering.

Mr. BONE. It is not inconsistent with the bill, when we consider it proposes taxation to be put into effect in time of war.

Mr. BARKLEY. Both of these bills cannot be in effect at the same time.

Mr. BONE. Oh, yes; they can.

Mr. BARKLEY. The rates of income taxes and corporation taxes are entirely different.

Mr. BONE. Let me put it this way. They cannot, of course, be in effect at the same time; but if my amendment should be adopted, this is what would happen: The measure would simply be on our statute books in inoperative form. The amendment provides that the part of the bill represented by my amendment would remain inoperative except upon the declaration of war. Then it would supersede all existing legislation, but it would automatically go off the books when war ended.

Now, as to the attitude of the War Department and the Navy Department, to which the Senator from Kentucky has referred. Let me tell the Senate something that is of interest, which at times has made me wonder about the War Department and the Navy Department.

Back in 1937 I had the temerity to introduce a bill which called upon the Navy Department immediately to expand our navy yards with sufficient ways, slips, and welding and cutting machinery to take care of the Vinson-Trammell program, with the amendments thereto up to that time. Had we done that—and it would have taken about $25,000,000—the Navy Department of the United States would have had in its possession right now facilities so complete that on 5 minutes' notice they could have laid down the keel of every big ship authorized up to the time the last authorization was made by Congress.

In that same bill I asked for the expansion of Government arsenals, to be equipped with new jigs, dies, tools, machine tools, and fixtures to take care of the then peacetime needs of the United States, and in addition to lay in a huge supply of jigs, dies, tools, and machine tools and fixtures of all kinds in such quantities that if an emergency came, under the direction of the President of the United States the machine tools could have been put into any private factory, so it would be completely tooled and ready to go to work as soon as the necessary adjustments could be made in the private plants.

Mr. President, I want the RECORD to show that statement because a distinguished Senator the other day asked me if I had voted for a certain naval bill. He knew better. I do not know what impelled him to ask that question. Had I been smart enough at the moment, he would never ask me another question in this body again. But he did not support my proposal. In the Naval Affairs Committee, as early as 1934, when the representatives of the Navy came here and said there was a crisis, I said, "All right; let us expand our navy yards; let us expand our arsenals; let us put in a huge supply of jigs, dies, and machine tools." I want to tie this to the Navy Department and the War Department, which are always writing reports and sending them here.

What do Senators think the Navy Department did in response to that suggestion? The Navy Department—the same Navy Department which is telling us now that we are in an awful fix—sent word that that idea was not in harmony with national defense, and that we had better wait and let private plants do it until a crisis came.

Mr. President, out with that sort of business. They would have this country in such a position that it could not adequately defend itself on short notice, and we could not defend ourselves when the crisis came.

I say that is a queer kind of patriotism. We could have had our own navy yards, which could do all the work, if the Navy Department had had the guts to say "yes." I have the letter of the Navy Department. The Department says, "No; we cannot interfere with private initiative; and when a crisis comes we will have private plants do the work." Today we have the deadly certainty of having private plants do it, under the conditions described by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] a moment ago. The private builders come before us and say, "We cannot do a good job because our profit motive is interfered with. We might soldier on the job unless we made 14 percent." The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] was present when this matter was amplified for us.

That is the condition we are encountering. It was not considered good practice to have a Government navy yard, and to have Government construction yards and slips; but under the theory advanced by the Navy Department, when we expand a private yard, Uncle Sam is to pay for all the expansion at the expense of the taxpayer, and Senators will vote for it. We have already voted for it. We are to pay for the expanded private facilities with Government money, and private plants will make the profit. If we are to follow that plan, why not have Uncle Sam own the plants?

Three or four years ago I stated in the Naval Affairs Committee that we were living in a troubled world, and that we might never see the end of it in our lifetime. Let us at least expand our navy yards and arsenals to take care of as much work as possible. They would be totally inadequate in a great crisis, but we should have them as a backlog of preparation. I am fed up with the idea of being told that there is something subtle or smoky in that sort of a suggestion, and that it is not a good, patriotic American doctrine. That is the reason why I object to the Navy Department and the War Department telling us what to do about taxation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Washington that the Committee on Finance asked the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy for reports on this bill, because under the law they are charged not only with coordinating the military and naval forces of the United States but also with some duty in connection with coordinating the economic condition of the country. In response to a letter from the chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], asking for their opinion on the bill which the Senator has offered as an amendment, the Departments wrote replies. I am sure the Senator will be fair enough to admit that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy have not barged in of their own volition and written a report on the bill. They were asked by the committee to do so.

Mr. BONE. I know; but they do many funny things.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington, and I ask that it be considered without reading in detail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will send his amendment to the desk. Without objection, the amendment will be considered without reading.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment, in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. CONNALLY, is to insert as an amendment the text of Senate bill 4141, to provide revenue and facilitate the regulation and control of the economic and industrial structure of the Nation, for the successful prosecution of war, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not enjoy a night session any more than does any other Senator. I am not responsible for this night session, and I regret the necessity for having it. I do not want to weary Senators by unduly delaying the Senate.

It is only through a sense of duty to the committee, which appointed the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], and myself as a subcommittee to draft the substitute which we have proposed, that I am emboldened to ask that it be substituted for the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

In 1936 we were appointed a subcommittee to draft a war-profits act. We have revised the measure two or three times, due to the change in our taxing system, because we wanted it to be harmonious and integrated into the existing system. So, at the present time, it represents about 6 months of studious work on the part of the subcommittee, in connection with the Joint Committee on Taxation and its experts, the Treasury Department, and other Government departments.

We have worked out a war-profits bill applicable only in time of war. The rates are very heavy, but not quite so severe as the rates in the amendment of the Senator from Washington. For instance, on a $1,000,000 net income, the amendment of the Senator from Washington would take more than $980,000. The amendment which we offer would take 88 percent rather than 98 percent.

In the case of a married person with no dependents the measure which we sponsor would take $40 instead of $60, as provided by the amendment of the Senator from Washington. The rates are more gradual under our measure, and yet they are very heavy. The Treasury estimates that on the basis of 1938 income data on individual incomes the rates carried in my proposed substitute would produce $7,866,000,000 a year. With respect to the tax on corporations, we were not able to make an estimate for 1938, because the data for 1938 were based on undistributed dividends, and we did not have the necessary experience to estimate what the rate would produce in the case of corporations; but under the terms of the amendment, which automatically would go into effect only in time of war, the revenue from individual incomes, on the basis of data for 1938, would be approximately $8,000,000,000.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] says that we are not in a war. No; we are not in a war, but when we get into a war we ought to have the tax structure already in operation prior to the declaration of war. When war comes we may not be able to pass a war-revenue bill for months after the war shall have begun, and the taxes would not be provided for unless we should make them retroactive, which would, of course, meet with much opposition and unfavorable reaction from the people.

Mr. President, this is a task which we did not seek. By order of the Finance Committee the subcommittee spent literally months in hearings, and in detailed, laborious efforts, as will be testified to by all the members of the subcommittee.

The only kind of a bill to which we could tie this measure is a revenue bill coming over from the House of Representatives. We could not bring it up in the Senate at will and pass it through this body. We should have to wait until the House sent us a revenue bill. Whenever it is suggested that we attach it to a revenue bill, some Senator rises and says, "Let us do it next year, next month, or next fall."

The subcommittee has discharged its duty. We are depositing the bill on the front porch of the Senate. If the Senate does not want it, it is perfectly all right with the subcommittee. The Finance Committee ought to want such a bill adopted. The Finance Committee examined it, went over the work of the subcommittee, and approved the measure. We ought to have the support of the Finance Committee, although judging by some of the votes earlier in the day it seems that such support is rather unpopular.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator tell us what the exemption is for a single man?

Mr. CONNALLY. I believe the exemption for a single man is $800, and for a married man $1,500.

Mr. TYDINGS. A married man without children?

Mr. CONNALLY. A married man without children has an exemption of $1,500, or perhaps $1,600, and a single man has an exemption of $800. I have the report before me in detail. I have not gone through the report for some time.

Mr. President, let me recite some of the rates briefly.

On an income of $2,000 a married person with no dependents would pay $40. On an income of $2,500 he would pay $90. On an income of $3,000 he would pay $164. On an income of $3,500 he would pay $244; on an income of $4,000 he would pay $336; on an income of $4,500 he would pay $431; and on an income of $5,000 he would pay $538.

Is that a burdensome tax? On an income of $10,000 a married person with no dependents would pay $1,354. The normal individual income-tax rate, after the allowance of deductions and things of that kind, is 10 percent. Then surtaxes are added gradually, so as not to be confiscatory.

The trouble with the amendment of the Senator from Washington is that we could not make war on it. We could not conduct a war on it, because it is so destructive of income that I very much fear it would hamper the waging of the war. We might be able to wage the war, yet we want to take all the profit that we can, over and above a reasonable return, from every individual and every corporation in the land, whether engaged in the manufacture of war materials or in any other activity.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understood the Senator's explanation of the amendment, he has explained the individual income-tax provisions and the amount of gross revenues they would raise, but, as I understood his explanation, there was no estimate of what the corporation tax would raise.

Mr. CONNALLY. There is a corporation tax, but we were not able to estimate what it would raise, because when we originally drew it, it was based upon the law we had about taxing undistributed profits which we later repealed. So, since we repealed it, we have changed this amendment to fit in with the present system, but we did not get an estimate; but I can tell the Senator what the tax on corporations would be.

In this amendment we have also an excess-profits tax. The normal tax on corporations, the flat tax, is 22 percent. In addition to that, there is an excess-profits tax. The excess-profits tax is based upon two alternative systems; either upon the basis of the invested capital or upon the Canadian system, which represents a 4-year pre-war average. They take the average profits for 4 years before the war and permit a return of 5 percent, I believe it is, and then take 50 percent of all above that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is there any exemption for corporations—three or four thousand dollars?

Mr. CONNALLY. I think there is an exemption of $3,000.

(a) The excess-profits credit shall consist in the case of a domestic corporation of (1) a specific exemption of $3,000 or (2) 5 percent of the invested capital for the taxable year, whichever is the greater. * * *

(b) In the case of a return made for a fractional part of a year, the specific exemption of $3,000 shall be reduced—

And so forth and so forth.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one additional question?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. Am I to understand that the tax of 22 percent on corporations is the tax that would be laid after a 5-percent exemption was taken out?

Mr. CONNALLY. No. I will say to the Senator that that is the excess-profits tax.

Mr. TYDINGS. Twenty-two percent is the flat corporation tax?

Mr. CONNALLY. The flat corporation tax, just such as is paid now.

Mr. TYDINGS. But as to excess profits, there would be 5 percent of the income set aside first, before the excess-profits tax would apply?

Mr. CONNALLY. Or $3,000, whichever is the greater.

Here are the rate schedules:

In the case of corporations, the excess-profits taxes are as follows:

Ten percent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credit—

That credit is determined as I stated to the Senator a moment ago; the credit is $3,000—and not in excess of 10 percent of the invested capital for the taxable year.

Twenty percent of the amount of the net income in excess of 10 percent, but not in excess of 15 percent of the invested capital.

Thirty percent of the amount of the net income in excess of 15 percent, but not in excess of 20 percent of the invested capital.

Forty percent of the amount of the net income in excess of 20 percent, but not in excess of 25 percent of the invested capital.

And then it goes on up to 60 percent in the higher brackets.

Mr. President, those are the bare outlines of this amendment. It has been very carefully drawn by the drafting service, by the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, has the Senator from Texas an estimate of the total revenue the amendment will bring?

Mr. CONNALLY. I explained a moment ago that on the basis of the 1938 income returns we would get almost $8,000,000,000 out of the individual income-tax return. I am sorry to say that we have not the estimates on corporations.

Mr. BYRD. That amendment would take the place of the bill which is before us?

Mr. CONNALLY. If this amendment is adopted, the moment war is declared it comes into effect and displaces all other tax bills.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does that include excise taxes?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; we have restricted it to these two titles—incomes and corporations.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then I take it that the existing excise taxes which were on the books at the time war was declared would remain.

Mr. CONNALLY. They would continue.

Mr. TYDINGS. But all income taxes would be eliminated, and this measure would be substituted?

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senator estimates that we will get $8,000,000,000 for the present individual income taxes?

Mr. CONNALLY. On the basis of 1938 income.

Mr. BYRD. That does not include corporations?

Mr. CONNALLY. That does not include corporations. So I believe this would go a long way toward balancing the Budget, which we have long sought, but have not found, I will say to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I should like the Senator to explain the provision on page 312. As I understand, that would give the President the right to fix prices on every article of every description, even down to the farmer's land. He could determine what the farmer's land was worth, what it should rent for and sell for.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, in that connection, I was going to ask the Senator from Texas if he would strike from his amendment those controls which are in the back, titles II and III. They are not necessarily vital to the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am entirely willing to strike out those titles, if it is agreeable to the Senator from Washington, because the only reason why they are in the amendment is that that is all that was left of the Senator's bill. We left those things in, but we did revise the tax feature, because the tax features of the bill were referred to the Finance Committee. These other provisions were in the bill as it came from the Committee on Military Affairs; so we left them as they were, but we did revise the tax features. I am quite content to eliminate those titles.

Mr. BONE. I did not mean to imply that I was necessarily willing to accept the Senator's amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no.

Mr. BONE. I certainly would not vote against it if there was not something better offered. I merely feel that those so-called business and social controls might well be questioned. They are in very graphic and clear form.

They are almost the very heart of the mobilization plan. We had them in the first plan—No. 5529, I believe it was—that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] referred to, and they were stricken out in the last two or three drafts of this bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Senator has made a very clear explanation, I think, of the amendment as to taxes. I notice, just in glancing at the amendment, that it contains a number of powers of a very far-reaching nature. We should be, of course, taking some chances on voting for this amendment with the taxes in it, because many of us have not had a chance to study it; but I think the Senator has pretty well explained what is in it. But with all the other powers in the amendment in addition to the taxes, no matter how much one might be in favor of the tax provisions of it, we would be writing a pretty big blank check to vote for those powers.

I should much prefer to have the amendment submitted without these powers granted to the President.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that I indicated just a moment ago that so far as the Senator from Texas is concerned I am perfectly willing to eliminate titles II and III. We did not revise those titles because they came to us from the Military Affairs Committee. We did revise the provisions relating to taxation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would the Senator eliminate them?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am eliminating them now.

Mr. BYRD. I would support, I think, the balance of the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. If I am going to abandon them to get the Senator's support, I do not want him to say "I think I will support it." I want to know whether he will or not.

Mr. BYRD. I could not support titles II and III.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is what I am going to strike out.

Mr. BYRD. Under title III the President would have the right to fix the price of all farming land.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask leave to eliminate the language from page 309, line 3, down to page 328, line 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas modifies his amendment, as indicated.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, where does the modification begin, on what page?

Mr. CONNALLY. On page 309. It takes out all of titles II and III.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas whether the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], whose name was mentioned in connection with the amendment, agrees to the elimination of titles II and III.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have not consulted the Senator from Delaware, who is closer to the Senator from Connecticut now than to the Senator from Texas, and I think, as a matter of convenience, the Senator from Connecticut should privately approach the Senator from Delaware and find out, rather than clutter up the RECORD with unnecessary interrogatories. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I wish to say to the Senator from Connecticut that I agree to the elimination.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] was the Senator I had in mind at the moment.

Mr. President, I do not desire to burden the Senate longer, but I shall insist that the Senate vote on the amendment. We have a fine amendment, which has been worked out with great care. It does carry heavy rates, but they are applicable only in time of war. I am tired hearing Senators beat their breasts and go about over the country and talk over the radio about "no millionaires shall be made out of this war," then when we offer a measure that will prevent millionaires being made out of the war, they want to postpone it to some other time.

Mr. President, before I take my seat I wish to say that, while I am not enjoying this night session, I believe it is the duty of the Congress to stay right here in Washington and pass a general tax bill as soon as the pending bill is out of the way. The people of the United States are willing now—I do not know how long they are going to remain willing, but they are willing now—to pay heavy, increased taxes, and they must know, and it is our duty to tell them, that with all of this preparedness, all these clouds of planes, and all these majestic battleships we are going to provide, and all of the tanks and mechanization, much money must be paid out. It is going to cost the people money, and if they want these things, we should take steps to pay for them, not provide that our grandchildren shall pay for them, but we should pay for them ourselves.

As soon as this temporary tax bill is out of the way I think we should reconvene and go to work on a general overhauling of the tax laws. We have to do it if we are to respond to our duty to our country, to ourselves, and to the people.

We all know we have to raise taxes whether we have a war or whether we do not. Why do we not do it? Some want to wait until after the election, I suppose. Neither party is going to make any political profit out of this war or out of this tax business. The people of the United States are not going to be deluded by any kind of peanut politics this good year, 1940. They want this program of preparedness carried out. They have to pay for it, and I am ready to vote to put it on them.

Mr. ASHURST. They are willing to pay for it.

Mr. CONNALLY. They are willing to pay for it. How long they will be willing I am not so sure. [Laughter.] They will pay now, and the time to pass the bill is when they want it. I receive telegrams and am called over the telephone, the messages being "I want to pay. I will pay 25 percent of my income." Well, will they be willing next January to pay 25 percent of their income? The time to pass a tax bill is right now.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question for information with reference to the bill. The bill or amendment of the Senator from Texas would go into effect when Congress finds a state of war to exist?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. When it would go into effect would it take the place of existing tax law, or would it be added to that?

Mr. CONNALLY. It would take the place of existing tax laws as to the features which are mentioned. It would not disturb the excise taxes, but it would take the place of the individual income tax and the corporation tax.

Mr. ADAMS. I asked the question because there were some parts of the bill I had not read. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. I am certainly surprised to know that the Senator has not read the bill. I have heard him discuss many bills on the floor, but I never detected before that he had not read them.

Mr. President, I do not want Senators to vote against the amendment merely because they desire to put it off. If the House of Representatives does not want to take it they do not have to, but it is our duty to add this amendment to the bill. The House will not originate one. The only opportunity we have of imposing a war-profits tax is by lying in wait, as it were, for some tax bill to come over from the House, and then tying a war-profits bill onto it.

We now have that opportunity. This is not a wild bill, this is not an anarchistic bill, this is not an alien bill, this is not a "fifth column" bill. We can make war under this bill, and yet we take from the individual taxpayers nearly $8,000,000,000, and several more billions from the corporations. We will make the war self-sustaining so far as possible, and we will help to pay some of the tax-exempt bonds about which the Senator from Oklahoma is talking.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Did I understand the Senator to indicate in the last statement he made that the total revenue the bill would exact would be about $15,000,000,000?

Mr. CONNALLY. No.

Mr. PEPPER. What is the revenue to be exacted?

Mr. CONNALLY. I said that on the basis of 1938 income-tax returns the yield from individual incomes would be nearly $8,000,000,000. We have not estimates as to the corporations, because in 1938 the corporations were taxed on the basis of the undistributed dividends, and we are not under that system now, and we have not estimates as to the corporations; but the Senator I am sure will easily perceive that if we collect $8,000,000,000 from individuals there will be a very sizable sum from corporations.

Mr. PEPPER. Would excise taxes also be added?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; they would not be disturbed. We do not disturb the excise taxes in this bill or other bills, but this merely takes the place of individual income taxes and corporation taxes. We thought that when we got all the corporations and all the individuals, we were getting the people who were more apt to have war profits—excess profits.

There will not be a great deal of return from the taxes on cigarettes and soda water and moving pictures and things of that kind, but if we want to get the war profits, we can get them in this bill in a logical, reasonable way. The Treasury says it will work. The Treasury says it can administer it. The Treasury says it is not destructive. It has had the painstaking care and labor of the subcommittee for about 6 months, every day, with the experts of the Joint Committee on Taxation, of the Treasury, and the legislative counsel.

If anyone can synthetize any better bill than this let him bring it in. It does not destroy incomes. It lets them live. It milks the old cow right down to the point of exhaustion, but it does not quite exhaust her, because we want some milk tomorrow. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment in lieu of the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I shall not take long, but I think it appropriate to explain the difference between the two bills in the form of amendments now under discussion and the bill which is now on the Senate Calendar to draft capital in case of war.

These amendments will recover profits resulting from commerce and industry, but during the World War some of the greatest profits were made in the field of finance. Neither of these amendments will touch the profits in the field of finance. For instance, if we adopt one of them—and I hope we will—then the Treasury will have to borrow $4,000,000,000 in order to set our program of national defense in motion. When it borrows that money it guarantees exemption.

In the World War when we borrowed money, because of inflation we borrowed 50-cent dollars. Inflation always accompanies war. Deflation always follows war. When we paid those bonds back we paid them back with 150-cent dollars. We borrowed 50-cent dollars and paid back 150-cent dollars, and there was a tremendous profit or unearned increment made on those tax-exempt bonds.

If we are to cover the field of profiteering in war, we must have a system of forced loans which are not tax exempt, so that each person must buy in proportion to his ability, and not on the basis of pressure of patriotism or profit.

I wish to make plain at this time, that even though we adopt one of these amendments we will not take all the profits out of war, and we will not have a financing system that will yield money as we need it, because no nation has ever been able to pay for a war as it fights the war.

Therefore we must borrow money, and if we borrow under the old system of tax exemption, and Government bonds are bought because of patriotism rather than on the basis of ability, we still are not reaching the subject of profiteering.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Does either one of these amendments impose a higher rate of tax upon income derived from war industries than upon income derived from ordinary industrial activities? I mean is there any higher tax upon income derived from war activities than upon income derived from ordinary peacetime activities?

Mr. LEE. No. They cannot be separated. But measures apply only upon a declaration of war, or war conditions as determined by Congress. As I understand the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], it attempts to leave a margin of normal profit. As I understand the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], to which I am a signatory, it leaves a much less margin of profit.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], in his kindness and wisdom, has requested that I read briefly the concluding paragraph of my amendment, which is as follows:

Except as otherwise provided herein, the provisions of this act shall become operative and in full force and effect immediately upon the declaration by Congress that a state of war exists between the United States and any foreign government and that the existence of such state of war creates grave national emergency; and such provisions shall remain in full force and effect for the duration of such war and thereafter until the Congress shall declare the emergency created by such war to be at an end.

Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be referred to in the proceedings and in the conference report, if any, as Senate bill 4141. I do that in order to save the expense of printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will advise the Senator from Texas that the amendment can be referred to by number in the Senate Journal and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but if it goes back to the House it will have to go back as part of the House bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. As far as it is possible to do so, I ask that it be referred to as Senate bill 4141, because I do not want to have it printed two or three different times.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senate that substantially the same provision concerning the application of Senate bill 1885 and its termination date is contained in the language of the bill or amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. That is, it becomes operative in time of war.

I wish to make one final suggestion. I want Senators to understand that Senate bill 1885, which I have been discussing, is not my work. The bill originated from the Senate Munitions Committee and was prepared after months of careful study by the best tax experts the committee had at its command. It is not a haphazard piece of work or a piece of botch work. It has been given, I think, the consideration of the ablest tax experts that the Senate committee could employ for that purpose.

In connection with the bill presented by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], if I shall vote against it I want the Senator to understand that I am not objecting to it except upon this basis, that I think the tax levels contained in his bill are not high enough. I want more drastic tax levels and, of course, I should like to see Senate bill 1885 adopted. For that reason, if I shall elect to vote against the bill of the Senator from Texas, I want him to know why I do so.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, the presentations made by the able Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the able Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], in support of this legislation leaves room for nothing more to be said. I only wish to say that I shall find it not at all to my liking to vote against the amendment which is offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], but, since it will be the first one offered and voted on, and since I much prefer the more stringent rates provided in the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington, I shall have to vote "nay" on the next vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington, as amended.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HATCH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HATCH. Simply because there is great confusion in the Chamber some Senators are not quite sure as to what is being voted on. Will the Chair state what we are now voting on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now to be voted on is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] as amended by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the amendment of the Senator from Texas being in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Washington. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHANDLER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER]. I am not informed how the Senator from Virginia would vote. I am informed that the Senator from North Dakota would vote "yea," and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] are necessarily detained.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY].

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN] has a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART]. If present, the Senator from Oregon would vote "nay."

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] is absent on official duties.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] is absent on account of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—51

Andrews	Downey	La Follette	Schwartz
Ashurst	Ellender	Lee	Schwellenbach

So Mr. BONE's amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, this afternoon, after some discussion with the chairman of the Finance Committee and with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], who is handling one phase of the bill with respect to which there was an interesting discussion earlier in the day, counsel for the Treasury Department, who was present, prepared language which covers all the cases mentioned by the Senators who had an interest in the discussion.

Mr. President, the objective sought to be achieved is to remove the possibility of retroactive liability from State officers and employees who were paid in part from Federal funds for the years 1936, 1937, and 1938. The matter has been fully canvassed. Until the Supreme Court decision of 1939, these employees were not even considered taxable. In order to do equity in the case, irrespective of what the legal claim may have been, and in order that these employees may not be unjustly subjected to taxation, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

Section 205 of the Public Salary Tax Act of 1939 is amended by inserting "(a)" after "205" and by adding thereto a new paragraph to read as follows:

"(d) The amount of income tax shall be assessed or collected, after the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1940, which is attributable to compensation received for any taxable year beginning prior to January 1, 1939, for personal service as an officer or employee of any State, or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of any of the foregoing, if, but for the provisions of paragraph (a), assessment or collection of such tax would be prohibited by the provisions of this title."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, does the Senator's amendment deal only with punitive taxes, or is it along the same line as the previous amendment? Is it different from the amendment which the Senator offered earlier in the day?

Mr. DANAHER. Yes; let me say to the Senator from Mississippi that the Treasury counsel has redrafted, in the language desired by the Treasury Department—if an amendment of this type were to be adopted—identically the language needed to cover the situation and to include all the cases mentioned, such as those mentioned by the Senator from Wyoming, the Senator from Arkansas, and others. Consequently, this language is now deemed in proper form by the Treasury counsel.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to its going to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. BARKLEY, and other Senators called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ASHURST (when Mr. HAYDEN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAYDEN] is unavoidably detained. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I am informed that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], with whom I am paired, would vote "yea" if present. Therefore, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Also, I am informed that the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. LUCAS (when Mr. SLATTERY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SLATTERY] is unavoidably detained from the Senate because of illness in his family. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR (when Mr. STEWART's name was called). My colleague [Mr. STEWART] is detained on very necessary public business. If he were present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McNARY. The senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN] are necessarily absent. If present, those Senators would vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] are necessarily absent. If present, they would vote "yea."

Mr. ELLENDER. My colleague [Mr. OVERTON] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the following Senators would vote "yea" if present:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], who is absent on official duties;

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], who is necessarily absent; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent because of illness in his family.

The result was announced—yeas 75, nays 5, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to change the section numbers and make changes in cross-references in the bill, and that in printing the Senate engrossed amendments the so-called Connally amendment be printed in roman type; also, that the bill be printed with the Senate amendments numbered, except the so-called Connally amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. HARRISON, Mr. KING, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and Mr. CAPPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, during these trying days of international chaos, we in America are grateful that we are at peace. Our economy, however, is not at peace. We shattered the peace of our economy the very day we decided that we needed to arm for defense, and Hitler's victories made this more necessary.

Our economy is in a transitional stage—the bill for our armaments is not as high as in wartime, but it is higher than it has ever been in peacetime. We can anticipate today that 6 months from now we will begin to find out how defense costs will affect our standards of living and our national economy.

We know that the cost of defense in a mad, shrinking world, is tremendous. We know that those costs are largely an unproductive drain on the national economy. We know that paying these costs will mean sacrifices wrung from us in money and tears and sweat.

It is well for us to be prepared for these sacrifices now. It is well for us to realize that our public debt on April 18, just 21 days before the beginning of the blitzkrieg in western Europe, was $42,598,000,000. Since then we have whipped up our obligations to a record high of better than $45,000,000,000.

Mr. President, if we were to raise our defense fund in only one State—my own State of Wisconsin—it would cost every man, woman, and child, a thousand dollars. We must realize that today in raising such a huge fund we are writing a mighty big mortgage on our standard of living. You may be certain our economic life up ahead will not be all "beer and skittles."

It serves no purpose now to wrangle over past defense expenditures. It serves no purpose now to speak of a "sixth column" found in incompetent government. The 2,500-page report of the majority and minority members of the House Appropriations Committee on this score is very enlightening reading, and it gives us the tip-off as to what the future should not be.

Our past spending has given us several costly lessons.

First. Past spending has lowered our standards of living and the cumulative peak has not yet been reached.

Second. Temporary gains made through Government spending are temporary in their invigorating effects on our economy—mere "shots in the arm."

Third. Our present spending will lower our standard of living still further.

Fourth. Careful, intelligent spending will insure that we get our money's worth and will lessen the future economic impact of paying the bill. That means that we cannot pay "ducks and drakes" with defense money.

Fifth. The maximum borrowing capacity of the Government must be available for defense financing. This means that all unnecessary spending in other branches of Government must cease.

Sixth. We must stop the trend away from a competitive enterprise system, or there will be no point in defending this hemisphere.

All this brings us to the question of "taking the profits out of war." In a day and age of slogans, this is a popular slogan. War profit is like sin—most respectable folks are against it.

We are all opposed to profiteering. We remember the World War. That war made some multimillionaires while other men fought in the mud at $30 a month. We remember the manufacturers who turned out shoddy uniforms and dud shells at top prices. And we remember that a few workers sometimes loitered in shipyards and munitions plants at top wages. After all, you do not have to wear a plug hat to be a profiteer. In all fairness, though, I believe it should be stated that the vast bulk of labor merely asks for a square deal.

Mr. President, no one will sanction the exploitation of an emergency by conscienceless men. Everyone is for an antiwar profits bill. That makes it doubly important for us to see that no other idea masquerades under that title. The distinguished Senator from Washington undoubtedly is sincere in referring to his bill as an "antiwar profits bill," but I believe the title is a misnomer when applied to his bill. This bill doesn't appear to be directed at war profits. It does not appear to be concerned about the unholy profits of war. It is merely directed at imposing extraordinary confiscatory taxes on everyone in the event of war. I lent my name to the bill, not as approval thereof, but in order that this challenging interest could be brought into the open.

I object to this bill for a number of reasons:

First. It is not a war-profits bill as its title implies.

It does not direct its fire against profits. It hits at the average day-to-day bread-and-butter income of the average taxpayer.

It would annihilate the small incomes of policemen, for example. A policeman or a school teacher would receive no more in wartime than in peacetime, and his peacetime income is small enough. His living expenses would be blasted skyhigh. He would not be making a cent of profit out of the war. In fact he would be living up to every cent of his income. Yet, this bill would bleed him white with a supertax.

That does not get at war profits. That does not eliminate war profits. It merely sandbags the general public into a stupor so Government can take over.

Second. Its provisions are so drastic as to be confiscatory. A man and his wife would have $1,000 to live on and then the tax would be applied. A man with $10,000 would pay $2,640. A man with a $100,000 income would pay $89,210. A man with a million-dollar income would pay $980,210, and, as has been pointed out, might conceivably pay more than 100 percent after all his taxes were added. Meanwhile the corporation tax would take all income over 6 percent. I object to the bill because it is confiscation.

Third. I object to the bill because I believe it would kick our economy wide open. If a man with a good income suddenly has to pay from one-third to nine-tenths of that income in taxes, he would be forced to default on his commitments, life insurance, and so forth. This bill would paralyze our economy and drain our economic bloodstream.

There are certain possibilities, however, of actually doing what this bill proposes to do; that is, tax war profits. I believe we should tax war profits, and that is why I signed this bill. I believe this problem should be considered now. We might tax war profits in several ways.

First. Freeze the peacetime income at regular rates—possibly at the average gross figure of the last 3 years' income-tax report—and then put on a very high tax for income over the peacetime average. This would put a ceiling on profits.

Second. We might permit everyone to make as much money as he can and then levy on his capital after the war is successfully concluded.

But whatever we do, we must realize that we are in for a period of self-discipline, self-denial, and self-sacrifice. Defense and the protection of our land must move on despite "hell and high-water taxes." The cost of defense is great, but the need is greater.

Mr. President, in connection with every tax program, besides the matters I have heretofore suggested, it appears to me that we cannot simply be concerned with the immediate present; we have to look into the future. It is conceded by everyone here that after this war crisis is over America will face the greatest test in her history. It has been said that the depression of 1929 will be a mere rain shower compared with the storm we will have to face. Under those circumstances, Mr. President, I drop this suggestion:

I believe that every industry that employs labor should be privileged to create a special reserve of at least 5 percent per year of its yearly income, a reserve that could be specially set aside to aid in providing for labor in the slack years that are up ahead.

As a corollary of this proposition, in view of the fact it has been said that the world is facing a period of famine and possibly worse, it would be well for the Government to take the lid off of our production and start a storage program of its own, making us able to look after our own and meeting the responsibility that the world crisis places upon us. This kind of a program would provide the Government with a means of stabilizing prices; it would give the producer a fair return for what he produces. The Government could also, by this very method, interfere with anyone gambling with the rights of the public.

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. MINTON, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212) making applicable to certain coal deliveries the prices established by the National Bituminous Coal Commission, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1904) thereon.

ADDITIONAL BILLS INTRODUCED

Additional bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KING:

S. 4161. A bill to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1939; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MEAD:

S. 4162. A bill to limit the power of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to obtain deficiency judgments and to provide for local boards to review cases in which the Corporation contemplates institution of foreclosure proceedings; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS—AMENDMENT

Mr. MEAD submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000 under the office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper, Senate, for salary of messenger at special gallery door, fiscal year 1941, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10104, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10055, making supplemental appropriations for the national defense.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10055) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

THE COAST GUARD

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Coast Guard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the Executive Calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, June 20, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 19 (legislative day of May 28), 1940

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 19, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who dwellest in the beauty and glory of infinite holiness, we draw nigh to Thee as our merciful, Heavenly Father. So regard us that our minds shall be awake to strong and impelling desire for righteousness and peace. O Lord God, there is a shudder in the world, which makes it quiver to its foundation. Countless numbers of mankind are being bound by the chains of stalking, petrified hearts of conquest as they face the vast, all-engulfing abyss of terror. Stay Thou the foaming teeth of war with death in their jaws as they blaspheme the name of God and defame the souls of men. O loving Father, have mercy, have mercy as the multitudes of the crippled, the sightless, and the fatherless are driven before the wild flames of murder to their unknown graves. We pray Thee to strengthen our mighty hopes that make us Thy children; direct our country in every good work and bless all our institutions which mark the aspirations of a free people; pity us in our weaknesses; restrain us in our tendencies; be at our side when the way is unsafe. In the name of Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8668) entitled "An act making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2059. An act authorizing a grant to the city of Fargo, N. Dak., of an easement in connection with the construction of water and sewer systems.

THE HONORABLE EDWARD T. TAYLOR, OF COLORADO

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House briefly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is proper to say that under the circumstances presented this morning by the gentleman from Indiana and others, by agreement of the majority and minority leaders, it might be proper to waive the 1-minute rule for the time being.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, fourscore and two years ago there was born in the State of Illinois a man who is honored and loved by every Member of this House. Representative EDWARD T. TAYLOR, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, is passing his eighty-second milestone today [applause] with his head erect and his heart warm with love for his country, which he has served with a full measure of devotion over a period of nearly 60 years. [Applause.]

It is not my purpose on this occasion to present a minute biographical recital of the distinguished career and notable achievements of our friend—everybody's friend—from Colorado. To essay that task and do justice to it would require a long time instead of a brief minute or two. He has the perfectly amazing record of having run for public office 21 times, of having had no opposition for the nomination any time he ran, and of being elected every time he ran. [Applause.] Out in the rugged frontier country his sterling qualities, even in his youth, created a demand for his services as adviser, arbiter, and administrator, so that public office came to him naturally, and it has remained with him continuously. As principal of schools, superintendent of schools, deputy district attorney, district attorney, and State senator for 12 years his name was a household word throughout the West long before he was elected to Congress in 1909. He had reached the half-century turn when he came to Washington. No other person in the history of the Republic has had such an extended congressional career after reaching the age of 50. During more than three decades of congressional service Mr. TAYLOR's practical wisdom has been a national asset, which is reflected in many of the laws now on the statute books. Of the 8,300 Members of the House since the first session of the First Congress, only 6 others have been elected 16 successive times: Bingham and Butler, of Pennsylvania; Gillette, of Massachusetts; Pou, of North Carolina; Haugen, of Iowa; and Sabath, of Illinois, all of whom entered Congress much younger than Mr. TAYLOR. Our friend has served in Congress under 6 Presidents and 8 Speakers, and one would judge from his vigor and enthusiasm that his career is just beginning. [Applause.] The universal confidence which people have in his honesty, ability, and fairness has been demonstrated by almost innumerable calls to him to preside over conventions, groups, and assemblages of various kinds and descriptions, and he has a remarkable collection of gavels, 80 in number, that have been presented to him from time to time in token of appreciation of his services and the righteousness of his decisions as a presiding officer. These instruments, designed for peace and order, have come from all over the country and indicate a wide range of fancy in the selection of materials, from bone to wood and metal, and from featherweight to a heaviness that would put a strain on the muscles of a prize fighter.

Those of us who sit by Mr. TAYLOR's side day by day on the Committee on Appropriations know that his is a face that cloaks no dissimulation. I never knew a man who could say "No" with more emphasis. He hates sham and fraud and is merciless in tearing away the mask of deceit. But with his stern adherence to principles of honesty and right dealing he has a heart of gold that beats in rhythm with the heartbeats of 130,000,000 people, and I guess that is one of the reasons why we all love him. I know that I speak the sentiments of all of the members of our committee and all of the Members of the House, and of millions of the people of the United States, when I wish him many, many happy returns of this day. [Applause, the Members rising.]

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS]?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I had looked forward to calling briefly to the attention of the House today the fact that our beloved colleague, the dean of the Colorado delegation [Mr. TAYLOR], was 82 years young this morning. But, without my knowing of it in advance, our good friend the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] has just now expressed far better than could I his affection and esteem for Mr. TAYLOR, which I believe is shared by every Member of the House.

There is an interesting coincidence in age between the city of Denver, which I have the honor to represent, and Mr. TAYLOR.

EDWARD THOMAS TAYLOR was born near Metamora, Woodford County, Ill., June 19, 1858.

In the summer or autumn of 1858, the Russell brothers who had gained experience in placer mining in California, led a party of Georgians to Cherry Creek, the confluence of which with the South Platte River is now in the heart of Denver. They found "colors" of gold all along Cherry Creek and along other streams tributary to the South Platte. The party remained throughout that fall and winter in what was then vaguely known as "the Pikes Peak region," although Pikes Peak rises 75 miles to the south of where Cherry Creek flows into the South Platte. The Russell party, joined by others, continued their prospecting up other tributaries of the South Platte and the following spring found lode deposits of gold in place. These discoveries started the "Pikes Peak or bust" gold rush of 1859, in which many were "busted" but which resulted in the permanent settlement of Denver and of Colorado.

Denver, named after James W. Denver, the Governor of the Territory of Kansas—which then included one-third of what is now Colorado—was commenced in October 1858, 4 months after EDWARD T. TAYLOR was born in Illinois.

So it happens that the city of Denver, with its 318,000 people within its corporate limits, and about forty or fifty thousand in its immediately contiguous suburbs, is only about 4 months younger than Mr. TAYLOR.

During Mr. TAYLOR's first three terms in the House—Sixty-first to Sixty-third Congresses, 1909 to 1915—he was the Congressman at large from Colorado and, as such, was a Representative of the city of Denver as well as of all other parts of our State. He has always been a great influential friend of Denver as well as of Colorado and the entire West, and we all appreciate him and love him.

I am sure I can speak for all the people of Denver when I say that we are very proud, not only of our splendid city, young in spirit, but also in the outstanding Representative, also young in spirit, who has so ably represented in this House, Denver, Colo., the West and, in fact, the entire Nation, during more than 31 years. [Applause.]

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I cannot refrain from saying just a word or two in the way of tribute to my distinguished friend the gentleman from Colorado, EDWARD T. TAYLOR, that sterling statesman from the western slope of the Rockies on this his eighty-second anniversary. It is not rare in this day and age for youth to render distinguished service; for men in middle life it is expected; but when one can boast of a half century of distinguished service to his State and country it is an adornment that attaches to very few, and especially when that service is still being carried on in the vigorous style so typical of the gentleman from Colorado, ED TAYLOR. Years seem only kind to him. Notwithstanding their load, they have in no way impaired his dignity or bearing; his genial disposition and charming personality have only been mellowed by their number. To the love of and the high esteem in which he is held by his colleagues each year of his long and distinguished service in this body has added greatly. To me he permanently endeared himself when as a new Member in March 1933 I came to him for advice and counsel. His response was so warm and cordial, so encouraging, that I felt here is a genuine friend, one to whom I can tie and always depend on for advice. I have sought him out often since that time nearly, 8 years ago, when troubled with legislative problems and when in need of help. He has never failed to be cooperative and helpful.

In 1935, 5 years ago today, the distinguished lady from Arizona, Mrs. Isabella Greenway, a former Member of this body, was entertaining a few Members from the West in honor of the distinguished gentleman from Colorado. We all had our glasses poised ready to drink one to the health of the distinguished guest of honor when our hostess pointed to me and commanded a toast to Ed. Almost spontaneously I responded, and with your leave I will now repeat the toast I proposed on that occasion:

Here's to ED TAYLOR, a real son of the West,
As a Member of Congress, he's right at his best;
To his country he's given the best that he's had,
And to new western Members he's been a real dad.

I am sure all my colleagues from the West joined on that occasion in my toast and join me today in wishing Ed many happy returns of the day.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, our beloved colleague, EDWARD T. TAYLOR, was born in Woodford County, Ill., which is in the district of Congressman ARENDS and adjoins my own district.

It is rather interesting to reflect for a moment on the fact that he was born in 1858, which was 2 years before the Republicans nominated Abraham Lincoln in the great wigwam convention in Chicago. In a way I am a little surprised that Mr. TAYLOR did not turn out to be a Republican rather than a Democrat.

It is interesting to reflect also in the light of the observance we had here in March 1939 when we observed the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the launching of this Government under the Constitution that if you took two lifetimes the equivalent of our great colleague, it would more than span the life of the Republic. He probably remembers from reading the front pages of the newspapers in those contemporary periods of the surrender of the sword at Appomattox, and building of the Brooklyn Bridge. He no doubt recalls the massacre of the forces of General Custer on the Little Big Horn, a subject on which our friend, Mr. BURDICK, is an authority. His lifetime comes down through Presidents Garfield, Arthur, Cleveland, Roosevelt, Wilson, Taft, Harding, Coolidge, and all the rest, and it stimulates one to think some of the philosophy of Lin Yuteng, the Chinese philosopher, who spoke of families and of nations as a sort of endless stream of life. Mr. TAYLOR has lived so long and so intimately with so much of the historic and epochal events which constitute the pattern of our Republic's history that he can be truly regarded as an integral part of the endless lifestream of the Nation. I like to think of Mr. TAYLOR as a Member of this body making a great contribution to the welfare of the Republic, moving on and on and on down the corridor of time as an integral part of the history of this country. What a pleasure it is, therefore, to serve with him.

Mr. TAYLOR, I think I speak for the good folks out in central Illinois when I do honor to you today, coming as you have from Woodford County before you went to Colorado. You will recall that in Metamora, the county seat of Woodford County, there stands today a memorial courthouse where Lincoln practiced law and where he made speeches. You come from a very historic and celebrated spot. So, in the name of the good people in that area of Illinois, all power, all honor, long life, and contentment to you. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I have served here with our friend the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] longer than any other Member; and during that time I frequently have said that it has been a real pleasure to serve with a great variety of Members, but I want to emphasize as strongly as I can that I have never served with a finer, nobler soul than the gentleman from Colorado, ED TAYLOR. It is indeed gratifying that he is still with us, with sustaining virility and a superabundance of useful and beneficial knowledge, constantly being exercised, excelled by none and equaled by few.

The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] is today observing his eighty-second anniversary, and I am sure this evening will be enjoyed by him with his gracious and affectionate spouse. He was fortunate in the beginning, in that he was born in my own State of Illinois.

My colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has said he is surprised that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], having been born in Illinois, is not a Republican. I am, however, not surprised. The gentleman from Colorado, ED TAYLOR, always has had a great deal of common sense and has always desired to serve the country to the utmost of his ability, and therefore he became and has ever remained a Democrat. [Laughter and applause.]

I need not tell the membership of the House, especially the older Members, that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] is the author of more sound and progressive legislation affecting the western part of the United States, with special reference to mining, public lands, public parks, irrigation, and water rights, than any other Member of Congress, past or present. Even to this good day he, the chairman of the powerful Committee on Appropriations, is chairman of the appropriations subcommittee having to do with the Interior Department.

Mr. TAYLOR'S long line of worthy and important achievements in this body is, aside from his personal charm, his greatest assurance of grateful remembrance.

He is not known as one who has amassed much money, because he has spent most of his busy life in the public service.

Educator, lawyer, district attorney, State senator, and, lastly, 16 times elected a Member of this body, our friend has led a very busy and useful life. It is worthy of note that only 4 Members within the life of the American Congress have served continuously longer than the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR]. Think of such a singular testimonial and honor.

Credit for our friend still being here, to carry on with characteristic zeal and enthusiasm his onerous and important duties, is not entirely his. I have the pleasure, the honor, and the distinction of knowing personally the good one who quite largely makes it possible for him to still be with us. I do not know any more affectionate and agreeable couple that has set a better example for happy and contented American life than the gentleman from Colorado, ED TAYLOR, and his beloved wife, who is one of the most charming women it ever has been my fortune to meet. [Applause.] Many years ago, when the tempo of American life was calmer, we lived at the same hotel. Mrs. Taylor, as general manager of the Taylor household, is entitled to very considerable credit for the blessed fact that we have the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] with us.

Ed, knowing you so well, and valuing your character so highly, I know that the entire membership of the House, irrespective of political affiliations, joins me in the confident hope that we may continue to have your wise counsel and pleasing personality for many, many years.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with deep interest and genuine appreciation to the very high tributes that have been paid to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] by those who have preceded me. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] preceded me in entering upon service in this House by 2 years. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], who has just preceded me on this floor, had been here 4 years, or two terms, when I came here. While they both preceded me in their service, which has been long and distinguished, I trust that I may precede them in retirement from this body by at least 20 years. I sincerely trust that the gentleman from Colorado, ED TAYLOR, may have many, many years of useful service yet in this body, in which he has served so faithfully and with such outstanding distinction not only to his district but to his State and to the Nation.

I am sure I voice the feelings of every Member of this House on both sides of the aisle when I say that the gentleman from Colorado, ED TAYLOR, possesses to the highest degree the respect, the admiration, and the genuine affection of every Member of this body. I sincerely trust that he will have many more years of useful service here and may remain as virile and alert in both mind and body as he is today. I know that those who have served with him fully appreciate his high character, his genuine ability, his patriotism, and his almost unequalled service in this body. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I feel it a high honor to be permitted to join several other colleagues in paying tribute, on this, his birthday anniversary, to our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Colorado, Hon. ED TAYLOR. To those of us who have been so closely associated with him for the past several years in our labors together on the Committee on Appropriations it is difficult to believe that our beloved chairman has today reached the ripe age of 82 years. To those of us who work with him and know of his indefatigable energy, his extraordinary pluck, his quick wit, and keen mind he is everything but an old man. The fact is, any of the much younger Members who should try to follow him during a day's work would be forced to the conclusion that he is getting younger and a lot spryer as the days go by. [Applause.]

It might be surprising to those who are not Members of this body that the 40 members of the Appropriations Committee almost invariably refer to our devoted chairman affectionately as Ed, and he calls each of us by our given names. This is true not only of members of our committee, but many Members of both Houses of Congress speak of our chairman only as Ed.

As chairman of the Appropriations Committee he does not use any high-powered or slave-driving tactics. ED TAYLOR not only takes his services in Congress seriously but he also takes the Members into his confidence, talks to them frankly and openly concerning the various problems facing the Nation. Not only is it true that he does not attempt to drive members of his committee, but he respects the views of all members as well as others, but takes orders from no one.

Chairman TAYLOR also enjoys the distinction of having served some 32 successive years in Congress. It is a compliment to him that the good people of Colorado appreciate him and his invaluable services so much that he has never had opposition in the primaries, and those who have opposed him in the general elections during those 32 years have never been able to get to first base. [Applause.]

ED TAYLOR has long been, and is now, a distinct credit to his own State of Colorado, and his long public record of useful service has been a blessing to the Nation. The public measures sponsored, as well as the many kindly deeds of this quiet, unassuming gentleman, whose birthday anniversary we pause here in our deliberations to celebrate, will live on and on for many years with undiminished power.

The Congress of the United States and the Nation need more men who have the high sense of duty, moral courage, and intellectual honesty of this statesman and Christian gentleman from Colorado, EDWARD T. TAYLOR.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues in the House, I doubt if any of you younger people can fully realize my genuine appreciation of your most cordial greeting. I feel profoundly grateful for your most kind and generous expressions of good will and congratulations. It is really an inspiration to me to receive such a friendly recognition on my eighty-second birthday, and I thank all of you from the bottom of my heart.

I have heard it said that some people are young and unfortunately are not youthful, while others happily are old and are not aged. I have always hoped that I would remain in this latter class during recent years and for whatever time may still be allotted to me.

On this memorable occasion I am, I guess, naturally in a reminiscent frame of mind. I think back today to when I first came to Congress on March 4, 1909, the day President Theodore Roosevelt retired and President Taft was inaugurated.

At that time Uncle Joe Cannon was Speaker of the House. He and James Tawney, of Minnesota, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and Walter I. Smith, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, constituted kind of a steering committee that practically handled the whole show. They certainly were boss of the situation. They appointed all the Members to all the committees. They did not permit the Democrats to say anything about it. They put us wherever they pleased. It was a common saying that if Uncle Joe took any special dislike to any Democrat he would put him on the Committee on the Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

I was told the only way I could get on a committee was to go and see Uncle Joe, which I did. I was not permitted to see him for 2 or 3 days, but I finally got into his office. I remember it very vividly. He was reading a newspaper. I spoke to him and told him my name and that I had been elected Congressman at Large from the State of Colorado, and that I would like to have him appoint me as a member of the Committee on the Public Lands. He glanced at me, then went on reading his paper. I told him briefly that I thought I could be of more service to my constituents and to the House on that committee than any other, and asked him if it would be agreeable to him to make that assignment.

He turned and looked at me and said, "Where did you say you came from?" I told him from Colorado. He said, "I won't let you go on that committee. You western fellows would steal everything the Government has out there for your States, or something or other, and you cannot go on that committee." He continued reading his paper and I went out. I felt very much disappointed and dejected. I asked a number of the boys what I could do about it, and they said I could not do anything, because Uncle Joe Cannon and Tawney and Smith were the boss of the whole show.

I did as I usually do, and spoke to my wife about it. She asked if Walter Smith came from Council Bluffs, Iowa. She said that she and Mr. Smith and his wife were schoolmates for many years in the Council Bluffs High School, and that I should speak to him. I did so. Judge Smith said, "I don't know you, Mr. TAYLOR, but if you are the husband of Etta Taber, I will put you on that committee," and he did. That was the only time that I got the better of Uncle Joe.

While he ruled with an iron hand, I always had a profound admiration for him. He was a great watchdog of the Treasury. He is entitled to the credit of saving many millions of dollars to the taxpayers of our country. I think the last thing he ever said on the floor of this House ought to be remembered. I do not recall that it has ever been published. He became quite frail in his later years.

One day he came on the floor of the House when we were considering an appropriation bill. A Member from Minnesota offered an amendment to insert an item of $25,000 for something in his district. He made a vigorous speech in behalf of it, saying he hoped the House would unanimously accept it. Uncle Joe got up and said, "Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we are trying to economize and keep this appropriation bill down to a reasonable figure, I feel that no amendment should be accepted unless it is for something that is not only necessary but very urgent. I don't look upon this offered amendment as of that character and I hope it will not be accepted by the House." The Minnesota Member said very loudly and pompously, "Mr. Speaker, I look upon this matter differently than the distinguished gentleman from Illinois." Uncle Joe Cannon arose and said, "Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have often noticed that some people always look at everything through their own gimlet hole." [Laughter.] The House cheered and that settled that amendment.

I feel that would be a good motto to paste up somewhere around here—to not look at everything through your own gimlet hole.

The first bill I introduced when I came to Congress was to remove the Capitol to my beautiful little home city of Glenwood Springs, Colo. It provided for a summer home for the President and his staff in our cool mountain climate. While I never obtained any favorable action, I have ever since felt that it would be a good idea for the President and his immediate staff to have a cool resort of that kind during the summer season in Washington.

The first bill I ever passed through the House authorized the ranchmen in southwestern Colorado to take coal from public domain for their domestic purposes. It was vetoed by President Taft, which was a great disappointment to me.

I remembered that Jim Tawney, of Minnesota, had a brother living in my home county and I had been his attorney for several years. It seems he had written to his brother telling him if he could ever be of service to this new Democratic Congressman from Colorado, he wanted him to do so. When I spoke to Tawney about the matter he said he would be very glad to take care of it for me.

A few days after that he reported out and passed through the House one of the large appropriation bills, which contained the identical language of my bill. The bill went to the White House with that language, and because of the fact that the President has no power to veto an item in an appropriation bill, President Taft was compelled to sign the bill containing the exact language he had vetoed about 10 days before.

That calls to my mind a matter I have mentioned before on the floor of this House several times, and I want to mention it again. There are 36 States in the Union that authorize the Governor to veto items in appropriation bills, and that provision has been a marvelous saving to those States. If that provision were put into our Constitution, it would save an average of $500,000,000 a year to the taxpayers of this country. I had a bill providing for that amendment to the Federal Constitution pending for several years before Congress but have never been able to get favorable action on it.

From my knowledge on the Appropriations Committee during the past 20 years, I am confident I know whereof I speak.

That kind of a provision would prevent logrolling and the insertion of a large number of items by individual members for their individual home benefits that should never be approved. If the President had the power to eliminate those "Alphonse and Gaston" amendments it would come nearer keeping our Budget balanced than any other possible piece of legislation I know of.

I think the House might be interested in a historical reference. It is now 166 years, a century and two-thirds since the Continental Congress first met in the year 1774. Yet, measured in terms of a number of generations which have served in Congress from that early beginning to the present time, the Continental Congress is only a few yesterdays in the past.

If I may be permitted to again refer to myself, the overlapping services of but four other men in addition to my own constitute a living chain which joins those early colonial days of the Continental Congress with those of the Seventy-sixth Congress of the year 1940.

As I have said before, when I first came to Congress in 1909, Uncle Joe Cannon was Speaker of this House. When Uncle Joe first came to Congress in 1873, Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia, was a Member of this House. When Stephens first entered Congress in 1843, Henry Clay, of Kentucky, had been a Member of Congress and he reentered in 1849 as a Senator. When Clay entered Congress, Abraham Baldwin was a sitting Senator from Georgia. Baldwin had been a Member of the Continental Congress and participated in the action of that body calling the Constitutional Convention. He was a delegate to the convention and one of the signers of the Constitution. Thus was the torch of free government lighted in those early colonial days. It passed through the hands of but five men from the days of the Continental Congress down to the present time; from Baldwin to Clay, Clay to Stephens, Stephens to Cannon, and from Cannon to myself, whose overlapping services from an unbroken chain span from the prenatal period of our Republic down to the present time.

I hope the youngest Member of this House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH], or some other Member, will carry on this torch for the next 35 years, and be the symbol of the oncoming generation after I have retired from this body.

My long and consecutive legislative experience, including 12 years in the Colorado State Senate and nearly 32 years in Congress, covers the widest possible field of legislative experience, which I will not mention. But, I feel like adding that I think one of the mottoes of what success I have obtained may be the fact that I have long since learned never to attempt the impossible and to always cooperate with the inevitable. That sentiment has been helpful to me many times and I hope it may be helpful to you.

In the appalling crisis now existing in the world, when our country is threatened, and the liberty, freedom, and civilization on this planet are in tragic jeopardy, I feel that, regardless of politics, we should quite largely put aside politics and think only of our country and the people of the world who are being subjugated.

I believe that we Members sitting on the floor of this body, knowing conditions as we do, and the tempers and moods of each other, that we can serve our country much better than any new group of new Members.

For that reason I say to the House frankly that I hope the entire Membership of this body may be reelected this coming fall. I thank you all. [Applause, the Members rising.]

MOVING EXPENSES, EMPLOYEES RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE

Mr. BURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 1827, to allow moving expenses to employees in the railway mail service, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 4, strike out "and Post Office Inspection Service."
Line 6, after "duty", insert ", and who actually have to change their residence."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is this the unanimous report of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads?

Mr. BURCH. It is.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How much money is involved?

Mr. BURCH. About $5,000 annually. It is for the expenses of moving the household goods of postal employees who are arbitrarily transferred from one location to another.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is this a new policy that we are establishing?

Mr. BURCH. It is not a new policy in the Government. Generally, many departments do the same thing—practically all of them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were concurred in, and a motion to reconsider the vote by which they were concurred in was laid on the table.

UNIVERSAL MILITARY CONSCRIPTION

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, President Roosevelt says he expects to send to Congress a message urging universal military conscription in the United States. I warn the Members of the House to make a careful study of this entire proposal, which, in my opinion, would be bringing the European war system over to the United States.

Universal military service in America would create a gigantic war machine, or "Frankenstein," that would destroy and devour our democratic and free institutions.

I am in favor of making America invincible on land, sea, and air, through the largest Navy in the world and by increasing and modernizing our Army and National Guard. I am not in favor of copying the European war system of conscription in time of peace, although it may be necessary for defense if we are ever attacked.

Conscription in Europe is largely responsible for their continuous wars, as it creates a war psychology that war is natural and inevitable, and why not now? It destroys all peace elements and substitutes a psychology that breeds war. There is no room for it here except in defense of our country in case of an invasion.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by the insertion of a short resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the St. Louis Star.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks twice in the RECORD, by including an editorial from the Bennington (Vt.) Banner, and also an editorial from the Chicago Tribune.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a speech by the Assistant Secretary of State, a newspaper article, and a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include the keynote address of Hon. G. Garland Lyell before the Democratic State Convention of Mississippi, June 11.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLAHERTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WAR AND PEACE

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. PIERCE addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article I wrote for the Public Opinion Quarterly, appearing in the last issue.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

POLL TAX

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I notice by the RECORD that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] gave recognition yesterday to the fight that I have been making against the un-American poll tax as a prerequisite to voting which is in existence in eight Southern States.

I am certainly gratified, but not surprised, that the gentleman did not attempt to justify this very un-American practice of charging for the privilege of exercising a right for which our forefathers fought, bled, and died. I am sure that no one would attempt to justify this restriction on democracy. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] infers that my knowledge of the subject is limited. I wish to state that the material for the various tables that have been placed in the RECORD have been taken from such reliable sources as our own Congressional Directory, World Almanac, the Bureau of the Census reports, and the reports from State officials.

It is not surprising that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] would accept the challenge. In this connection, we are reminded of an old saying, "The pig caught under the gate is the one that squeals."

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for half a minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, it is strange that we find here and there some people who seem to have no higher ambition than to make a public nuisance of themselves.

COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] with respect to the purported or supposed recommendation by the President of the United States as to compulsory military training, said to have been given out at a press conference yesterday evening at the White House. That matter appeared in the public press this morning and the House Military Affairs Committee in executive session took the matter under consideration and after rather extended and careful discussion of the press comments decided that they would await patiently and coolly the final recommendations of the President of the United States as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. After that is received, if it is sent up, the House Military Affairs Committee, as it tries to do in all cases, will give it careful, cautious, and painstaking consideration and at the end of thorough hearings will dispose of the matter as its judgment will seem to dictate at that time. [Applause.] Speaking for myself only, I wish to state that I greatly deplore all efforts, from whatever source they may come, to excite the passion of the people and to thereby create a war hysteria among the people of our country. Military dictatorship in these days seems to be the order of the day and I shall not at this time express any opinion as to the subject of compulsory military training, but there are so many danger signals in such a system that I now assure the American public that if and when the matter comes to my committee it will be approached impassionately, coolly, and with due regard to the many vital problems involved in such legislation in this crucial time in the world's history. [Applause.]

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, today's press carries the startling announcement that there will presently be proposed to the Congress a measure for the compulsory regimentation of the boys and girls of this Nation. The Washington Times-Herald says with reference to the President's proposal:

> He expressed the firm conviction at his press conference yesterday that this country, to safeguard its way of life, must adopt some such pattern of regimentation.

Then the newspaper article concludes with these words:

> What American girls might be given to do in such a program the President could not yet say. Jocularly he suggested that the women's camps must be at least 25 miles apart from the men's.

The time has not yet come when the boys are to be drafted. The time will never come when Congress will take from the mothers of the land their daughters and place them in military or any other kind of camps. [Laughter and applause.]

OUR FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. BARTON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I sometimes think that if Mr. Hitler has access to the American press he must read our papers with hilarious mirth. Yesterday, under the urgent insistence of the State Department and with a great deal of oratory in this House, we served notice on Mr. Hitler that we intend to defend the entire Western Hemisphere. The report of what we did was in this morning's papers. In the same papers Hitler is notified that the Secretary of the Navy is now offering to a belligerent 20 of our newest and as yet unfinished ships, which are the essential instruments of hemisphere defense. In a letter to the Secretary of the Navy this morning I said, as follows:

I have been writing to my constituents that I favor letting the Allies have any help we can give "without jeopardizing our own national defense." I want to ask a direct question: Are you, as the official in charge of our naval defense, prepared to state categorically that the action reported in today's papers does not and cannot under any circumstances jeopardize our national defense?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein a resolution from the American Legion on the retention and preference to veterans on W. P. A., and also to include a speech by Mr. J. H. Harnly before the Rotary Club at the Biltmore Hotel in Los Angeles.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the requests are granted.

There was no objection.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. LELAND M. FORD addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a short historical article on Finland. This may slightly exceed the space permitted under the rule, and I ask unanimous consent to print it notwithstanding.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

OUR DOMESTIC PROBLEMS

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, it is ridiculous to even consider adjournment of Congress at this time; not only does the precarious foreign situation demand that we remain on the job but also our domestic problems cry out for solution.

To bolster the inner defenses of our Nation, Congress should take the necessary steps toward placing agriculture on an even keel.

Our national defense needs the food the farmer produces, but it is a pity that he must produce it at present ruinously low prices. December wheat at 78 cents in Chicago and hogs at $5.30 top at that market does not augur well for farm stability—nor for national defense.

Let us stay in session. The political conventions will and can take care of their own problems. Let us at least try to solve some of the many issues now flatly placed on the doorstep of Congress.

I would place at all times the combined judgment of 531 Members of the Congress above the judgment, however good, of any one man who might happen to be occupying the White House. [Applause.]

SKILLED LABOR FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, on last Friday the Federal Security Administrator, Paul V. McNutt, released for the press a statement that there is an ample supply of skilled labor available for our national-defense program. This statement is not consistent with the evidence that has been presented to the House Naval Affairs Committee. While we were holding hearings recently on the bill to expedite the naval shipbuilding program, representatives of the Government shipbuilding yards, as well as representatives of private yards, positively declared that there was a serious shortage of skilled labor. Those of us who attended the launching of the battleship North Carolina in New York last week were informed that due to the shortage of skilled labor some of the construction shifts were only about 40 percent efficient. If there is a shortage, it constitutes a serious threat to the speedy and efficient completion of our preparedness program. Furthermore, the country should be accurately informed of the facts and not lulled into a sense of false security by the misleading statements of public officials. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the bill (S. 4141) to provide revenue and facilitate the regulation and control of the economic and industrial structure of the Nation for the successful prosecution of the war, and for other purposes.

Let me ask: What war; who is going to war? Not America, I hope. What are they doing? Today's newspapers carry accounts that the Secretary of the Navy has turned over to other countries contracts on ships that are being constructed for the Government of the United States. The Members of Congress did not know anything about it. You gave the President too much power already, and see just how he is leading you and the country into war. It is terrible.

If we enact this bill, S. 4141, we shall be giving the President greater dictatorial powers, contained in titles II, III, IV, and V of the bill, which amount to dictatorial bureaucratic control over every man, woman, and child in this country. We should never do it. This might be termed the Czar Roosevelt bill if ever enacted into law. It gives him the power to rule or ruin—to ruin if they do not obey; to fine and imprison if the people do not submit.

Let me quote from page 311, section 704, of the bill:

Rules and regulations: The President shall have power to make all necessary rules and regulations for the administration of this title, and such rules and regulations shall have the force and effect of law, and violation thereof shall be a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment; and in addition to such penalty any offense punishable by military law shall be subject to the jurisdiction of military court.

He can draft into war any citizen he chooses. The President can control all industry as he sees fit. He can close any commodity exchange, regulate prices, limit sales, requisition and take possession of any product, appoint administrators at $10,000 a year. The President already has too much power. We are not at war, and I hope we will never be again. I am for peace. I hope the Congress is. I will not vote to send our boys abroad again. We did so once, but never again.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I am not going to, of course; but we have been in session today for 55 minutes and have not yet touched the program for the day.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not think it can be said that we on the Republican side have taken that time, or prevented the majority from getting on to the program for the day.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am not going to object to the gentleman's request, but I simply want to call attention to the fact that we are indulging to quite a large extent in these 1-minute speeches. The custom is indulged in just as much on one side as it is on the other. I express the hope that Members will cut down such requests as much as possible so that we may proceed with the business of the day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

[Mr. THORKELSON addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY AND THE CITY OF PHILADELPHIA

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a newspaper published 75 years ago describing the funeral of President Lincoln at Philadelphia. Lincoln was the first national leader of the Republican Party. I hope that the forthcoming meeting of the Republican Party at Philadelphia will not in the near future be described as "the funeral of the Republican Party at Philadelphia."

Is the great Republican Party of Abraham Lincoln to be sacrificed on the utility altar by nominating Wendell Willkie for the highest office of our country? We Republicans in the West want to know if Wall Street, the utilities, and the international bankers control our party and can select our candidate?

I believe I am serving the best interests of the Republican Party by protesting in advance and exposing the machinations and attempts of J. P. Morgan and the New York utility bankers in forcing Wendell Willkie on the Republican Party. Money I know talks.

What the Republican Party needs is the votes of the American people, and it will not get them by being dictated to by Wall Street and letting them select a Democratic utility president as our candidate for President of the United States.

Let it be remembered that Willkie and his cohorts in holding companies put over the sale of millions of dollars worth of stock on the American people and today that stock is almost worthless. Let it also be remembered that Willkie within the last few months has changed from a Democrat to a Republican. Evidently, like Rip Van Winkle, he has been asleep for 20 years and has but recently found himself in the Republican Party. I have always appreciated Washington Irving's Rip Van Winkle, but I do not favor this Rip Van Willkie.

There is nothing to the Willkie boom for President except the artificial public opinion being created by newspapers, magazines, and the radio. The reason back of all this is money. Money is being spent by someone, and lots of it. This is a good time to find out whether the American people are to be let alone in the selection of a Republican candidate for the Presidency, or whether, the "special interests" of this country are powerful enough to dictate to the American people. If that power cannot be broken, then this Republic is lost.

If the Republican Party submits to control by J. Pierpont Morgan and the bankers of New York I fully expect in the future to read about the funeral of the Republican Party at Philadelphia in 1940. [Applause.]

TRANSFER OF NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, attention has already been called to dispatches appearing in yesterday's and today's papers regarding the transfer of vessels. In addition to what has been said as to their importance to our national defense and the implications involved in the sale of vessels usable for war purposes to a belligerent engaged in a war in which the United States is not engaged let me point out that this is a direct violation of law, title V of the unrepealed Neutrality Act of 1917 which was a reenactment of provisions in the act of 1915, which in turn was a reenactment of sections in the neutrality law of 1909 which was based upon articles in The Hague Convention of 1907 which in turn were based upon a solemn treaty made between the United States and Great Britain in 1871. If this thing should be done, the law should be repealed openly. Violation of long-established laws and solemn treaties is a poor way to maintain the American way of life. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimnous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a letter from a constituent which appeared in the Open Forum.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. HORTON], may have permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MCGREGOR asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address by Dr. Arnaud C. Marts, president of Bucknell University.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article from the Daily Worker of June 17.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein two tables of agricultural statistics.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short poem.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. THILL]?

There was no objection.

BRITISH PROPAGANDA

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. THILL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a copy of an advertisement which has been sent to Members of Congress entitled "Stop Hitler Now." Thousands upon thousands of dollars have been spent by the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies in placing such advertisements in the leading newspapers of the country.

Let us take a look at the membership of this committee. It has been stated that 18 prominent bankers met secretly on the 29th of April in New York to set up this committee. The meeting was called by the former legal adviser of the British Embassy in the last World War. The same group of millionaires who helped drag us into the last war are broadcasting the same propaganda, using the same old slogans, in their attempts to get us into the present war.

Mr. Speaker, I call upon the Dies committee to investigate Nazi, communistic, and Fascist propaganda in the United States and also to investigate British propaganda which is insidiously leading this country into war. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include some newspaper comments in connection with national defense and the building of airplanes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short editorial from the Journal-Every Evening.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and to slightly extend the remarks I made this morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the Appendix of the RECORD a eulogy of our late colleague, John A. Martin.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS]?

There was no objection.

ALTERATION OF CERTAIN BRIDGES OVER NAVIGABLE WATERS OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the further consideration of the veto message of the President of H. R. 9381, a bill to provide for the alteration of certain bridges over navigable waters of the United States, for the apportionment of the cost of such alterations between the United States and the owners of such bridges, and for other purposes, which the Clerk will report for the information of the House.

The Clerk read the veto message of the President, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, H. R. 9381, a bill to provide for the alteration of certain bridges over navigable waters of the United States, for the apportionment of the cost of such alterations between the United States and the owners of such bridges, and for other purposes.

The bill contains a number of provisions that are very similar to some of those in the General Bridge Act of March 23, 1906 (34 Stat. 84). However, it would establish a new policy by which the United States would be required to bear a portion of the cost of alterations or changes in bridges over navigable waters used and operated for the purpose of carrying railroad traffic, or both railroad and highway traffic, where such alterations or changes are found to be necessary by the Secretary of War for free and unobstructed navigation. Under the new policy which the bill proposes the bridge owner would be required to bear only such part of the cost of such alterations or changes as may be attributable to the direct and special benefits which will accrue to him, as determined by the Secretary of War, and the United States would be required to bear the remainder of such cost. The provisions of the bill are substantially the same as those contained in S. 1989, from which I withheld my approval on August 11, 1939.

As was stated in my memorandum of disapproval of S. 1989, the General Bridge Act of March 23, 1906, authorizes the Secretary of War to require the alteration of any bridge which, in his opinion, may at any time unreasonably obstruct navigation, the cost of such alteration to be borne entirely by the owner. This has been a condition precedent to the construction of bridges over the navigable waters of the United States and the owners are fully apprised of the condition before the construction work is undertaken. The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that where a bridge is an unreasonable obstruction to navigation the removal of such obstruction may be required without compensation from the United States, and such removal cannot be regarded as a taking of private property within the meaning of the Constitution. To require the Federal Government to pay the cost of alterations which do not directly benefit the bridge owners would impose upon it heavy financial liabilities. It is the duty of the Government to preserve and protect the navigability of our navigable waters, and when any person, association, corporation, or other body is authorized to build a structure over any such stream, the United States should not be required to bear any part of the cost of alterations which are necessary to avoid obstructions to navigation.

I am, therefore, returning the bill H. R. 9381 without my approval as it does not appear that any adequate reason exists for imposing upon the Federal Government the additional burdens which the bill proposes.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 10, 1940.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House reconsider and upon reconsideration agree to pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to the fact that, under date of June 12, on page 8090 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE], under permission to extend his remarks, has inserted the following language:

> National unity alone will preserve us as a Nation. Likewise, it is very important in our addresses, in our letters in times such as these, that we confine ourselves to the truth. The President of the United States has never suggested that the Congress should go home.
> It is not enough that the Member from Michigan should bring dishonor and discredit upon the high position that he occupies by his scurrilous language in regard to the highest office in the land, but he also feels compelled to distort the words of the President.
> Perhaps if he would commune with his God and with his conscience, he might learn to be more tolerant, for with tolerance would come a real, genuine love of patriotism, a love for democracy and its officers, its institutions, and its people.

This language was not uttered on the floor of the House, as appears by the official transcript of the address made by the gentleman on the floor. Therefore, the procedure of demanding that "the words be taken down" was not available to any Member of the House.

The language quoted above affected the rights and conduct of the Member from Michigan therein referred to in his representative capacity; intimates that the Member from Michigan, to whom reference was made, had not stated the truth with reference to the attitude of the President as to adjournment (8 Hinds, sec. 3163; Cannon's Procedure, p. 273); that, because of the language used in the letter, which was a private letter sent to Republicans and no copy of which was ever intended for or sent to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE] and which was not, by the gentleman from Michigan, inserted in the RECORD but was placed therein by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE], dishonor and discredit was brought upon the House of Representatives.

That the language also contained by inference a charge that the Member from Michigan was not patriotic; had no love for democracy, its institutions, its people.

The SPEAKER. Is it the contention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] that the language indicated here with red pencil marks was not stated on the floor of the House by the gentleman from New York in his speech?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not recall whether all the language indicated by the red marks comes within that category, but the language I read is not in the copy of the official transcript which I sent to the desk. That language was not uttered on the floor. It was added under permission to revise and extend, and, therefore, is subject to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. It is difficult for the Chair to compare these two texts in order to determine what was said on the floor and what was stated in the extension of remarks.

Was the following language which appears in the extension of remarks on page 8090 of the RECORD not stated on the floor?

It is not enough that the Member from Michigan should bring dishonor and discredit upon the high position that he occupies by his scurrilous language in regard to the highest office in the land, but he also feels compelled to distort the words of the President.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is not in the official transcript and was not uttered on the floor of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman is entitled to be recognized on his question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein part of an editorial by David Lawrence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the thought that President Roosevelt can best serve America by renouncing his political ambition for a third term has been expressed many times. As concise a statement as any is that of David Lawrence contained in the United States News. In part it is as follows:

We are on the verge of war. No man can foretell how soon we will realize that all democracy faces a threat of extinction and that we must recognize a state of war exists now against our own democracy. These are not times when wars are declared. They simply happen overnight, and only the democracies insist on taking time for the formalities while the aggressors bomb airdromes and render defenses impotent.

The President's duty is very plain. He must sacrifice his political ambitions for the good of the Nation. He might well consider the recommendation to the Congress of a program putting America immediately on a war basis. At the same moment the President ought to announce that he will respect the American tradition and refuse to run for a third term.

NATIONAL UNITY CANNOT BE BUILT ON DISTRUST

A change in the Presidency is not likely to cause any dislocation in industry, especially if Mr. Roosevelt will appoint now or give power to men already appointed to accelerate the industrial production of the Nation for defense. Whether another Democrat is chosen—and there are many capable leaders in the Democratic Party—or whether the country chooses a Republican, the fact remains that at this of all times democracy must prove the worth of its institutions. In the middle of a critical period, Britain changed prime ministers last month and so did France.

If America is to go into war it must be with a leadership that is freed from the handicaps that would face a third-term President. National unity cannot be built upon foundations of distrust. And unhappily industry today does not feel that the President is as concerned about the national defense as he should be or else he would not be temporizing with advisory councils and insisting on maintaining the restrictions and barriers that have hamstrung industry for the last 7 years.

ALL POLITICAL AMBITIONS MUST BE SACRIFICED

Mr. Roosevelt cannot do the job of directing industrial operations himself. He must delegate authority and do so promptly. He must also tell the people the truth about the need for a modification in the restrictions imposed by the New Deal on business management and industrial production. If this is not done, it will be said with emphasis on every side that the administration is more interested in saving the New Deal than in saving America.

To attain the desired end—national unity—the third-term issue must be disposed of by the President himself. To refuse a third-term nomination would, to be sure, disappoint the selfish politicians and parasites who infest Washington and who have imposed long enough on the good nature of a generous-minded President.

Mr. Speaker, on the 5th day of June it was my privilege to write a letter to my colleagues on the Republican side. I did not at that time apprehend that the right of free speech, or the right to express an opinion in a letter to a friend, had either been abridged or would ever be questioned. I did not know at that time that this country had reached a condition where it was a matter of criticism for one Member to write a letter to another Member expressing an opinion.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GAVAGAN. The gentleman from Michigan who is now addressing the House rose to a question of personal privilege. He was sustained in that contention. He is now not confining his remarks, as he must under the rules of the House, to that question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan will proceed in order upon the question for which he is recognized, a matter of personal privilege in which he complains of the language of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is right, Mr. Speaker, and the language of the gentleman from New York was that I was distorting the truth in charging in that letter that the President wanted the Congress to adjourn—and I repeat, I did not know at that time that it was a matter of criticism for a Member to state to another Member what he thought so long as he wrote the truth, even about the President of the United States.

In that connection, may I state a matter which is known to most of us, that it is just as reprehensible to give currency to a libel or a slander as it is to utter it. If there was anything in this letter of June 5 which should not have been written, it is beyond me how a gentleman on the majority side would take that letter and reproduce it and give it currency on the floor of the House. It is difficult to understand how the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Rules Committee [Mr. SABATH], would again, on either last Saturday or Monday, circulate a reproduction of that letter and so give it currency. If the letter or any statement in it was untrue, or disparaging, why make it public?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise again to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GAVAGAN. The gentleman is not proceeding in order. He rose to a question of high personal privilege. He is now attacking other Members of the House not interested in the question to which he rose.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Let us refer to the letter, and to the part of it in which the gentleman said the truth was distorted. That letter contains this statement:

This morning's press tells us that Roosevelt yesterday said—he saw no good reason why Congress should continue in session for the duration of the emergency, as desired by the Republican Members. Sarcastically, he said the situation did not require Congress to remain in session except for the laudable goal of delivering speeches.

And that statement, I may say, was taken from the New York Herald Tribune of June 5—

The gentleman from New York says that that was a distortion of the truth, and somewhat later it was said here on the floor that the President never made any such statement. But never have I heard from any Member of the majority, never have I read in the press or have I heard from anyone that the President did not want us to adjourn. I repeat, it was said that he had not made the statement, and I had assumed, of course, that when the leader of the Senate, through the press, announced that we must adjourn——

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I again raise the point of order that the gentleman is not proceeding in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman well understands the rule, that he must address himself to the particular question he is raising here. The Chair has no disposition to unduly limit the gentleman in the presentation of his argument, but when he goes out of the field of his argument and refers to the action of the Senate, and matters of that sort, the Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman is going beyond the rules governing the question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am attempting to argue the proposition that the letter is not a distortion of the truth. I am attempting to argue the proposition that from newspaper reports, and from other facts and circumstances, that the President did want us to adjourn, and that the leadership of both the House and the Senate, not as disclosed by the official record, but by the press of the day, was acting in agreement with the administrative policy, and that judged by the attitude of the leadership of House and Senate, the President did not want us to continue in session. The press, even down to last Saturday, carried the statement that the Senate leadership, at least, wanted Congress to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed, but the Chair trusts the gentleman will confine himself to the real issue here and not go far afield but stick to the facts.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will endeavor to, and if I am permitted to proceed I will endeavor not to take the time of the House too long.

So you will see, I trust, that there was no distortion of the truth in the statement that the President wanted to get Congress out of Washington.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is not proceeding in order. The gentleman raised the question of high personal privilege, and the question concerned the remarks of my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE]. Those remarks had nothing to do with utterances of the President or utterances of Members of the other body, and I must insist, as long as the gentleman from Michigan is wasting the time of this House on a question of personal privilege, that he proceed in order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I object to that statement, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman has no right to make any such statement. I object. The gentleman is out of order when he makes the statement that I am wasting the time of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must pass on the essential point of order raised by the gentleman from New York.

The gentleman from Michigan is entitled in connection with his answer to that of which he complains to make reference to what he conceives to be the defense of his attitude that his statement was not a distortion of the truth.

It is very difficult in matters of this sort to confine a Member to just one particular line of statements, but under all the precedents he is entitled to present the circumstances surrounding his attitude. The Chair trusts, however, that the gentleman will follow that course.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I will endeavor to follow that course and I will endeavor not to waste time, and I say to the gentleman who has raised a point of order so often that it is a very easy matter to raise other points of personal privilege and nothing is gained by criticism, however constructive it may be, which tends or is intended to destroy the thread of the argument. So I will go back and I will say this, that how a Member of the House can be accused of distorting the truth when he makes the statement, in substance, that the President wanted Congress to adjourn, I fail to understand. If that is a distortion of the truth, then the newspapers throughout this country have had the wrong idea about who wanted us to adjourn and who wanted us to stay here. So, too, have the reporters been in error all through the last 2 weeks. So, too, have millions of Americans. The truth is the facts show the President desired that the Congress go home.

There were some other statements in this letter and from those statements the gentleman intimates I am not patriotic. Well, that is a matter of judgment largely and, fortunately, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] who spoke on the floor of the House and criticized the writing of this letter—and I repeat again that it is a strange, strange situation when a personal letter to a friend may be picked up—it is something like eavesdropping—and republished and circulated and placed in the RECORD without the writer's consent. When the gentleman criticized the writing of that letter and the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] criticized the writing of that letter, they, by inference, challenged the right of a citizen and the patriotism of a citizen who criticized the President.

I want to say I stand on that letter today, and if opportunity offers I will attempt to demonstrate the truth of every single sentence in it. You will recall, if you remember the letter, that one of the principal things in that letter was this: That we stay here and we tell the truth; that we let the people know what the President was doing, what he intended, and who was helping him in his program. I think, in view of the fact that we had in the paper last night the statement about the sending of warships to Europe, I was well within my rights, and I was performing a service to the people of my district at least, in asking that we let them know what is going on now down here at Washington. Since when has it become an offense to tell the truth about President Roosevelt—what he is doing, who is encouraged by his actions, and what his program may be?

Fault was found because in that letter the statement was made that the President—and, mark you, these statements were not made by me on the floor, but the letter containing the statements was put in the RECORD by a Member on the majority side; that is how it got into the RECORD; not by my initiative—and in this letter the statement which seems to peeve some people—was that the President was "a crazy, conceited megalomaniac." Now, that is a long statement, and maybe it sounds worse than it is; and I am wondering why, when on the floor of this House, from the Well of the House, on the 13th day of July last year, when the President was designated as an "egocentric megalomaniac," no exception was taken and no answer was ever made. One statement was made in the Well on the floor here, and the House was in session and no criticism was made of it; but when this statement was put out in a letter, a personal letter, then comes the criticism.

Now, let us see what this statement means. There are various definitions. Not having had the finished education of some, I naturally use colloquial meanings, and here is one:

Crazy: Inordinately eager, foolishly desirous.

Conceit: Having an excessive opinion of oneself.

Megalomania: A tendency to magnify and exaggerate.

Now, let us go back over the record and determine from his acts whether the description is accurate. Whether he is inordinately eager, has an excessive opinion of himself, has a tendency to magnify and exaggerate. "Excessive eagerness." I might start out by saying, here we are now in a time of great emergency, our Nation's existence threatened, and according to many an editorial—and your attention is directed now specifically to one of David Lawrence's of 2 weeks ago, when he called upon the President of the United States to say that he was not a candidate for a third term.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that reference is pertinent to the argument.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Very well. I shall go on with the inordinate eagerness thought. Was the President inordinately eager last year—and this has to do with the truth as to whether the statement made in the letter—was the President inordinately eager to extend his power when last year he joined the Communists in the city of New York to defeat John O'Connor, a Democrat, a former Member, and the chairman of the Rules Committee?

Mr. GAVAGAN. O Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. FAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed in order. The Chair sustains the point of order in respect to the reference to a former Member of the House from the city of New York.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then I apologize to the Speaker. I will ask whether it was inordinately eager to ask for billions of dollars for relief and then permit it to be used as it was used, according to a committee, a distinguished committee composed of members of the majority party, for corrupt political purposes? Was that inordinately eager? Was it inordinate eagerness that caused the cancelation of the air-mail contracts, as a result of which 12 young men went to their death? Was it inordinate eagerness to obtain absolute power, visible or behind the scenes, when we were asked to pack the Supreme Court and put on new Justices so that the philosophy of the Court's decisions might be changed and brought into line with New Deal theories? Was it inordinate eagerness for the labor vote, for the support of John Lewis——

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is going far afield and adding insult to injury. I think it is manifestly unfair for him to try to justify the language which he has used, and he even now does not comply with the rules in trying to show that the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE] was not justified in saying and putting into the RECORD, under the leave granted him, that the gentleman was far afield from telling the truth when he accused the President of being crazy, conceited, and I think the gentleman is out of order. I raise the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is compelled to overrule that point of order. The gentleman from Michigan will kindly proceed in order on this question he raises, without going too far afield. It is very difficult for the Chair in matters of the question of personal privilege to draw any sharp lines of cleavage as to what a Member may properly say on such an occasion.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I was asking whether or not it was inordinate eagerness to secure the support of a certain pressure group, the C. I. O. and the Communists who went into Michigan—and this is an old, old story—in 1937, these men marching armed, depriving the employers of their property in violation of that constitutional guaranty of due process of law, whether it was inordinate eagerness to secure the C. I. O. vote which induced the President, notwithstanding the provisions of section 5299 (R. S.), to refrain from action when Lewis deprived 100,000 men and women of their jobs and why it was that action was not taken by the Secretary of Labor and the Chief Executive?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. This is getting to be a political football.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You started kicking me around.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is out of order. This very same condition existed under a Republican Governor in the most marked condition it ever existed in Michigan, and not a word was said about it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan will proceed in order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In answer to the statement of the gentleman from Michigan, I may say that he is absolutely mistaken.

Mr. RABAUT. I am not mistaken, and the gentleman has been wrong all morning.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You are absolutely mistaken. In Michigan I criticized the Republican Governor, Governor Dickinson, because he did not take part in protecting the men who wanted to work at the time of the Chrysler strike.

Mr. RABAUT. And I will tell the House here that they had the greatest strike in history under a Republican administration.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The record does not so show.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, as the Speaker has said correctly on a question of personal privilege, a wide discretion must be allowed by the Speaker when a Member states it, but it does appear to me that what a Democratic Governor of Michigan did or what a Republican Governor of Michigan did has very little to do with the gentleman's question of personal privilege. Also, it appears to me that the gentleman should be able to talk without getting that far afield, and I trust that he will obey the injunction of the Speaker to proceed in order on the question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from the bottom of my heart for his little lecture, and I will endeavor to avoid anything that might give offense, if I can. Shortly I shall quit, with the permission to revise and extend, except that I would not want the same point that the remarks are not in order raised afterward.

I was discussing the meaning of those terms, which sound much worse than they actually are. I was going to ask this question: Is it inordinately eager, that is, is a man inordinately eager to have his own way when, for example, after this House has created a committee, such as the Dies committee, for the activities of that committee to be criticized as being "sordid"? Is there any inordinate eagerness when, after this House has adopted the so-called Smith amendments, they still remain over in another body and the newspapers state that the administration is opposed to the adoption of those amendments? Is there any inordinate eagerness in keeping Harry Bridges in this country——

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McKEOUGH. The gentleman is certainly very far afield in attempting by implication to criticize the other body at the other end of this Capitol.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Very well. I understand that mention of the "other body" cannot under the rule be made, but my remarks were directed to the action of the administration rather than to the Senate. I will speak about the Secretary of Labor. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. There is no question of the Secretary of Labor involved in the question of privilege.

The Chair has no desire to unduly limit the reasonable grounds of the gentleman's argument, but the Chair must insist that he do not depart from the legitimate question raised of personal privilege, to depart into other fields that have no relevancy whatever to his question. The Chair will endeavor to confine the gentleman to those channels.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Would it be proper to discuss the question of whether there was any inordinate eagerness on the part of the administration to retain Harry Bridges?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would be improper for the gentleman to go into that field. [Applause.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. In other words, if a Member rises to a question of personal privilege, the presumption is that something has been said that reflects upon his reputation or integrity as a Member. The gentleman should confine himself in his statement of facts to that issue.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I was thinking about the patriotic slant of the thing and an administration which had retained Harry Bridges and made it necessary for us to take the action we did.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not proceeding in order under the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I would ask this, Mr. Speaker: Remember, now, in this letter I used a word which means that the President was inordinately eager. Now I am asking is there any inordinate eagerness on his part, when we have a national-defense program and when we know that in order to manufacture planes, cannon, and munitions of war we must have production—is there any inordinate eagerness on his part when he says that none of these social reforms or social legislation which retard and limit production must be interfered with, which means that the men in our factories can only work 42 hours if time and a half is not paid for overtime?

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I wonder if your question of personal privilege is that your patriotism has been challenged? I think that is a fair question. His patriotism has been challenged because he criticized the President of the United States. I think the gentleman from Michigan is justified in attempting to say that he is not unpatriotic, if he sees fit to criticize even the President of the United States. I think he should have much latitude when his patriotism is challenged.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has given the gentleman a considerable amount of latitude.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. I want to say to the gentleman from Michigan, and to other Members of the House, the Speaker has rather wide latitude under the rules of the House and under the common practices with reference to denying a Member the privilege of addressing the House on a question of personal privilege when he does not speak to that question. I do trust again, may I say to the gentleman, that he not discuss this in a way that strained measures may be resorted to. The gentleman, of course, understands what I mean.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, yes. I gather that I can be taken off the floor, for you have a majority; but I had not realized that, when a man's patriotism as a Member of this House was challenged, he had no right to show the things that he had stood for, the things that he was opposed to, if perchance that policy was not in accord with that of the President of the United States. I did not understand that you could not discuss it.

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman had asked unanimous consent to speak for an hour, yes; but the gentleman has the floor by raising a question affecting his privileges as a Member of the House, and he was so recognized. It does seem that the gentleman would have wide enough latitude, in discussing that, not to go out into other fields and discuss matters that certainly are not relevant to that question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, I thank the gentleman again. And though the instances of what might be termed "inordinate eagerness" have only been touched on, I leave the others for another occasion and turn at this point to the charge of a "tendency to exaggerate and magnify."

So as to avoid anything that might give offense I will call attention to this. We all recall how Grover Cleveland went fishing in a flatboat, and we now recall that when the President goes fishing he must have a warship or a battleship. Even in sport there is a tendency to magnify.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned exaggeration. I call attention to the time that the last message was delivered. Now, whether this is exaggeration or not, is, of course, a matter of opinion, but you remember how the President stood at the Speaker's desk here and painted to us a picture that was so realistic that many of us were actually frightened that day about those bombers coming over and going way out to Omaha and blowing that city all to dust. Do you remember? Was that an exaggeration? And then how we were told that we must have 50,000 airplanes right away. And then the following Sunday we were told, in substance, that everything was all right, just leave it to him, that it was all a mistake, that no harm would come to us. Both situations cannot be true. Either the danger was exaggerated or the degree of our unpreparedness was exaggerated.

Now, if you will pardon me, I just refer briefly to the matter of conceit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman from Michigan whether in his statement of personal privilege that the Chair now has before it the gentleman refers to the matter of conceit? As the Chair reads these charges, the gentleman has not set out any specific language in his statement of privilege bearing on the matter of conceit.

The Chair reads the following:

> National unity alone will preserve us as a Nation. Likewise, it is very important in our addresses, in our letters in times such as these, that we confine ourselves to the truth. The President of the United States has never suggested that the Congress should go home.

Mr. HOFFMAN. "Conceit" is not in there, Mr. Speaker, if I may interrupt.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly the point the Chair was raising. The gentleman is not complaining now with reference to the word "conceit." The Chair reads further from the gentleman's statement:

> It is not enough that the Member from Michigan should bring dishonor and discredit upon the high position that he occupies by his scurrilous language in regard to the highest office in the land, but he also feels compelled to distort the words of the President.
> Perhaps if he would commune with his God and with his conscience, he might learn to be more tolerant, for with tolerance would come a real, genuine love of patriotism, a love for democracy and its officers, its institutions, and its people.

The Chair can find nothing in this statement furnished by the gentleman from Michigan in support of his question of privilege to allow him to follow up the matter of conceit, or peccadillos in the statement of others.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the point is this, that the gentleman from New York makes the accusation that I am lacking in patriotism and several other qualities.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can answer those charges if he desires to, but that has nothing to do with the gentleman's commenting upon the quality, vice, or virtue of conceit in other individuals, particularly the President of the United States.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; but for example the gentleman from New York complains about my letter of the 5th in which appeared the word "conceited."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not complained of that in his statement of privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do complain of it in the matter I sent up to the Speaker, because the gentleman from New York characterized my lack of patriotism and referred to my letter in which the word was used.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just read to the gentleman the language of which he complains, and the Chair finds no justification in that language for the argument the gentleman is now making.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then, as I understand the ruling of the Chair it is this: That notwithstanding the fact that the word "conceited" was contained in the letter and that the letter as a whole is criticized as being scurrilous, and these charges were made in the RECORD as appears from the page indicated, I will not now be permitted to substantiate the charge made in the letter, and thus show, by a showing that the word "conceited" was a proper description, that the words were not scurrilous? If that is the ruling, that ends that matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to transgress the rule. May I say whether or not I consider the President conceited?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. HOFFMAN. All right, then, we will say nothing about that. The result is that the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE] is permitted to say that language I used is scurrilous; but, when I attempt to show that the language I used was a correct and accurate description, I may not do so. I will only say this, that when a party has just one man who is capable according to its theory of handling the affairs of this Nation——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order in making that statement.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Very well, then, I will finish, I will say this——

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I say this——

Mr. GAVAGAN. The best thing the gentleman has said is that he was going to finish.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is the gentleman's opinion. The gentleman is out of order in that he has not secured recognition from the Speaker. Gentlemen have been interrupting in violation of the rule, which requires recognition by the Chair. I am glad I do not have to go before a district in Harlem, and thank God——

Mr. GAVAGAN. The gentleman would not last 2 minutes in Harlem.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York——

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that the gentleman has not been recognized for this purpose.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I know to whom I am responsible for my position. My people are the judges of my capabilities, of my patriotism or lack of it.

You are not concerned, except incidentally, with who is sent down here to Congress. Now, do not worry. Dig out the skeletons on your own side if you want to hear the bones rattle.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that certainly this argument has nothing to do with the question now properly before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I concede it.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Why do you do it then?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Because the gentleman from New York brought it up himself.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. The Speaker has asked you to abide by the rules.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will abide by the rules.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the previous point of order having been sustained, the gentleman cannot proceed until a motion is made that the gentleman may be permitted to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that the rule contemplates that action.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I will conclude. In connection with your program of national defense—and I speak for no one on the Republican side except myself—you will find that I will go with you, and I have gone with you all along the line. I will make just as many sacrifices for national defense as any man on the majority side. I will vote with you to compel our people to make those sacrifices. I voted for the national-defense bills. I voted for the tax bill. But let me tell you this: When the President attempts to sacrifice on the altar of his political ambition our economic freedom, our industrial production, without which we cannot adequately prepare for defense, I refuse to go along with him. [Applause.]

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And I will tell you something else: I will go along with the President and with the majority party to the end of the road, however bitter the traveling may be, as long as he travels the road of patriotic endeavor, of national defense. But with him not 1 inch will I go in any endeavor to make over America, from the constitutional form of government founded by our forefathers into a weak and inefficient imitation of the government of a Hitler.

I will travel with him for our liberty, for our independence, for our system of private enterprise, no matter how sharp the curves, how narrow and rocky the way.

But down the broad and easy road of waste, extravagance, and regimentation not willingly will I ever travel.

For the building of ships, of aircraft, national defenses of all kinds, yes, let me repeat, I will support him, as will all other patriotic Americans, so long as hand may be raised or breath may be drawn. But leave and condemn him and refuse to go with him when he attempts to crucify on the cross of his third-term ambition the defenseless youth of our land. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

ALTERATION OF CERTAIN BRIDGES OVER NAVIGABLE WATERS OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] is recognized.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 14 minutes to myself.

On the 10th of this month the President sent a message to the House vetoing the bill H. R. 9381. The principal feature of this bill provides for the apportionment of the cost of alterations of bridges over navigable streams when ordered by the Federal Government through its Secretary of War.

For many years the law has given the Secretary of War the right to order the alteration of bridges over navigable waters where, in his opinion, such bridges obstruct navigation on account of insufficient height, width, or otherwise. The owner is required to make the alterations at his own expense and as required by the specifications of the Secretary of War. The owner fails to comply on penalty of a $5,000 fine, with each month treated as a separate offense.

The order of the Secretary may be based on any navigation reason, regardless of whether there is any important reason for the alteration. When there is a navigation and also other reasons, such as beautification of the bridge, the Secretary may make the order and specify requirements to meet those other reasons, regardless of any benefit to the owner or to transportation, and compel the owner to pay all the costs.

The purpose of this bill was to relieve bridge owners of this harsh rule, which requires owners to alter bridges at their own expense, whether or not they receive any benefit from the alteration, and, in some instances, regardless of whether or not the public receives any benefit from the alteration.

Legislation such as this was recommended by the President's Committee of Six appointed by him to recommend transportation legislation. The principle of this bill was also recommended as sound by the President's Committee of Three, consisting of three outstanding members of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The principle of this bill has been applied throughout the country by the Federal Government for the construction of grade crossings.

We believe the present law sets up a harsh and unjust rule, which should be modified.

The object the law contemplated was solely to aid transportation by navigation. The object of building a bridge over a stream, whether a railway bridge or a highway bridge, was to afford a means of land transportation for the benefit of the public.

The navigable stream is publicly owned; the highway is publicly owned, including its bridges. The railroad is privately owned, but acquires its right to construct the bridge because it serves public transportation. The commercial carrier, whether on the highway or on the river or on the rails, is not publicly owned, but is a privately owned carrier. Transportation, whether on water, highway, or rails is paid for by the shipping public. The public owns the highway, but it does not own the commercial vehicles that haul the freight. The public owns the river, but it does not own the private ship that carries its freight for hire.

A railroad company desires to build a line to transport freight for the public. It gets a permit from the War Department and constructs its bridge to conform to the specifications required by the Secretary of War. The Secretary makes those specifications to meet the needs of vessels using the watercourse. In subsequent years a steamship company comes along and wants to widen the channel or raise the clearance of the bridge, or change its location. The steamship company wants to do that to aid its transportation business, probably as a competitor of the railroad owner of the bridge. The railroad company, by the agent of the Government, is ordered to make whatever alteration is required at an expense of $1,000 or $100,000, without any contribution from anybody benefited by the alteration.

Little regard is paid to the relative amount of water transportation to be accommodated by the alteration.

The bill which passed the House and which the President vetoed, does not relieve the owner of responsibility for alteration of the bridge. It requires that the owner alone pay for these items:

First. For the direct and special benefits to him.

Second. For any benefits he receives due to savings in the repair of the bridge, old or new.

Third. For the maintenance cost of the bridge.

Fourth. He must pay that part of the cost attributable to the requirements of traffic by rail or highway.

Fifth. He must pay the cost due to the increased carrying capacity of the bridge.

Sixth. He must pay for the value of the increased service life of the bridge.

Where the bridge is used for highway purposes, the part of the cost due to the highway traffic is to be borne by the proprietor of the highway.

If the bridge is altered for reasons other than navigation, those interested may be required to pay equitable contributions according to their benefits.

The liability of the United States does not begin until after all the above costs have been provided. The balance of the costs are paid by the United States.

The United States liability is limited to a proportionate part of the cost as guaranteed by the bridge owner. No higher liability shall be assumed except where the Secretary of War agrees to share the excess cost due to an emergency or unforeseen conditions.

The apportionment is made after hearing by the Secretary and his findings are conclusive as to the facts.

The veto message states that this bill would establish a new policy for the United States. That is true. It would be a new policy, but we believe a new policy founded on common sense and justice. Who can write a fairer formula for apportioning the cost of bridges than that set forth in this bill?

The veto message declares:

> Under the new policy which the bill proposes, the bridge owner would be required to bear only such part of the cost of such alterations or changes as may be attributable to the direct and special benefits which accrue to him, as determined by the Secretary of War; and the United States would be required to bear the remainder of the cost.

This statement of the veto message fails to convey adequately the provisions of this bill. The owner must pay for savings in repairs. He must pay the maintenance cost; he must pay the cost attributable to the requirements of traffic by rail or highway, for the increased carrying capacity of the bridge and for the increased service life of the bridge as contrasted with the old structure. The cost of the bridge due to highway traffic is to be borne by the proprietor of the highway.

True, when an applicant applies for a permit for a bridge he takes it with knowledge of the provisions of the existing law. He must build a bridge on that condition or not at all. That fact does not relieve the law of the harshness and injustice of its present application.

The President refers to the fact that the Supreme Court has repeatedly held that the Government has a constitutional right to order the removal of a bridge without compensation and that such removal is not regarded as taking of private property within the meaning of the Constitution. We do not queston that constitutional right. What we question by this bill is the wisdom and justice of the harsh requirements of the present law.

We do not ask a change of the law to conform to the constitutional requirements. We ask a change of the law to be fair and to be just.

The question here today is not whether or not the Constitution permits this; it is not whether or not this thing has been done, but it is a simple question of whether or not it is a just and fair thing to do for the future. Nothing makes for progress if existing ill practices can be justified by previous acquiescence in such practices.

The message states that to require the Government to pay costs of alterations which do not directly benefit the owner would impose heavy financial liabilities. All must concede it is better for the Government to do the right thing than the cheaper thing.

The present rule grew out of the days when railroads were symbolized as organized aggressive wealth, using their powers to oppress the public. In recent years 50 percent of the railroads in the United States have been running without profit to their owners. Thousands of miles have been abandoned. Nearly one-third of the mileage of the United States is now in the possession of the courts for inability to pay expenses. The industry is threatened with bankruptcies that may lead to further elimination of lines on a large scale. This is a time when in the interest of the people of the United States we can at least afford to be fair to railway as well as highway bridges.

The rule requiring these bankrupt railroads to pay all costs of alterations of bridges regardless of benefits does not fit into the practical picture of this hour.

It requires a two-thirds vote of each House of Congress to overcome a Presidential veto. In other words, a veto renders Congress impotent against one-third of its membership. Exercised with caution and restraint, the veto power is a wholesome feature of the Government. It is properly used in those cases where Congress has acted inadvertently or clearly abused its power. In popular forms of Government the rule of the majority exercised with reasonable intelligence and patriotism is a fundamental principle for the exercise of power. An indiscriminate or improvident invasion of the rightful power of Congress by unwarranted vetoes is in conflict with the best interests of popular government.

I have observed the exercise of the veto power under five Presidents. As a usual thing I have regarded the power as properly used. In some instances I have regarded vetoes as founded on misinformation, or lack of understanding of the problem involved, and the exercise of the power unwarranted. Too frequently the veto power rests on ex parte information hurriedly presented to the President by departments of the Government; sometimes the information is tinged by the pique or incomprehensive viewpoints of executive departments. If open hearings were practicable and possible, it is likely mistaken grounds for vetoes would be eliminated to a larger degree. This very situation emphasizes the duty of vigilance on the part of Congress in refusal to acquiesce in vetoes that transgress its rightful functions.

When the veto power was conferred upon the President there was in the United States no political parties as we know them today. The veto power was written into the Constitution on the belief there would be an untrammeled judgment of Congress to pass upon the wisdom or unwisdom of the veto. When in later decades political parties developed and threw the force of party support to support vetoes on partisan grounds regardless of merits, the situation invited the Executive into more indiscriminate use of vetoes, to the relative debasement of Congress as one of the coordinate branches of the Government.

Before we hastily rush to sustain vetoes of doubtful merit, we should exercise that caution worthy of those who comprehend their serious responsibilities to preserve the responsibilities and prerogatives of Congress, unimpaired, as a great independent, coordinate branch of this Republic.

Mr. SPENCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. The State of Kentucky has purchased nine bridges, I think, over navigable streams. It paid for those bridges by issuing revenue bonds against the tolls that are collected. Many of those bridges will be free in a few years. A great many of them are almost paid for now. I want to know what effect the law, as it now exists, has upon those bridges. Can the National Government order a change in those bridges and place the entire burden upon the State of Kentucky?

Mr. LEA. It can.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES].

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I do not know as I can add a great deal to what the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce has said. For 8 years it has been my privilege to serve on the bridge subcommittee of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House. May I recall to the attention of the older Members the fact that years ago there was considerable trouble in this House in passing bridge bills. May I make the further observation that bills authorizing a community to build a bridge over navigable streams are usually introduced by a Member of the House or Senate. These bills must have the approval of the Secretary of War and the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture formerly, but now requires the approval of the Department of Public Works. In accordance with the Bridge Act passed in 1906.

The bill now pending before us was given very serious consideration and every phase and angle of the law was gone into very, very thoroughly. As a matter of fact, when the original bill was approved it was passed unanimously by the House and Senate, then the President vetoed it because there was some objectionable language in the bill. When we reported the transportation bill, S. 2009, we incorporated in that legislation the identical bill which had been vetoed by the President. When the conferees, in considering various portions of the Transportation Act, came to the bridge section, we received word it was objectionable.

The conferees decided to take the provision out of the transportation bill and after conference, as I understand it from Senator TRUMAN, of Missouri, and our genial colleague the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], the objectionable language was so changed that we were given to understand the legislation as amended would meet with the President's approval.

The implication is made here that the burden of the reconstruction cost is going to be placed on the United States. Let us examine the definitions of a bridge owner.

> The term "bridge owner" means any corporation, association, partnership, or individual owning any bridge, and, when any bridge shall be in the possession or under the control of any trustee, receiver, trustee in bankruptcy, or lessee, said terms shall include both the owner of the legal title and the person or entity in possession or control of such bridge.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMES. The definition continues—

> The term "bridge owner" shall also mean and include all joint owners, particularly States, counties, municipalities, or other participants in ownership of bridges for both railroad and highway traffic.

When we consider section 6, where the question of apportionment of cost enters into the picture, we find this language:

> The Secretary shall determine and issue an order specifying the proportionate shares of the total cost of the project to be borne by the United States and by the bridge owner. * * * The bridge owner shall bear such part of the cost as is attributable to the direct and special benefits which will accrue to the bridge owner as a result of the alteration, including the expectable savings in repair or maintenance costs.

In other words, under this legislation if the Secretary of War is allocating costs he is adopting the same principles that your State and my State have adopted when we say to two communities, "You can build a highway bridge over a certain lake or river joining two communities." Your State law usually provides that in distributing the cost they first apportion the cost to the communities involved, and then the State assumes that portion which may be applied to highway construction. It is the same in this case. We are trying to legislate in such a way that because a bridge is obstructing a navigable stream the whole burden of reconstruction will not be placed on the owner, but that the communities adjacent thereto, which also have a primary interest in it, will bear their proportionate share of the cost of that reconstruction. [Applause.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, about 15 years ago I took a very active interest in bridge legislation. I made a study of the law and came to the conclusion that Congress was making a serious mistake in granting franchises to private individuals to build toll bridges over navigable streams. I started a campaign against such bills. On the first roll call that I forced in this House only 12 Members voted with me, but I kept up that campaign and finally a policy was adopted by this House which stopped forever, I hope, the granting of franchises to private individuals to build toll bridges.

In reference to this bill, which the President vetoed, there has never been a roll call on this legislation.

There is a rather unusual procedure involved here today. This veto message came in late in the evening, a week or so ago, and the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] asked unanimous consent to put the vote off. Later he again asked unanimous consent to delay the vote until today. In the meantime, you as well as I have been flooded with propaganda from private interests, railroads, and so forth, that want this bill to become a law so they can saddle the cost of necessary alterations upon the taxpayers of this country. This propaganda has had no effect upon me. I so advised those who wired me. I am going to vote to sustain the President's veto. I believe his reasons for returning this bill without his approval are sound. Why should the taxpayers of this country be required to make alterations for bridges over navigable streams when the General Bridge Act and the franchises granting permission to construct such bridges specifically provided that in the event alterations were necessary the owners would have to bear the cost? You are simply repealing a part of the many laws that have been passed granting permission to construct such bridges.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. The gentleman speaks about propaganda. I thought I got all the propaganda that was coming, but I have not received anything on this subject—not one letter.

Mr. COCHRAN. I have had plenty. Come to my office and see. I have had telegrams from railroads and others, not only from St. Louis but from over the country.

If you study this legislation, you will see that the financial benefits are going to a few, and you are going to make the many, your constituents and mine, pay for alterations on private property when they are not going to receive any benefits whatever for the money that will be expended. Our streams are being continually deepened. Some that are not navigable are made navigable. Those who constructed the bridges understood that if it was necessary, for instance, to have a higher clearance, the people who owned the bridges were going to be required to pay the cost. I say, Mr. Speaker, it would be an outrage to saddle the cost under this proposal upon the taxpayers of this country who, I insist, will not receive any benefits.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMES. May I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that for every private bridge there are 10, 15, or 20 bridges owned by the municipalities, counties, and States that will receive the benefit of this legislation?

Mr. COCHRAN. Let me ask the gentleman if he wants the sovereign States to turn everything over to the Federal Government and let the Federal Government pay all their bills?

Mr. HOLMES. I want to answer the gentleman in this way. No; this does not do that.

Mr. COCHRAN. No; it does not. Well, read it carefully.

Mr. HOLMES. But it does protect the community that has an authorization to build a bridge between two communities or two States from the Federal Government's coming in there and telling them to tear it down and rebuild it, and shoulder the burden of all that expense onto the local taxpayers of the two States.

Mr. COCHRAN. And if the gentleman will read the franchise under which most of the bridges have been constructed, he will find a provision there and also in the Bridge Act of 1906, which specifically states if you are impeding navigation and alterations are necessary, you must pay the cost of the alterations and not the Federal Government. So, if they did not have a proper clearance or build a proper bridge when it was originally constructed, they should bear the cost now of making the improvements that the War Department states are necessary so navigation will not be impeded.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman has stated that he has spent a good many years investigating this problem. In his investigations, has he any statistics or facts to show what the prospective cost might be to the Government if this legislation is enacted, based upon what may be expected in the shape of repairs and alterations?

Mr. COCHRAN. I have been told unofficially by an officer of the Engineer Corps that the initial cost, with respect to bridges that should be altered now, would be around $15,000,000 or $20,000,000.

It will be the taxpayers who must provide the money. Still, if it is a railroad or a toll bridge the same taxpayers must pay the railroad to ride over the bridge or the toll to cross it on foot or in an automobile.

In my judgment this House should sustain the President's veto.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, about 15 years ago I served on the city council, as a commissioner in my city, and in the course of that tenure we built a bridge over the Illinois River. There was some difficulty in getting the money, and one of the things we did was to assess the railroads for a portion of the cost of that bridge. They received exactly no benefit, and I could find no damage suit lodged against the railroad at any time by virtue of the fact that they maintained no grade separation, but they were penalized to the extent of about $30,000 and received absolutely no benefits. The bridge cost a good deal more than it otherwise would for the reason that the War Department came along and said that a bridge with a clearance height over the Illinois River shall be 66 feet above low-water level. The chances are that that provision added many thousand dollars to the cost of that bridge.

Now, I maintain, out of the personal experience I have had in this matter, that it would be unfair to assess a railroad, for instance, if they received no benefit. It would be unfair to tax the municipality, too, if they did not receive a benefit, and if a bridge is necessary, and if the War Department says to a municipality or a State, "This is the kind of bridge you must build, this is the clearance height you must maintain," then certainly in all equity and good conscience it is fair to apportion properly the total cost on an equitable basis and assess everybody accordingly.

This is the tenor of the bill that is pending today, and I propose to vote to override the veto. [Applause.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I just want to record myself in favor of this bill. I think that it corrects a mistake that was made years ago and regardless of who the individuals are or the States or the cities that benefit, I think it is simple justice that we pass this bill over the President's veto.

I want to add to the word of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS], I have had just one communication on this subject. I do not know where all of the mail to the gentleman from Missouri has come from, but, certainly, it has not come from my part of the country.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I am glad at this time to be able to say a positive word in behalf of the railroads. [Applause.] I think their rights are definitely and unfairly invaded under the present law and this legislation offers a positive cure in the situation.

The legal doctrine which the President cites in the message seems to me to be unsound in the present instance, and the operation of the common law places an undue burden upon the railroads. I am more or less familiar with this procedure, having seen it pass through the Rivers and Harbors Committee for many years. It is my judgment and the judgment of a majority of the members of that committee that this legislation is timely, sound, and will correct an economic wrong that is being done to the railroads.

I urge that the House override the President's veto. [Applause.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, according to my judgment, this is a very just bill. It merely proposes that the parties immediately affected by the replacement or renewal of a bridge shall make payment according to the benefits received by them as a result of such change. The parties directly interested in any of these bridge improvements or replacements would, under the terms of the bill, pay toward its cost just to the extent that they may receive benefits. If anything is equitable, that is most equitable. I can see no just ground for opposition to the bill. The fact that heretofore the law provided otherwise is, to my mind, not a sound objection. Most of the laws enacted are adopted in lieu of law in effect prior to such enactment. If the law is unjust, we should always try to correct it. To say that a contrary law is now in effect is no sound reason for opposing the present bill. If existing law is wrong, that is why it should be replaced. That is the reason for the pending bill. I sincerely trust that the Members of the House will vote to pass the measure. [Applause.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, years ago many of us from Illinois, especially from the city of Chicago, endeavored to secure some relief when the city of Chicago was by the War Department ordered to build new bridges at a cost of about $30,000,000. At that time the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce did not see fit to effect any such relief legislation; but today we have a bill that will cost the Government millions of dollars, and will relieve the railroads and other private corporations from their responsibility, which they pledged when permits were granted to build these bridges across the navigable streams of the United States. I think this Congress as well as the subdivisions of government have done a great deal more than their share for the railroads in the last few years. We have built most of their viaducts and underpasses; we have even paved alongside their rights-of-way at grade crossings; and I venture to say that if the real figures could be had, they would show that the Government has expended to help the railroads in this connection to the extent of millions upon millions; and today, they come here and ask the Government for further relief and that the Government assume the financial responsibility. I regret that this was called to my attention only a few moments ago, and I therefore cannot give the real facts and figures to the House; but I am satisfied that if the Members had these figures and fully realized the potential cost to the Government they would hesitate long before voting to override the veto of the President.

Under the new policy, when a bridge is to be altered, the owner of the bridge would be required to pay only such part of the cost of alteration as is attributable to the direct and special benefits which will accrue to the bridge owner as a result of the alteration, including the expectable savings or maintenance costs, and that part of the cost attributable to the requirements of traffic by railroad or highway, or both, including any expenditure for increased carrying capacity of the bridge. That is, an undue amount of the cost of these alterations would be borne by the Government. I think the railroads and the private owners are the greatest direct beneficiaries and that they should be made to stand the cost of any expenditure that may be required due to the plans to alter their facilities. The Government of the United States has gone far enough to aid the railroads. Oh, I concede the argument of the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] that the railroads are in bad shape; but we are not responsible for that condition. Congress has been generously aiding the railroads for many years. Congress appropriated more than $2,000,000,000 to rehabilitate the railroads during the war, and as soon as that money was expended the railroads found it expedient to urge that the Government relinquish any supervision of management, so that presidents of the railroads might again draw $100,000, $120,000, or $150,000 a year each and the vice presidents fifty to seventy-five thousand dollars a year each. That is quite largely where the money has gone; where it has been expended. We have these unconscionable salaries and poor management; and why should the Government be called upon continuously to assist the railroads that have failed completely to manage the affairs of the various lines in accordance with their pledges of efficiency and economy to the stockholders and bondholders?

Mr. Speaker, it is amazing to what extent the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has gone to urge its members to vote, as I understand, as a unit to override the President's veto. And it is still more strange to witness many Democrats working in collaboration with the Republicans who day after day have criticized the administration's spending, and at the same time they may at every opportunity be found voting for amendments that increase the cost of pending bills by many millions.

It is rumored around here that the railroad lobbyists claim to have enough votes to override the Presidential veto. That condition, if true, is unfortunate; but I shall vote to sustain the President, who is trying to hold down expenditures in these trying days, in his veto.

I feel that during these unfortunate and anxious days, when tremendous sums are actually needed for national defense, it is regrettable that so many fail to appreciate the situation. I myself feel that the President's veto should be sustained and that a vote to override it cannot by sound logic be justified by anybody.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I particularly appeal to my Democratic colleagues to sustain the veto. When you override the veto of an Executive, you hurt hard, you cut deep. I know what it means, and I beg of my Democratic friends to vote to sustain the President. These are no idle words of his. He has stated clearly and plainly why he has vetoed the bill. Those words have been read from the Clerk's desk. There is no necessity of repeating them. The railroads were given the right to cross the rivers by the Congress, and it was provided that if there were changes required, they would make them at the expense of the railroads. Why override the President's veto? I can see why our friends on the left will do so, but I beg of my Democratic friends to sustain the President.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I have one more speaker, and at the conclusion of his address I shall move the previous question. I yield the remainder of my time, with the exception of 1 minute, to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 16 minutes.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I will be delighted to answer the question of the gentleman from Oregon, Governor PIERCE, and these other gentlemen who have preceded me: Why should we pass this bill, the veto notwithstanding?

The President's veto is based upon an erroneous premise that the act of 1906 "has been a condition precedent to the construction of bridges over the navigable waters of the United States and the owners are fully apprised of the condition before the construction work is undertaken." I do not know a single railroad bridge—if you forget everything else I say, please hear me now—I do not know a single railroad bridge which will be affected by this act which was not built before the act of 1906 was ever thought of. I do not know a bridge that is being required to be remodeled or that ever has been, which is not more than 50 years old.

Every one of them that I know anything about, and I have diligently inquired and have in my files reports on every one in the United States, I think. I solemnly tell you that, in spite of the propaganda which has been spread, there is not a bridge which, in my deliberate judgment, will be affected by the operation of this act which was not built at least 20 years before the act of 1906 was passed. That fact kills the predicate of the President's veto, that the bridges were built with full knowledge of the act of 1906. I want to repeat that, because I want you to get it. I do not know of a bridge in question which was not built 20 years before the act of 1906.

The President, in vetoing any bill, is exercising his constitutional power. It is equally within the constitutional power of this House to pass the bill, the President's veto notwithstanding. Both are in exact accord with the Constitution of the United States, and in exercising that power we are but performing the legislative duty that the Constitution of the United States contemplates and authorizes.

This is no dictatorship. The President has said repeatedly, and I know he means it, that he does not want to override Congress or usurp its functions. He has a perfect right to veto any bill. We have a perfect right equally, derived from the same source, to pass it over his veto after we consider his reasons. I am sure we all have fully considered his reasons, and now, in the friendliest possible spirit, we are going to disagree most respectfully.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I will be happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. The gentleman stated that the bridges which would be affected are practically all bridges built prior to 1906?

Mr. HOBBS. That is right.

Mr. LEAVY. But if a bridge were built prior to 1906 and it had just simply become worn out and had to be replaced, as I understand the bill, that would not involve any obligation on the part of the Government?

Mr. HOBBS. Oh, certainly not.

Mr. LEAVY. Only in the case where specifications were changed by the Government?

Mr. HOBBS. That is right because of the needs of navigation.

Now, I must hurry on. The propagandists against this bill are saying that this bill is in the interest of the railroads, and that it is a railroad bill. I say categorically that is not so. Some people have said that it was a bill in the interest of the waterways, so that they could have the increased clearances they need. That is not so. It is a bill in the interest of both the railroads and the waterways, but mainly in the interest of the general public, particularly railway labor. Please permit me to tell you how this bill originated in my mind.

Eight years ago a barge of the Inland Waterways Corporation, paying no attention whatsoever to the signs all around, ran down the Tombigbee River at flood stage and knocked down one span of an interstate carrier's bridge—the Southern Railway Co.—between Selma, Ala., my home town, and Meridian, Miss.

The railroad company made arrangements to pick up that span and put it in the place it had formerly occupied. The Army engineers said, "No; you cannot do that." And for 8 years we have not had a train run on that line from Selma to Meridian. For 8 years conductors, flagmen, engineers, and firemen on that interstate-commerce line have not made a run. It took those train crews off of the pay roll in my home town. It took 18 men at one time out of the shops in my home town. The Southern Railway shops in Selma has the biggest pay roll in that town. They are killing it. Now they have dropped down 125 miles and are "picking on" another old bridge at Jackson, Ala. Neither of those bridges was in my district, but it is killing the shops in my home town, and the biggest pay roll we have.

Now, here is the joke of it. The Southern Railway Co., that operates from Selma to Mobile, the most needed line in our section for national defense, coming right out of the heart of the steel and iron district in Dixie, straight to the only port Alabama has—and it is developed and is a good one—that line was ordered to replace the bridge at Jackson, Ala. The Southern Railway Co. does not even own the line. It does not own the bridge.

It has no interest in it; it leases it from a British syndicate; and because of losses incurred for 12 years in the operation of that division they have been suing for years to cancel the lease, and the British syndicate will not permit it. The order of the Army engineers to tear down that bridge and build a new one might mean they would be permitted by the Interstate Commerce Commission to abandon it, and abandoning the bridge means abandoning the line. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link. A railroad is no better than its bridges.

With the problem of national defense pressing upon us every minute for consideration, I am saying to you that it does not do much good to manufacture guns and ammunition unless you have the means of transportation. Both waterways and railways are necessary to the public good. We cannot possibly keep men at work if we are going to put them out of work.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am always happy to yield to my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. Was not the bill that is under consideration now drafted specifically to meet the objections that were made to a similar bill of a year or two ago?

Mr. HOBBS. A bill of 1 year ago which was vetoed after Congress adjourned. In answer to that question I want, if I may, to read again to the House the letter which Senator TRUMAN wrote to the gentleman from Kentucky, the Honorable VIRGIL CHAPMAN, chairman of the subcommittee on bridges of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee:

> DEAR MR. CHAPMAN: While I may not, because of the rule of protocol against quoting the President, state exactly what he said to me, yet I may with propriety certify the clear understanding I gained from a personal interview with the President.
> Therefore I certify H. R. 9381 is in complete and perfect accord with my clear understanding, so gained, of the wishes of the President with respect to that legislation.
> H. R. 9381 is essentially the same bill passed by the Senate and the House last year in which have been incorporated amendments that I am sure will make it acceptable to the President.
> Sincerely yours,
> HARRY S. TRUMAN.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes; I am delighted to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The instance of the bridge across the Tombigbee River mentioned by the gentleman is one example of where it has interfered not only with a large number of commercial activities and transportation, but it might become an important factor in the national-defense program in the transportation of troops, material, and so on.

Mr. HOBBS. Of course, that is so, and I thank the gentleman for the contribution. Now, let me tell you something else: If the Jackson railway bridge is abandoned, it will leave 14 counties, most of them in the district of the gentleman from Alabama, FRANK BOYKIN, utterly without any rail service whatsoever. None of them is in my district, but they are killing the railroad shops in Selma, my home town, and it is the biggest pay roll there.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. SPENCE. Is there an appeal from the decision of the Secretary of War?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPENCE. Would not that, therefore, assure the Government's interest being treated fairly?

Mr. HOBBS. Of course, no Secretary of War is ever going to treat the Government unfairly.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOBBS. Certainly.

Mr. DONDERO. Has the gentleman discussed the equities of the case as yet?

Mr. HOBBS. I am going to do that right away.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Gladly.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The gentleman is familiar with the bridge across the Potomac here in Washington. The Army engineers recommend a new bridge so that it may compare with the Arlington Bridge, yet the present bridge is adequate to handle the railroad business.

Mr. HOBBS. And every other bridge must be maintained under the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission in perfectly serviceable condition to serve the needs of the railroads.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The gentleman spoke of a bridge across the Tombigbee River being owned by a British syndicate.

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I presume that if the bridge is renewed or lifted to aid navigation that the Government would pay for it and that it would still belong to the British syndicate. Is that right?

Mr. HOBBS. In no case is the Government required to pay more than a small part of the cost, but your conclusion is true, and I make no apology for the fact. We ought to treat every investor who puts his money in this country fairly; and this bill is essentially fair and equitable.

Before I explain the bill very briefly—and I hesitate to do so in view of the clear, fine, fair presentation which has been made by the distinguished chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House—I want to tell you who is for this bill. Before I drafted it originally I went to every one of the 21 railway brotherhoods in this country and submitted my ideas to them and got their approval. I have never consulted with any railroad, of course, because I knew they would be for it. The brotherhoods tell me that the situation as it exists is killing jobs and adding to the unemployment problem, and therefore they are cordially for this bill.

Second, the President appointed a committee of six to study the transportation problem as a whole, a committee composed of two representatives of management, two of labor, and two of the public. This committee unanimously recommended the relief given in this bill. Every Member of Congress in both Houses has voted for it twice. Both the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House and two committees of the Senate have given it the closest kind of scrutiny, under a magnifying glass, and have said it is O. K. We have now amended it in accordance with the suggestion of the President; incorporated three amendments he asked be incorporated. I am sure this bill would never have been vetoed had it not been for his engrossment in foreign affairs.

Now, let us look at the bill. What does it do? Mind you, it applies to no bridge that was not built before the act of 1906, so far as I know. It says that whenever the needs of navigation require, the War Department shall have full and plenary power to order the remodeling, relocation, or rebuilding of any railroad bridge crossing a navigable stream, but it may do so only after a hearing has been held and the necessities of the case studied. Then if the War Department concludes, after fair and full hearings and after due notice, that improvement is necessary, then it shall so order.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, this bill requires that there should be charged up against the railroad all the benefits that flow to the railroad company from the improvement, and, having charged up to the railroad company specifically the value of the use that they have had of the old bridge, having charged up to the railroad company the expected savings in maintenance and repairs, having charged to the railroad company the increase in the capacity of the new bridge, enabling the railroad to haul heavier loads, this bill requires the Government to pay the remainder of the cost.

The Government subsidizes the waterways because of national need. The alterations ordered are needed for the improvement of navigation and, therefore, benefit the Government. There is no reason why the Government should not pay for the benefits it so receives.

With the sincerest admiration for our great President, with genuine regret that agreement with him on this point is impossible, I beg you to serve national defense, relieve unemployment, be fair to the railways, and, therefore, pass this perfectly meritorious bill over his veto.

Let me give you as concisely as possible, five reasons for an "aye" vote:

First. National defense cannot be made adequate without adequate rail and water ways.

The United States is a land of vast distances. No one can predict where there may be need to concentrate men, munitions, and war matériel.

From time to time the place for such concentration may shift.

No matter how many tanks and guns, no matter how much ammunition we may manufacture, we must be prepared to haul them where we want them when we want them.

A railroad is no better than its bridges.

A waterway is no better than its clearances.

Second. Neither can peacetime transportation service be adequate without adequate rail and water ways.

Third. Railways are no longer able to build bridges to serve, not only their own needs, but also the expanding needs of their competing carriers, the waterways.

The situation of the railways presents a serious problem, as everybody familiar with the subject admits. Looking at the figures for the past 5 years, it appears that with the exception of the year 1935, the railroads have never earned as much as 2 percent upon their investment. In 1938, after payment of fixed charges, there was a deficit of $123,000,000, which may be compared with an income in 1930 of $524,000,000. It is true that conditions were somewhat improved in 1939, when there was a net income after fixed charges had been paid of $95,000,000.

On the whole, however, the situation of the railroads was well expressed by President Roosevelt in his Salt Lake City speech, made on September 17, 1932, when he said:

> Now, there is no reason to disguise the fact that the railways as a whole are in serious difficulty.

I may call attention also to the statement made by the President in that same speech, devoted as it was to the railroad question, where he said:

> The problem of the railroads is the problem of each and every one of us. No single economic activity enters into the life of every individual as much as do these great carriers.

The situation is further illustrated by the fact that at the present time 109 railroad companies of all classes are undergoing reorganization, either through the process of receivership or bankruptcy. These 109 companies operate 77,414 miles of railroad or 31 percent of the total railway mileage of the country.

The situation of the railroads, particularly with respect to impaired railroad credit, was such that the President of the United States, in the spring of 1938, appointed a special committee, composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, a representative of the Department of Commerce, the Administrator of the Farm Security organization, a representative of the Security Owners Association, a representative of railroad management, a representative of railroad labor, and three members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to make a study of the transportation problem, particularly as it affected railroads.

In the message delivered to the Congress by the President, bearing date of April 11, 1938, in transmitting to Congress the recommendations of this committee, the President referred to the fact that the problem of railroad transportation had become increasingly difficult. In the report made to the President and by the President transmitted to Congress, the three members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as shown by House Document No. 583, Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, fully recognized the serious situation of the railroads, saying, among other things:

> The continuing decline in the spread between revenues and expenses, along with the current loss of traffic, have, generally speaking, resulted in the destruction of railroad credit. Few railroads are in a position to borrow. With earnings so largely consumed in paying operating expenses, taxes, and other obligations, little is available for improving plant no matter how necessary such improvements may be. The railroad plant, especially its equipment, is constantly wearing out or becoming obsolete. Efficient operation requires constant renewal and replacement. To the extent such renewal and replacement are impeded, transportation efficiency is lessened and cost is increased.

In the fall of 1938, after the railroads had been defeated in their effort to secure a decrease in the wage rate, the President appointed a committee of six persons connected with the railroad industry, three of these being railroad presidents and three being railroad labor executives. In making this appointment, the President is quoted by the New York Herald Tribune as saying, at a press conference on Septeber 20, 1938, in substance that the question of wage reduction is subordinate for the time being to the broad question of railroad rehabilitation. He pointed out that he had made recommendations for railroad rehabilitation at the last session of Congress, but that Congress had adjourned without enacting any laws helpful to the railroads, one-third of which are already in bankruptcy. It is a well-known fact that the President requested this Committee of Six to bring forward recommendations which would represent a forward step in the matter of railroad rehabilitation.

The Committee of Six, after very careful consideration of all factors entering into the problem, made a series of concrete recommendations, one of which had to do with the reconstruction of bridges and other facilities. The language of the Committee in summarizing its recommendation was:

> Adoption of policy that whenever, in connection with the improvement of navigable waters * * * a railroad is required to alter or reconstruct bridges or other facilities, it be reimbursed by the Government for all costs in excess of any direct benefit accruing to it.

This recommendation went to the President under date of December 23, 1938.

In the hearings which were had on a bill which is substantially the same as H. R. 9381, held by a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Commerce on May 17, 1939, a table was introduced showing that certain railroads shown in the table, over a period of years, had expended $48,209,756 in rebuilding and relocating bridges at the command of the Federal Government. The table further showed that of this amount, $28,480,267 was expended for the improvement of navigation and $17,890,528 was expended for the improvement of railroad facilities. In other words, in the period of years covered by the table, the railroads have been called upon to pay practically $28,500,000 to improve water transportation, without any benefit whatever to the facilities of the railroads from the viewpoint of railroad transportation.

It is only necessary to call attention to the extended hearings held by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, extending from January 24, 1939, to March 30, 1939, to understand the serious situation of the railroads and the necessity for giving relief wherever that can be done without sacrifice of the public interest. Particular attention may be called to the testimony of Commissioner Splawn and to the tables which he there introduced, showing that for the first 11 months of 1938 the class I railroads of the country incurred a deficit of $145,277,364, and that among the deficit railroads in that period were such important lines as the Atlantic Coast Line; Baltimore & Ohio; Boston & Maine; Chicago & North Western; Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific; Missouri Pacific; New York Central; New York, New Haven & Hartford; Northern Pacific; Pere Marquette; St. Louis-San Francisco; Seaboard Air Line; Southern Railway; Southern Pacific; and many others which could be mentioned. As stated previously, the 1939 showing is a little better, but the conditions which brought about the improvement were attributable to a stimulated and temporary improvement, due to war conditions abroad.

Fourth. H. R. 9381, the Truman-Hobbs bill, simply faces these facts and provides the only practical remedy.

There is no question but that the Army engineers have the power to order the repair, remodeling, improvement, relocation, or rebuilding of any railroad bridge across a navigable stream, if the needs of navigation so require.

This bill simply requires that in the exercise of this power, a hearing be given to interested parties and that the Army engineers shall ascertain the equities in the event they find it necessary to order the improvement of a railway bridge.

In such event the bill requires the Army engineers to charge the bridge owner with—

> Such part of the cost of the improvement as is attributable to the direct and special benefits which will accrue to the bridge owner as a result of the alteration, including the expectable savings in repair or maintenance costs. And that part of the cost attributable to the requirements of traffic by railroad or highway, or both, including any expenditure for increased carrying capacity of the bridge, and including such proportion of the actual capital cost of the old bridge or of such part of the old bridge as may be altered or changed or rebuilt, as the used service life of the whole or a part, as the case may be, bears to the total estimated service life of the whole or such part.

The United States is required to bear "the balance of the cost, including that part attributable to the necessities of navigation."

Of course, other contingencies are provided for. The benefits to any highways must be borne by the proprietor of the highway. Where a relocation or alteration is desirable from the standpoint of the owner of a park, for instance, the park owner is required to participate in defraying the expense.

Essentially, the bill is sound, fair, and altogether equitable. It charges every proper element of cost against the railways which should be borne by them. The Government is required to bear whatever the residue of cost may be after all the deductions have been made. Bear in mind, the basis of the order for the improvement is the needs of navigation. Therefore, since a perfectly good railroad bridge, adequately serving railway needs, is to be remodeled solely because of the needs of the competing carrier, it is manifest that navigation should be taxed with an equitable share of the cost.

Whatever this equitable share may be is left to determination of the Army engineers. This is fair. The Nation gets the benefit both for peacetime service and for national defense. The Nation should be willing to pay what its own Army engineers certify to be equitable.

Fifth. The bill is the product of 4 years' hard work.

The authors, the Interstate Commerce Committees of both House and Senate, and their experts, after full hearings upon every phase of the transportation problem, many consultations with competent advisers, have produced a bill which has no "bugs" in it.

A very similar bill was passed by both Houses of Congress last year, but was vetoed by the President after Congress adjourned.

This year the President suggested certain amendments. These have been included in the present bill, and are as follows:

> Page 2, lines 11 to 14: "The term 'bridge owner' shall also mean and include all joint owners, particularly States, counties, municipalities, or other participants in ownership of bridges for both railroad and highway traffic."
> Page 5, lines 21 and 22: "including the expectable savings in repair or maintenance costs;".
> Page 6, lines 5 to 17: "Provided, That the part of the cost of alteration of any bridge for both highway and railroad traffic, attributable to the requirements of traffic by highway, shall be borne by the proprietor of the highway: Provided further, That in the event the alteration or relocation of any bridge may be desirable for the reason that the bridge unreasonably obstructs navigation, but also for some other reason, the Secretary may require equitable contribution from any interested person, firm, association, corporation, municipality, county, or State desiring such alteration or relocation for such other reason, as a condition precedent to the making of an order for such alteration or relocation."

This bill, as its preceding version, follows the philosophy set forth by the Supreme Court of the United States in its decision in the case of N. C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Walters (294 U. S. 405), relating to the analogous problem arising there in the elimination of grade crossings. There is no distinction in principle between the equities arising from the elimination of a grade crossing where a highway intersects a railway, and the equities arising from the improvement of a railway bridge which crosses a navigable stream. Hence the application of the philosophy of the Walters case to the problem sought to be equitably solved by this bill.

The Walters case was one attacking a statute of a State—Tennessee—which imposed upon the railway company one-half of the cost of obviating a grade crossing. It was claimed, quite properly, that the elimination of grade crossings was a safety measure protecting both the travelers on the highway and also on the railway, hence was valid because of the unlimited police power of a sovereign State.

But the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Mr. Justice Brandeis, held:

> The police power is subject to the constitutional limitation that it may not be exerted arbitrarily or unreasonably.
> The power in a State to require a railroad company to bear expenses of separating the grades of the railway and a new highway at crossing is not absolute, but is subject to the due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment; and it does not exist in the particular case if, upon the facts of that case, the exaction would be unreasonable or arbitrary.
> Far from being a feeder of railway traffic, it—the underpass—would add to the motor competition from which the railway had already suffered severely; and that the tax burden upon the railway was already excessive, as compared with that upon the owners of motor vehicles who would use the highway as its competitors.

If, therefore, the Supreme Court of the United States held, as it did, that a Tennessee statute was void which imposed only one-half of the cost of an underpass, the construction of which was ordered by a sovereign State in the exercise of its police power, how much less of equity has the Federal Government?

There are at least 11 reasons why the State's case was stronger than the case of the Federal Government:

First. The Federal Government has no police powers, save one—to maintain itself. All the others were expressly reserved to the States.

Second. The imposition by the Federal Government is not, as was the States, for the benefit of the railroad company at all, but merely for the benefit of a competing carrier, the waterway.

Third. The power to regulate interstate commerce is the only basis upon which the right of the Federal Government to order the alteration of a railway bridge can be predicated and only then because of the needs of navigation.

Fourth. Most of the railway bridges which would be affected by this act were erected under permit of the Federal Government—usually they were built in accordance with plans and specifications either prepared or approved by the Federal Government; whereas the State did nothing of the kind with respect to the railway the State ordered to pay one-half of the cost of an underpass.

Fifth. Every one of the bridges which would be affected by this act is perfectly serviceable and satisfactory for all railway purposes.

Railways are required by law, as well as for their own protection, to maintain their bridges in first-class condition.

Sixth. This taking of private property—money—from the railways, without just compensation (in fact, without any compensation), is only permitted on the tenuous theory of regulating water-borne commerce.

Seventh. But, taken in conjunction with the burdens of taxation—on the railways heavy, on the waterways none—and the systems of regulation to which the railways and their competitors are subject, such an exaction amounts to a denial of equal protection of the laws and discriminates against and burdens interstate commerce.

Eighth. The power to regulate is not the power to kill.

Regulation presupposes the continuity of the traffic regulated—not its destruction.

Ninth. Assessments for public improvements are ordinarily constitutional only if based on benefits to the property assessed.

Tenth. The State only sought to impose on the railway company one-half of the cost of the alteration; the Federal Government has been imposing all of the cost.

Eleventh. So far as I have been able to ascertain—and I have made diligent research—most, if not all, of the bridges which would be affected by this act were built long before the act of March 23, 1906; yet the President, in his message of June 10, 1940, returning the bill H. R. 9381 without his approval, makes this statement as the basis of his veto:

> As was stated in my memorandum of disapproval of S. 1989, the General Bridge Act of March 23, 1906, authorizes the Secretary of War to require the alteration of any bridge which, in his opinion, may at any time unreasonably obstruct navigation, the cost of such alteration to be borne entirely by the owner. This has been a condition precedent to the construction of bridges over the navigable waters of the United States and the owners are fully apprised of the condition before the construction work is undertaken.

The proponents of the bill are clearly convinced that there will not be any great cost entailed upon the Government by making this bill law. The railroads have already, under the orders of the Army engineers, rebuilt or altered a considerable number of the bridges which might otherwise come within its purview. The railroads have already thus expended over $28,000,000 for the improvement of navigation out of a total of $48,000,000 they were compelled thus to expend. There should not be a great many more of similar expenditures to be required. But whether much or little, the Government cannot be required under this bill to pay 1 cent until it has been certified, after full hearing, by its own Army engineers, that the Government's contribution is necessary for the improvement of navigation.

This bill will not cost the Government a cent unless the Government's expenditure is both necessary and right. If any expenditure meets this criterion it should be made.

We know how exceedingly engrossed in foreign affairs the President is. We have no criticism of his vetoes of this bill. We know that other things are uppermost in his mind. But we sincerely believe that this bill will militate to the distinct advantage of the national defense which is at this time the preeminent consideration of every American. [Applause.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, agree to pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 324, nays 68, not voting 39, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate and amendments of the House to certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 41, 42, and 60.

Amendment numbered 44: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 95: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 99: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by the Senate amendment as amended by the House insert the following:

"Loans: For loans in accordance with title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006), $50,000,000, which sum shall be borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at an interest rate of 3 per centum per annum and which sum shall not be used for making loans under the terms of said Act for the purchase of farms of greater value than the average farm unit of thirty acres and more in the county, parish, or locality in which such purchase may be made, which value shall be determined solely according to statistics of the farm census of 1940 after such statistics become available, but prior to that time may be determined in accordance with such regulations as may be promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture; and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized and directed to lend such sum to the Secretary of Agriculture upon the security of any obligations of borrowers from the Secretary under the provisions of title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006): Provided, That the amount loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall not exceed 85 per centum of the principal amount outstanding of the obligations constituting the security therefor: Provided further, That the Secretary may utilize proceeds from payments of principal and interest on any loans made under such title I to repay the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the amount borrowed therefrom under the authority of this paragraph: Provided further, That the amount of notes, bonds, debentures, and other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding at any one time under existing law is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions hereof."

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 17, 20, 21, 37, 39, 43, 61, 65, 66, and 105.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate and amendments of the House to certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended and agreed upon as to such amendments in the accompanying conference report, namely:

On amendment Nos. 41 and 42, acquisition of national-forest lands: Appropriates $1,000,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $2,000,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment Nos. 44 and 45, forest roads and trails: Appropriates $9,000,000, as proposed in the House amendment to the amendment of the Senate, instead of $7,500,000, as originally proposed by the House, and $10,000,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 60, pink-bollworm and Thurberia-weevil control: Appropriates $526,800, as proposed by the House, instead of $909,608, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 95 (relating to administrative expenses in Washington and in the field under the appropriation for domestic-allotment payments): Limits to the Marketing and Marketing Agreements Division of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation the interchangability between the District of Columbia, regional offices, and the several States, of the limitations upon administrative expenses for such offices prescribed by section 392 (b) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, instead of providing for such interchangeability for all the activities provided for under such appropriation, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 99, parity payments: Authorizes parity payments up to 100 percent of parity price, as provided by the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

On amendment No. 103, farm-tenant loans: The recommendation of the conferees diqers from the original Senate amendment and from the House amendment to the Senate amendment in the following respects:

1. It is recommended that the $50,000,000 for farm-tenant loans which is to be borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall be loaned to the Secretary of Agriculture upon the security of outstanding obligations of borrowers under the provisions of title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, but not in excess of 85 percent of such obligations, instead of the requirement proposed by the Senate that the Secretary of the Treasury shall reimburse the Reconstruction Finance Corporation from the general fund in the Treasury for obligations in default.

2. The recommendation of the conferees includes the so-called Tarver amendment, prohibiting the purchase of any farm of greater value than the average farm unit in the county, parish, or locality where the purchase is made, so amended as to require the average to be computed on the basis of farms of not less than 30 acres as determined by the farm census of 1940 when that census is available and prior to that time, as determined in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture.

In disagreement

The committee of conference have not agreed respecting the following amendments:

Amendments Nos. 20, 21, 39, 43, 65, and 66 relate to totals involved in connection with the other amendments in disagreement.

On amendments Nos. 17 and 37, relating to beef-cattle investigations in the Southeast and to range investigations in the West: Amendment No. 17 provides an increase of $10,000 under animal husbandry investigations for cooperative studies of beef-cattle production in the Southeastern States; and amendment No. 37 provides an increase of $10,000 for range investigations in the Southeastern States in connection with the beef-cattle studies set up under amendment No. 17, and provides an additional increase of $15,935 for the restoration of the Budget cut in the range investigations under the several forest research stations in the West.

On amendment No. 61, white-fringed beetle control: Appropriates $600,000.

On amendment No. 105, water facilities, arid and semiarid lands: Appropriates $500,000.

CLARENCE CANNON,
M. C. TARVER,
W. P. LAMBERTSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, when the first conference report on the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill came before the House approximately a month ago, a great deal of difference of opinion arose with reference to the so-called 75-percent limitation in connection with parity payments—that is, the proviso limiting parity payments to not more than the amounts necessary to bring prices of the five crops involved to 75 percent of parity and proportioning the funds appropriated accordingly. Gentlemen in the House, particularly those representing areas of the country interested in the production of wheat, felt it would be to the interest of their localities that this provision be eliminated and after discussion that was done by a vote of the House, and the Senate with regard to that particular amendment has receded. I am not going to undertake to raise any question with regard to the propriety of the action which has been taken by the House.

I felt upon consideration of the matter in connection with the former conference report, and I feel now, that we should first have endeavored to bring the producers of these five major crops up to 75 percent of parity before undertaking to bring them up to 100 percent of parity for which the bill does not provide sufficient funds; but I take the floor at this time for the purpose of pointing out to the gentlemen who represent wheat-producing areas in this country that the effect of the elimination of this 75-percent provision may very well not be what they anticipated it would be.

I pointed out in connection with consideration of that question when the matter was first before the House that conditions on account of occurrences across the water might substantially change and that wheat, instead of being one of the most favored as to market price of these five major crops, might conceivably be in a worse position than cotton or some other of the five major crops when the time arrives for the determination of the question as to what amount of parity payments each of the crops should have.

I want to call your attention to the fact that on May 18—and I am quoting from figures furnished by the Department of Agriculture—on May 18, which was just a few days after the time we had this question up before, wheat with the 75-percent limitation left in the bill would have received on the basis of prices obtaining on that date $69,000,000 of the $212,000,000 in this bill, whereas with the elimination of the 75-percent limitation it would have received $62,095,000. This state of facts was brought about by the decline in the price of wheat following events abroad.

On the basis of prices on May 27, 9 days later, wheat with the 75-percent limitation left in the law would have received $79,500,000, and with the 75-percent limitation eliminated would have received $63,040,000, more than $16,000,000 less with the 75-percent limitation eliminated than with the 75-percent limitation contained in the law.

I realize that this does not present the picture of what may be the condition at the time when prices have to be determined for the purpose of fixing the amounts of parity payments. The conditions then, with reference to wheat, may be better or worse than this but, according to those who are in a better position to express an opinion than I am, the experts of the Department of Agriculture, the most probable thing is that the condition of wheat will not rapidly improve. So I feel that the attention of these gentlemen who were so anxious because wheat was above 75 percent of parity at the time that the 75-percent limitation should be removed, a little more than a month ago, should be, in all fairness, called to the fact that on the basis of prices obtaining only a few days ago, and substantially obtaining at the present time, the wheat producers would lose over $16,000,000 because of their insistence on the removal of the 75-percent limitation.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true that the argument made for parity at the time this provision was adopted by the House was really a delusion, because there is no such thing now and there was no such thing then as a real parity price for cotton or wheat?

Mr. TARVER. I would prefer not to take the 5 minutes allotted to me to discuss that question. I think we ought not to legislate on the basis of a temporary condition which may change at any time. I suggest that the gentlemen who were so insistent upon securing this striking out of the 75-percent limitation have perhaps been hoisted by their own petard and their constituents prevented from receiving benefits in the amount of over $16,000,000 which they would otherwise have had. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I shall take only a minute or two to answer and make an observation upon the statement made by the gentleman from Georgia. It may be quite true, on the basis of May 18 figures or May 29 figures, that wheat will receive $16,000,000 less than it would if the 75-percent limitation had remained in the bill. As a matter of fact, I do not believe that is the concern or the consideration of the wheat farmer or the corn farmer or any other farmer in that great midwestern area where we produce cereal grain. We believe, in the first place, that the basic consideration set forth in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 should have been carried out, and that the only logical formula by which to do that is a 100-percent parity formula, irrespective of whether it penalizes corn, cotton, wheat, tobacco, rice, or any other commodity, on the basis of a price that is given as of a certain date.

But there is much conjecture in what the gentleman from Georgia says, because this money is not available for payment until the next crop year. The situation may be entirely different. Wheat may be up very substantially at that time, or corn may be up substantially at that time. They may get more or they may get less than the money that is made available in this bill. But the thing I seek to emphasize is that we who contended for the 100-percent rather than the 75-percent formula were not interested so much in the dollars-and-cents aspect of it as we were in the development and in the adoption of a formula that is founded in logic, in reason, in justice, and in equity, and that carries out pretty well the philosophy that was enunciated in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

Many things can happen overnight; in fact, wheat can go up very substantially, and corn can do likewise. We do not know what the impact of war will be upon the agricultural economy of the country, but we do know that when this passes it will have anchored parity upon a rather sound and logical basis, and that is the primary consideration. [Applause.]

Farmers seek a parity price for their products. If only a moderate sum is required to bring wheat or corn to parity, and a larger amount for some other commodity, there will be no dissatisfaction between the farmers of one section as against the farmers of another section, because parity is the ultimate objective.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 17: On page 22, in line 17, strike out "$814,380" and insert "$824,380."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendment No. 17 and amendment No. 37 be considered together, as they both relate to the beef-cattle investigations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 37: On page 43, in line 6, strike out "$245,000" and insert "$270,935."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments.

Mr. COX. Mr Speaker, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Cox moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendments numbered 17 and 37.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, this is a small item. The House placed in the bill $15,000 for the Bureau of Animal Industry and $15,000 for the Forest Service in the matter of range investigations for the purpose of making investigations to determine how a beef-cattle industry could best be built up for the benefit of those living on the cut-over forest lands of the Southeast.

This is not a matter of establishing a new industry. There are already several million cattle in this area. It is a question of carrying on some developments similar to those that have been carried on in the West, in order to develop best types of grasses, and the best types of cattle so as to improve the production of beef cattle for the use of the people of that area. It does not have anything to do with competition with the commercial beef-growing sections of the country. The people on much of the land of that section, if they are not helped to produce their own beef, will not be able to buy beef. It is a matter of enabling them to raise enough cattle to take care of their own needs.

The Department strongly recommended the appropriations but it asked for $25,000 in each case instead of $15,000, and when the bill went to the Senate with the two $15,000 items provided in the House, the Senate committee, after hearing the evidence, decided that $15,000 in each case would, perhaps, be thrown away since it would require $25,000 to make the necessary investigations, and they therefore added $10,000 for each bureau concerned, and that is the amount which is involved here. If these investigations are to be made at all, they should be adequately financed. One-half of the money is to be spent at the station at Tifton, Ga., and one-half in North Carolina.

This is an appropriation which was sponsored before our subcommittee by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], and in which several Representatives from Southeastern States are interested. I do not recall having heard in our subcommittee any objection, with the possible exception of one member who, I think, was laboring under a misapprehension.

The matter came up in the House upon the consideration of the last conference report, and the House voted 182 to 179, a majority of 3 votes, against these small increases in appropriations. The Senate has insisted upon the appropriations contained in these 2 items and, of course, we are not in position to say that the viewpoint of the House, expressed by only a mere 3 majority, should be absolutely controlling when the Senate conferees are unanimous in their insistence that the appropriations ought to be allowed, and in the interest of an early conclusion of this bill, I sincerely hope that these items, which in my judgment are amply justified by the record and which are very much desired by the Senate conferees, may be approved by the House, and I hope that the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] may receive the approval of this body. [Applause.]

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report (Rept. No. 2648), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 535

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 9931, a bill to increase the credit resources of the Commodity Credit Corporation. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a copy of an address delivered by myself to the 1940 graduating class of Gonzaga High School on Monday evening, June 17.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGNUSON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, with the passage of the conference report that has just been agreed to, we complete appropriations for agriculture unprecedented in the history of the American Congress. We have provided at this session of Congress the greatest amount for agriculture ever provided in the history of this Congress or of any other parliamentary body in the history of the world.

With the adoption of this conference report, Mr. Speaker, we have provided for agriculture at this session of Congress, $1,534,000,000, such a sum as was never before provided for a similar purpose.

Here are the tentative figures as tabulated by the clerk of the committee:

Direct appropriations		$917,992,483
Transferred to deficiency bill		60,000,000
Total direct appropriations		977,992,483
R. F. C. funds:
R. E. A. loans	$100,000,000
Farm-tenant loans	50,000,000
		150,000,000
Grand total in regular bill		1,127,992,483
Permanent appropriations (including 30-percent fund for surplus disposal)		106,554,085
Grand total, annual and permanents		1,234,546,568
In work-relief bill:
Rural rehabilitation loans (House figure, $115,000,000; Senate, $75,000,000)		75,000,000
Grand total, without any speculative items		1,309,546,568
Other Senate amendments:
Additional rehabilitation loans (R. F. C. funds)		125,000,000
Additional surplus-crop disposal		100,000,000
Extending the foregoing items		225,000,000
Grand total		1,534,546,568
Comparable totals, previous years:
1939		1,285,639,000
1940		1,441,912,000

Just to show the increase in the appropriations for agriculture, we appropriated for all purposes covered by this bill in 1920, $33,900,211, and with the passage of this bill, 20 years later, we appropriate $1,534,546,568 for the same purpose.

In 20 years we have come from a bill for $33,000,000 up to a bill for fifteen hundred and thirty-four million, an astounding increase in Federal appropriations. But, Mr. Speaker, there are still some not satisfied, some who say we have not yet appropriated enough, some who say that we ought to go further and appropriate money, not only for legitimate purposes, but for purposes for which there is no Budget estimate, or for which there is no request from the Department of Agriculture—and that is the item we have before us in this amendment. It is an item for beef-cattle investigation, but the work they do is a duplication of work done in other parts of the United States, and there is no Budget estimate for it and no request for it from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman kindly tell us if there is any significance in his statement that in the eighth year of the New Deal we are required to appropriate this vast sum of money to cure the farm difficulty?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. This is purely an economic question, but if the gentleman seeks to inject politics I will say that when his party was in power the price of agricultural products sank to the lowest point in the history of American agriculture. Under the last Republican President wheat sold for less than at any time since the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. When we speak about appropriating $212,000,000 for parity prices for the farmer, do we not realize that it does not mean parity prices at all, but it depresses the farmer? In other words, he is given a 75-cent dollar as compared with all other dollars in industry. In other words, he is 25 percent below parity.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That is true, but this is $212,000,000 nearer to parity.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I regret that I cannot yield at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I read from an editorial in yesterday's Washington Star. In discussing the collapse of the French and British armies it asks:

> How does this catastrophe come about?

I am certain there is not a man here who has not asked himself that question. How has this catastrophe befallen the Allies? Then the editorial goes on:

> There is but one answer—France and Britain were not ready to defend their liberty, and the aggressor gave them no time to prepare after the first blow was struck.

The Star, one of the conservative papers of the Nation, then makes the application to the United States:

> As a nation, we have not yet grasped the full significance of this harsh truth, and for that reason we, too, are in deadly peril.

Why did the Allies collapse? Why did they suffer such an astounding defeat at Flanders? The French army was universally conceded to be the finest army in Europe, and Britain's navy was without a peer. It was not that the Allies lacked either army or navy. The trouble was back home in the British Parliament and in the French Chamber of Deputies.

We cannot afford, at times like these, to fritter away money upon inconsequential and trivial matters like this, that cannot even get the endorsement of the Budget estimate, or the approval of the Department of Agriculture. We have serious business ahead. Every resource at our command should be husbanded and should be spent judiciously and economically.

Do you know how much money we have appropriated during this session of Congress? We have already appropriated over $15,000,000,000. How much revenue has the United States Government to balance that $15,000,000,000?

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. You said we spent $15,000,000,000 at this session of Congress and then you looked over to the Republican side. Why did you not look over to your side of the House? This side of the House did not spend that $15,000,000,000.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I was speaking to the gentlemen on both sides of the House. When a question came up yesterday as to the expenditure of an item which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON] showed to be unjustified he could get only a dozen votes over there in support of his fight to protect the Treasury. That is what is the matter with the gentleman's side of the House. [Laughter.]

Now, my friends, we have appropriated at this session of Congress $15,000,000,000, and the estimated amount of revenue of the United States Government for the year 1941 is $5,650,000,000. By the time we get through—we are not through yet—we will have spent three times what we took in. After appropriating three times the amount of our income, this amendment proposes to add to the deficit an item for which there is no Budget or department approval.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I regret that I do not have the time.

Now, the President of the United States asks us to be economical. He even asks us to cut down 10 percent on the money already appropriated. He is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. He knows what the military needs of the Nation are, and with that in view he is urging economy in all nonessential expenditures. If there is the slightest doubt as to the need of an appropriation, that need should be resolved in the negative. But on this amendment there cannot be the slightest doubt. It has no approval from any source.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. The gentleman makes the point that the item here involved had no Budget estimate. Can the gentleman tell me if there was a Budget estimate with reference to the parity item in the bill?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman from Georgia is one who seeks to justify himself by another's sin. The thing before us is an item which is not justified and which the Budget refused to approve. The Budget says it ought not be spent.

Mr. COX. Did the Budget approve the parity item which the gentleman voted for?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman says, "There is a fellow sitting over on the other side of the aisle who is guiltier than I am. I am guilty, but there is a fellow over there who is more reprehensible than I am." When a man is called in court for misdeeds, the law will not excuse him because somebody else committed the same crime.

The item in this amendment is unjustified. There is no Budget estimate for it; the Department has not asked for it; and at a time like this, when we are spending three times the amount of our income, when it is necessary to build clouds of airplanes and fleets of ships and arm 10,000,000 men, attempt to divert money for an unwarranted purpose of this kind cannot be looked upon as cooperation with the defense program. They are asking $5,000,000,000 for the Navy, 84 more battleships; and that is just the beginning. They say that they must have $10,000,000,000 to start the program, and we are told authoritatively that really means $20,000,000,000.

Three times this House has rejected this item. It rejected it when we passed the bill and sent it to the Senate. It rejected it when we sent the amendment to conference. We voted on it the third time with the conference report. Now, they are back for the fourth time.

Mr. Speaker, the issue is clearly drawn. We have already passed the largest agricultural appropriation bill in history. This session has spent three times the amount of the national income. This appropriation is unjustified. If agreed to every dollar of it will have to be borrowed. The proposition before the House is not to appropriate the money but to borrow the money—and for a purpose uncountenanced by any agency of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on this amendment.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his motion?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I offered to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COX. I ask the gentleman for just 1 minute.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. COX. I hope the Members will support the amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I offered the gentleman time. He would not take it. I now yield him 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Missouri moved the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that under the rules the gentleman does not have the right to the floor, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] having moved the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule. The very fact that the gentleman from Missouri yielded a minute to the gentleman from Georgia signified that for the time being he had withdrawn his motion for the previous question.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I make the further point of order that under the rules the gentleman from Missouri could not withdraw a pending motion except by unanimous consent, which was not granted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already ruled.

The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, this amendment failed of adoption by three votes when the bill was before the House some weeks ago for consideration. The Senate has insisted upon the amendment, and the conferees have brought it back here for another vote. The amount involved is only $10,000. I trust the Members of this House will support the preferential motion which I have offered.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question will be considered as having been ordered.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the previous question be ordered?

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the preferential motion made by the gentleman from Georgia that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON of Missouri) there were—ayes 102, noes 27.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 20: Page 27, line 21, strike out "$12,414,440" and insert in lieu thereof "$12,464,440."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, No. 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$12,449,440."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 21: Page 29, line 6, strike out "$12,414,440" and insert "$12,464,440."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the same with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment No. 21 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$12,449,440."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 39: Page 43, line 21, strike out "$12,795,000" and insert "$14,891,720."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the same with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 39 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$14,353,435."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 43: Page 47, line 4, strike out "$16,366,000" and insert "$19,462,720."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the same with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 43 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$17,924,435."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 61: Page 58, line 3, insert "White-fringed beetle control: For the control and prevention of spread of the white-fringed beetle, $600,000."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TARVER moves that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 61.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, this is an appropriation for which there is a Budget estimate. It is intended for the purpose of controlling and eradicating one of the most dangerous, if not the most dangerous, insect pests in the United States, and by dangerous, of course, I mean dangerous to agriculture generally.

It has now taken hold in four States of the South, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana. My own State is not involved. We are advised, however, as will be shown by the hearings, that unless this pest is controlled and eradicated there is reason to believe it will spread not only to all of the South but even to agricultural territory north of the Ohio River. It is not a pest which destroys only a cotton boll or a cotton square. It is a pest which destroys everything in the way of plant life that it comes in contact with, including root and branch.

The Department of Agriculture has stated that it will be possible to eradicate it if prompt action is taken, that is, continued action. Some action has been taken, which has been reasonably successful. It has urged the making of this appropriation. There is no more reason for denying this than there would have been reason for denying the $500,000 for control of the chinch bug which this House provided in the second deficiency bill on yesterday unless gentlemen give consideration to geographical reasons.

Mr. Speaker, I do not come from a commercial corn-producing area, but as a member of the Appropriations Committee I made no objection, and no other Member from my section made any objection, to the provision for the extra $500,000 which was recommended by the Budget for chinch-bug control and eradication.

Why is this item not entitled to equal consideration? There was some impression when it was voted on in the House before that the money to take care of this situation might be taken out of the general appropriation for the control of insect pests, but the Department of Agriculture through its officials in the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine stated that it cannot be done unless they should find it necessary to neglect the grasshopper work in order to do it. We do not want to ask them to do that. We ask you to make provision for agriculture of the South similar to that which you have already made for agriculture in the West, to take care of the grasshopper situation, to take care of the chinch-bug situation, and to take care of the Mormon-cricket situation, an appropriation against which no more valid objection can be made than could have been made against either of those I have mentioned. In fact, it is a situation which in common reason and good judgment must take precedence over these other conditions from funds already appropriated if this special fund is not provided.

Mr. MUNDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. Is it not true that under the bill as amended this will also include money to be available for certain plant disease, the eradication of barberry for example?

Mr. TARVER. I understand that some question exists as to that. I am not in a position to construe the law as far as it may be applicable to the prevention or eradication of the barberry disease at this time.

Mr. MUNDT. In the discussion in the Senate at the time Senator SHIPSTEAD brought in that amendment that question was asked and answered in the affirmative.

Mr. TARVER. I am in favor of attempting to eradicate all these diseases and pests which afflict the agriculture of our country, no matter in what section the disease or pest may be rampant, but I am making the point here that there is no justification in undertaking to pick out one estimate from the Bureau of the Budget and one that is strongly supported by the authorities of the Department and say, "We will allow what is needed for the control of the chinch bugs, grasshoppers, and Mormon crickets, and so forth, but we will not allow anything for the control of the white-fringed beetle."

Let me read a letter I have just received from the American Farm Bureau Federation through its director, Mr. W. R. Ogg:

> We understand the Senate amendment in the agricultural appropriation bill provides $600,000 for white-fringed beetle control. This appropriation is important to our farmers in Florida, southern Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana because of the wide variety of crops which this pest attacks, including cotton, soybeans, peanuts, potatoes, and certain other crops.
> The sum which the Senate has added for this purpose corresponds with the Budget estimate submitted for this work. Reports indicate that—
> "The intensive work conducted so far has demonstrated that the procedures followed are effective in preventing its spread and reducing its numbers. * * * In areas where it is well established its numbers have been drastically reduced. If the operations are discontinued or materially curtailed, the pest will, without doubt, spread into new sections and increase in numbers and very materially add to the burden of production of a wide variety of crops over large areas of the United States." (Hearings before Senate Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations for 1941, p. 31.)
> A special request that funds be provided for control and prevention of the spread of the white-fringed beetle has come from our Alabama Farm Bureau Federation, in which State much damage and loss has occurred on account of this pest. We trust the funds recommended for this purpose may be provided in the appropriation bill for 1941.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. May I call attention to the letter of Mr. B. M. Gaddis, in charge of domestic plant quarantine, which I set out in the Appendix of the RECORD, at page 3934, which gives the story and shows that each beetle will lay from 600 to 3,000 eggs, which hatch in 2 weeks, and that any place there is succulent vegetation south of the North Pole will eventually be infested by this pest, which is six times as bad as any other known pest, unless we eradicate it now, which this one appropriation of $600,000 will accomplish.

Mr. TARVER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

I also wish to call your attention to the Appendix of the RECORD containing, on pages 3081 and 3082, letters from the commissioner of agriculture and the State entomologist of the State of Louisiana. You will recall that when we had this matter up in the House before, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] read a number of letters from beekeepers in the State of Louisiana protesting against the making of this appropriation. I cannot read all of what these gentlemen say to you, but I do want to quote briefly from the communication of the State entomologist, W. E. Anderson, which is endorsed by the State commissioner of agriculture:

> The State of Louisiana recognized that in imposing restrictions in carrying out the regulations for the eradication of the pest it necessarily follows that certain hardships and privations must be imposed on citizens in the infested areas in order to protect the balance of the country from the ravages of the white-fringed beetle. In fairness to the various interests affected by the program (by causing these interests to sustain a loss) the State of Louisiana has endeavored to alleviate these losses as much as possible by appropriating money to pay claims for losses and damages.
> The beekeeping industry, and I might say the balance of the industries in the infested areas of Louisiana affected by the white-fringed beetle control and eradication program, are infinitesimal in value when compared to the value of other crops that will be protected not only in Louisiana but in other States from the ravages of the white-fringed bettle if the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine in cooperation with States affected, is permitted to carry this program on to a successful conclusion.
> The testimonials of the Louisiana beekeepers in the infested area that were read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD May 14 presented a one-sided, selfish picture in order to obtain the avowed objection of a few individuals to stop the program of white-fringed beetle eradication. If the program could not be stopped, then to harass those in charge of the work in every way possible through individual efforts as well as through the so-called organization of Louisiana Beekeepers Association, who, with the exception of less than a dozen, keep bees as a hobby or a side line.
> Beekeepers, dairymen, and beef-cattle owners have been paid in excess of $35,000 for losses that they have sustained.

In other words, the State of Louisiana has recognized that this work is of sufficient importance to justify it in paying from State funds and by appropriation by the State legislature money in the amount of $35,000 to compensate for the loss which beekeepers necessarily have sustained.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], undoubtedly in good faith, made a very seductive speech against this particular item when it was before the House before. I believe that he now feels that he was misled. I feel sure that he will support us in our efforts to secure this very much needed appropriation, amply justified by the evidence submitted by the Department and approved by the Bureau of the Budget, and for the rejection of which absolutely no just reason could possibly be assigned. I, therefore, sincerely hope that the House will vote to recede and concur in the Senate amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I feel quite flattered at the remarks of my friend the gentleman from Georgia. I do not know exactly what a seductive speech would be, but in any event I deem that a high flattery, and accordingly I express my appreciation to the gentleman.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield with a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. TARVER. I am sure the gentleman will realize that a seductive speech is a very effective speech.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I shall not resist the preferential motion to recede and concur in the Senate action, but I am led to make this observation on the white-fringed beetle. My opposition to the appropriation of $600,000 for the control and prevention of the spread of this new pest, which came from South America, was predicated on something more than mere conjecture because I could see in the distance the accumulation of a great appropriation over a period of years before we got through dealing with this matter.

My good friend the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] said a moment ago that this one appropriation will do the business. Do not kid yourselves about that. It is 20 years ago that they said: "This one appropriation will do the business in eradicating the Japanese beetle," and we are appropriating hundreds of thousands of dollars every year for that purpose and have been for 20 years. It is over 10 years ago that the Dutch elm disease came in on some logs that were imported from Holland, and it was represented then that if they could get one or two appropriations it would do the business.

Well, we have appropriated $15,000,000 thus far, and we are still appropriating for Dutch elm diseases. Meanwhile, we are finding new bugs every day, and, in fact, we are going to run out of names for bugs if we are not very careful. When I was a kid, the names of bugs or the varieties of bugs were very simple. They had not invented these new and fanciful names. There were tomato cutworms, lightning bugs, June bugs, and potato bugs, and probably some earworms in the corn and some corn borer and maybe an occasional chinch bug and a grasshopper. They were about all the bugs discovered when I was tilling a little chunk of soil in Illinois; but now we have the white-fringed beetle, the pink bollworm, the white bollworm, the white-pine blister rust, the peach mosaic, and the phony peach bug, and a thousand other varieties. So that every year we are appropriating millions of dollars to catch up with the assault of the bugs upon the subsistence of mankind. I sometimes speculate, sitting on the Appropriations Committee and listening to the learned doctors and professors who come along telling us about the new bugs that are making their ravages upon all the things that constitute a part of man's subsistence. I have wondered on occasion whether in the ultimate struggle between mankind and the insect world they will not ultimately conquer anyway. This may be called the real "fifth column" in America today, this great army of bugs; but I want to emphasize to you that this initial appropriation of $600,000 will be in the bill next year, and it will be in the bill the next year, and it will be in the bill many years to come, and the over-all total will go into millions before we ever get to the point where we can say we have effectively dealt with the problem.

The singular thing about all this is that we are changing the agricultural economy of the country. We are changing methods of agriculture, types of products that are raised in this section of the country or the other, and, as a matter of fact, we are doing many things to nurture and to give sustenance to these bugs and worms, and, in consequence, here we are year after year appropriating millions for chinch bugs, for grasshoppers, for Mormon crickets, and for all the rest. Is it any wonder that today we come to you on a final conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill, which is way up in the upper brackets and aggregates almost $1,000,000,000. Compare that with the original Agricultural Appropriation Act that came when Abraham Lincoln first signed the bill under which this agency was created. Of course, our agricultural efforts go back infinitely further than that.

As I recall, we set up some kind of agency more than 100 years ago and the first real appropriation was for $1,000, and that appropriation was to take care of grasshoppers out in the far West, and we have been dealing with that problem for 100 years, and last year we were right back here for more appropriations to deal with grasshoppers. So when you approve this $600,000 do not think that is the end of the story. There is going to be other money asked from time to time, from year to year, to cope with this new infestation, this new bug from South America, the new member of the insect "fifth column" of the country; but I shall not resist the appropriation. I shall not resist the $600,000 that is requested, because I have some new data on the subject, and I will say, in all fairness, that at the time I resisted this appropriation I had telegrams from Louisiana, from the beekeepers, from entomologists, and others down there, but not from the State entomologists, intimating that the damage was greatly overrated and that this money was not necessary. In their final letter on this matter they said, "They are using arsenical spray so promiscuously as to kill whole stands of bees." That is why the beekeepers were kicking. That is another thing to keep in mind in connection with this appropriation, and I will tell you why.

In 1929 they discovered for the first time the fruitfly in the orange groves of Florida. This House made a small appropriation to go down there and investigate it and in 1929 and 1930 we appropriated over $7,000,000 for the eradication of the fruitfly. They went to work with arsenical sprays of one kind and another and did a pretty fair job in eliminating the fly.

But there came out of the Rules Committee just a few days ago a proposal to set up a commission consisting of House and Senate Members to ascertain the damage that was done as a result of Uncle Sam's efforts in the orange groves, the tangerine groves, and the grapefruit groves of Florida for the purpose of reimbursing the growers, after having spent $7,000,000 out of the Federal Treasury for the purpose of control and eradication. You see Uncle Sam gets caught coming and going. We provide money for eradication and control and the people down there say with open arms, "O Uncle Sam, please walk in and help us to conquer this pest; we will be ever so grateful if you will appropriate out of the Federal Treasury and send your experts and agents down here to do the job of control and prevention," and then after a while they come along and say, "Uncle Sam, it was generous of you to come down here, but you sent a lot of amateurs and got this arsenical spray all over the countryside to ruin the trees, ruin the marketability of the fruit, and do any amount of damage, including damage to horses, cattle, mules, chickens, goats, and dogs. And now, Uncle Sam, despite the fact you gave $7,000,000 for this purpose, we believe you ought to reimburse us for the damage your people did."

Yes; that is the thing that is pending now after more than 10 years of effort. So mark it down in the book, gentlemen, when you spend this money and those experts in the Bureau of Plant Industry or Entomology or Plant Quarantine do not do a satisfactory job or they rub out some product of a grower down in that country, it means they are going to be back here with an old tin cup asking for reimbursement for the damage that has been done. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. GRANT].

Mr. GRANT of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe anyone who has spoken on this measure has actually seen the destruction being wrought by the white-fringed beetle. I do not know why it is called that, because in reality it is a red. I believe it is the most destructive of all weevils. I am not a specialist on breeding, but I say that if some eradication is not done to destroy this beetle, it will be all over the country in a few years. Last year the Government maintained in my district in southern Alabama a station to eradicate these weevils. I went out there and I saw ditches dug 2 or 3 feet deep that were covered overnight by these weevils. I also saw dug post holes 4 and 5 feet deep that in the morning were filled with them and I say that if this is not destroyed, when it reaches some of the other States, you will realize that it is indeed a dangerous thing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the House for appearing again, but this matter, in my judgment, has been treated with too much levity by the Members of the House because of the fact that they have not ever in their lives seen one of these beetles. Neither have I. There has never been one found in my district, but I have enough confidence in the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine and their experts to believe what they say. I read to you now from an extension on page 3935 of the Appendix of the RECORD, made by myself, the following statement from a letter of Mr. Gaddis:

> Larvae have been found in the ground at a depth of 26 inches, indicating probable survival even in northern areas.

Let me take up for a moment the horrible picture presented by my good friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. He pictures the awful plight of three or four beekeepers in Louisiana, and during the debate on this appropriation bill some days ago he read letters from those three or four beekeepers, and what do those letters say? They say, in effect, that they have never known any damage to be caused by the white-fringed beetle, but that the arsenical spray used to exterminate them has done some damage to them. Of course, that is true. Beekeepers have their apiaries in wooden boxes, which a beetle cannot chew, and, of course, beetles do not eat honey. They eat succulent vegetation of all kinds. Therefore, it is impossible for these little beetles to have destroyed a beehive in a box, but the arsenical spray used to exterminate the white-fringed beetle has done damages by blowing into those bee boxes, and I am bold enough to say that it is as good an investment as the United States Government can make to reimburse those beekeepers for the damage thus inflicted, because they will never have to do it again.

In this letter from Mr. Gaddis, the expert in charge, he says that in the areas that have been treated they are unable to find a single beetle. Therefore it is not a recurring appropriation, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] would have you believe, but this appropriation means the complete eradication—the extermination of a pest which, if you allow it to breed 3,000 eggs every 2 weeks, will go to Michigan, will go to Peoria, Ill., and eat up every bit of succulent vegetation around the home town of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]; and when it does get there he will be yelling his head off for 10 times this small appropriation, which, if you give us now, will completely eradicate and utterly render useless any further appropriation for this cause. This is not a control appropriation. This is an eradication appropriation, and we will do the job once and for all and be through with it.

I beg the House Members to give this a reasonable chance. To spend a dime when a dollar is needed is worse than useless. This appropriation is recommended by the Budget, this appropriation is greatly commended by the Senate conferees and every one of them, and the appropriation is not seriously opposed by a single member of the House conferees. It should be made. It is wise and just and fair and permanent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, every year we have a new bug, and every year we hear the same old story that unless the Government appropriates vast sums of money it will consume every green leaf and leave a barren and fruitless desert behind it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. I wonder if the gentleman could tell us why during the last few years we have had so many more bugs and so many more varieties of bugs and why never any of them die out.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The answer to that is that we do not have more bugs, but that we have more "bugologists," who want to serve the United States Government at good, fat salaries, and they can always go out and find a new and voracious bug to justify their employment at a lucrative salary.

The first menace to vegetation and the United States Treasury of this kind that I recall after coming to the House was the brown-tail moth, which had its habitat in the State of Vermont. The Government spent large sums of money combating it and the experts painted horrible pictures of its destructive potentialities. Panic stricken by the thought of national devastation, we descended on the Treasury to secure funds to save the Nation.

Mr. Purnell, who at that time represented one of the districts in Indiana and was on the committee, hurried down to the White House to see President Coolidge to get his endorsement of an appropriation to exterminate the pest. President Coolidge said, "Why, when I was Governor, the State of Vermont appropriated money to fight the brown-tail moth. But we discovered after a while that the men we paid to destroy the moths spent the day destroying them, and spent the nights planting them so there would be more moths to destroy." [Laughter.]

Now, the next great scare we had was over the European corn borer. Corn growers out in the great Middle West grew pale when the experts told us about the corn borer.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes; I yield with pleasure.

Mr. TABER. Has this bug any relation to the Mediterranean fruit fly that got $20,000,000?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It has one characteristic in common. It feeds at the public crib, and requires a vast amount of nursing and mulcted the Treasury of millions of dollars to pay the fellows who go down there to hunt them and valorously beard them in their lair at high rates of remuneration.

Mr. TABER. The bug hunters?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes; the same kind. Perhaps I should say the job hunters.

Mr. TABER. The same kind of bug hunters?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes; the same kind. Perhaps we should include the vote hunters.

Mr. TABER. Just as expensive?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Just as expensive. The bugs come high but the bug hunters come higher.

To resume the thread of my discourse, they assured us that unless the corn borer was exterminated it would soon spread to the cornfields of the West, and when it did we would have to discontinue the production of corn. So we appropriated—I know this sounds absurd—but we appropriated altogether a total of $17,000,000 to fight the European corn borer. You remember what a hubub there was in the farm papers about it at the time. Eventually they discovered it did practically no damage, and today we pay no attention to it. It is difficult to realize that a few years ago we spent $17,000,000 to exterminate it.

Then came the Mediterranean fruitfly. The Mediterranean fruitfly, we were told, would destroy every citrus grove in the United States. It must have prompt and urgent attention. So we appropriated altogether $10,000,000 to destroy the Mediterranean fruitfly. Finally, Chairman Buchanan, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, himself went down to Florida to see how they were spending all this money.

When he came back he told the committee he did not believe there ever had been a single Mediterranean fruitfly in Florida. But we spent $10,000,000 exterminating a bug that the chairman could not find when he went down there and did not believe ever existed.

Now, here is the come-back, my friends. There has been introduced, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], told you, a bill to appropriate seven and one-half million dollars to pay for the damage done to the citrus people when the United States agents were down there trying to find the Mediterranean fruitfly. And do you know, my friends, that a bill has already been drawn and will be introduced in a few days to appropriate a large amount of money to reimburse the farmers of the South for the damage occasioned by the activities of the United States Government in exterminating the white-fringed beetle?

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. Who in the world could have drawn such a bill? That is the first I ever heard of it.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I will say to the gentleman that the bill has already been drawn and will be introduced in a few days.

Mr. TARVER. By whom?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman will be apprised in due time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DIRKSEN. In 1938 we empowered the Secretary of Agriculture to name a board of five to go to Florida to make an investigation and ascertain damages. The report of that committee is in the document room now. There is a majority report and a minority report. The majority report says there is an ascertained estimated loss of over seven and one-half million dollars, and there is a rule out of the Rules Committee now to appoint three Members of the House and three Members of the Senate to ascertain the damage. It will be coming on this floor soon.

Mr. TARVER. But the gentleman made the statement that a bill has been drawn to pay damages caused in the eradication of this pest.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes. The bill has already been drawn and will be introduced in due time.

Mr. TARVER. By whom? I never heard of it before.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I do not know whether the gentleman desires to make the announcement at this time or not. I leave that to him. But the bill has been drawn and will be introduced to reimburse those who have been damaged by the expenditure of United States Government money to destroy the white-fringed beetle. It is my understanding that some of the claimants have already been reimbursed by the States.

Mr. SHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Why should the taxpayers be called upon to spend hundreds of millions of dollars to destroy these so-called pests which destroy agricultural products, and then be called upon for hundreds of millions of dollars in order that Mordecai Ezekiel can carry on his crop-destruction program?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. The Mediterranean fruitfly has been mentioned. This is a subject which, of course, is very close to my district and to my interests. Is the gentleman familiar with the fact that the fly was first claimed to have been found on the laboratory grounds of the Federal Department of Agriculture? I am sure the gentleman remembers the stringent regulations which were issued to prevent us from shipping our fruit so the pest would not spread to the soft fruits of the northland.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. And the gentleman knows that we are now asked to reimburse to the tune of $7,500,000 the farmers we attempted to help.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I have a resolution pending that has been passed by the Senate Committee on Claims to investigate; but it is for the actual destruction of the property itself, not that which was infested by the fly, but that which was destroyed to prevent the flies' spreading.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The next pest to claim the public eye is one with which we are all familiar, the Japanese beetle. We were told that the Japanese beetle would not only ruin fruit trees but would destroy grass, shrubbery, foliage, and the trees themselves. We were told that no such voracious and destructive pest had ever been known, and of course we appropriated large sums of money. I am certain that every Member remembers seeing all around here in every park in Washington, and around the Capitol Grounds, the little white rods with green traps hanging on them. We were told that unless immediate steps were taken the Japanese beetle would destroy all vegetation within a radius of 500 miles of Washington. Now they are to be found around here by the bushel and we have quit trapping them, and we discover that the Japanese beetle is not doing any more harm than any other common insect pest.

We went into hysteria over the brown-tail moth and spent money, then forgot about it. We became greatly agitated next over the European corn borer, spent $17,000,000 on it, and then forgot all about it and today pay little attention to him. Then we appropriated $10,000,000 to eradicate the Mediterranean fruitfly, but now pay no attention to him. Then we appropriated for the Japanese beetle. Today the Jap is our neighbor, we see him every day, and he does no great damage. Now we have a new bug, the white-fringed beetle, and as usual we are asked to appropriate large sums of money for it. After we have spent the money we shall forget all about him except that a bill will be brought in to take care of the damage caused by the Federal Government's attempt to destroy him.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. If they get rid of this beetle there would not be any job for the bug hunters.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That is the heart-rending feature of it.

Mr. TABER. That is why they never get rid of the bugs.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Most of these drives on Congress like this do not come from the farmers, but from the organized armies of the United States Government employees who get good, easy jobs out of the appropriations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are already providing for this pest and all other pests. We appropriated for the current year $2,500,000 for insect pests. The deficiency bill which is now before the Senate and which passed the House this week carries $500,000 more for insect pests, and there is carried in the regular bill a larger amount for study and control. Why should we spend more money for that purpose in view of Budget conditions?

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the preferential motion of the gentleman from Georgia that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TARVER) there were—ayes 50, noes 67.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. (After counting.) One hundred and eighty-one Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 145, nays 227, not voting 59, as follows:

Mr. JACOBSEN changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

The doors were opened.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). The question now occurs on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 65: Page 60, line 18, strike out "$5,644,801" and insert "$6,773,093."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 66: Page 60, line 19, strike out "$867,648" and insert "$878,168."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 105: Page 89, in line 21, insert the following:

"WATER FACILITIES, ARID AND SEMIARID AREAS

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes,' approved August 28, 1937 (16 U. S. C. 590r–590x), including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; printing and binding; the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles; and rent in the District of Colimbia and elsewhere, $500,000, of which not to exceed $25,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided, That not to exceed $50,000 of this appropriation shall be available for expenditure for any one project designed in whole or in part to benefit lands by the irrigation thereof, and all project facilities and appurtenances which depend for their utility in whole or in part upon each other or upon any common facility shall be deemed one project, and the authority contained in said act shall not be deemed to authorize the construction of any project not in accord with this limitation."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LEAVY moves that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 105.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, this is apparently the last item in controversy in the agricultural appropriation bill. On December 4 last I, together with the seven other members of the Agriculture Subcommittee on Appropriations, came back to begin consideration of this bill. It looks now as though we have reached the place where we can write finis to it as far as we are concerned. This water-facilities item is the last in this conference report in disagreement.

This item affects the 17 Western States. Every State lying west of the western line of the State of Missouri is affected.

We had this appropriation up a month ago; a record vote was taken and the vote at that time was 171 to 173. The motion made by myself to recede and concur lost by 2 votes. At least 12 Members who voted against the motion to recede and concur a month ago have indicated now that they desire an opportunity to change their vote because they did not fully understand the matter. There should be no difficulty if the matter is fully understood in passing this Senate amendment.

When the matter was before us a month ago, the argument was presented by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] that we were appropriating $500,000 to be spent for salaries for employees largely. There was no opportunity given to answer the broad charges made by these gentlemen. The facts are that this money is appropriated for the purpose of paying those who are qualified to tell the farmers in a drought-stricken area where and how they can plan to get water to carry them through and save them and the land upon which they have lived all their lives and on which they desire to remain. Instead of this being $500,000 for that purpose, it is actually $3,500,000 that the Government spent this year. The money here involved, or a large part of it, goes to supervise that work. The $3,000,000 comes largely from soil conservation and from farm security. It is repayable, and experience has shown that it is being repaid.

They have in the short time that this act has been in effect, which is a little over a year, salvaged or saved almost 2,000 farmers and their families in those 17 States, largely in the arid belt. There are 4,000 applications now pending for this service.

A representative of the Department of Agriculture, in response to a request, goes into western Kansas, the Dakotas, Colorado, Wyoming, or wherever it may be; he makes a careful analysis of the situation, then he advises the farmer or group of farmers if it is wise at that point to attempt to get a water supply to carry them through or to attempt to put in a dam that must cost under $50,000, or otherwise take steps to make it possible for these fine, but unfortunate, folks to remain on their farms.

This money, Mr. Speaker, is repaid again by those who receive these benefits. When we analyze the subject briefly, the question that must occur to us is: Is it better for Uncle Sam to spend millions and millions of dollars in direct relief and to drive these poor people, who have an opportunity with a little help, to make a home, and who have a chance to live where they have lived all their lives, or should we permit and compel them to become members of the hopeless migrant army and move to the West or back to the East, there to become recipients of public charity? Actual experience has proven the great value of this work. To destroy it now, by cutting off all appropriations, would not alone deny help to the great number who have filed applications, but it would result in untold loss to the hundreds who are now on incompleted projects. The failure to initiate such an undertaking sooner has given us this great army, who have been referred to as the children of the Grapes of Wrath.

With a better understanding of this subject, I am hopeful the House—and I assure you that it is in the interest of economy—will vote in favor of the motion to recede and concur.

I feel an unusual interest in this matter—not that it affects my district to any great degree, but because as a member of the subcommittee that wrote this bill I was one who believed in it, but believed it ought to be an activity that should be carried on in the Department of the Interior under reclamation. I have since found that I was in error on that point. It could not be carried on there, because the A. A. A. and Farm Security are the big factors in this program. When someone gets up here and tells you, as probably they will, that the major part of this money is being spent for salaries, remember that this is money for supervisory work only. It affects 20,000 drought-stricken farmers; and who knows when this drought region will strike further east? As a matter of fact, there are many places now in western Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, and Arkansas that could make good use of this service.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. It should be pointed out that the West is suffering now from a more severe drought than we have ever known since the population extended into the West. This is one of the much imperatively needed things to help our farmers all through the West—more for water for domestic purposes and for stock water than for irrigation.

Mr. LEAVY. Weather Bureau reports indicate that the drought has moved substantially east, even east of the Mississippi River. There is an actual shortage in the rainfall this year over the normal rainfall that far east. I say there is no telling when a group of farmers in western Missouri or western Iowa will want a water supply or be driven out entirely. A vote for my motion is a vote that means joy and happiness for thousands of our fellow citizens who, without this service, are doomed to become migrants and lead hopeless lives of despair. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, we heard here this afternoon a very powerful address delivered by the ranking majority member of the Appropriations Committee that has this conference report in hand with reference to our national-defense program. Everything the gentleman said regarding that matter is absolutely true, but we do not want to sacrifice our important domestic problems which are just as serious. We have to raise the things our people need in order to round out the picture.

Our colleagues in the Senate have a number of times reaffirmed their belief in the soundness and desirability of this program. The Senate conferees on this item have steadfastly refused to back down in the face of an earlier decision by this House to abolish the program. It is now before us again, and I, for one, earnestly hope that this time there will be a favorable vote.

Throughout vast areas of 17 of our Western States water is synonymous with life. You have heard that before; so many times, perhaps, that it has become an idle phrase. But I assure you it remains true, and will bear even further repetition. Where 18, 14, 12, and even fewer inches of rain fall each year, water is a matter of the most critical importance to the people trying to make a living on the land. It is a matter of the most critical importance to herds of cattle and flocks of sheep that must in the end help sustain our population. I speak of this from experience. In my own State of Montana we come face to face each year with the dry, hard facts of drought and the tragedy of little water.

The water-facilities program is neither lavish nor expensive. The item is for $500,000. The emphasis of the program is on the construction of small water facilities—small but highly important improvements such as small water ponds; stock water tanks; small reservoirs; small pump installations, including windmills; the development of springs; and small irrigation facilities, either for individual families or small groups of families. A major purpose of this program is to make it possible for farm families to become self-supporting and stay off the relief rolls. Counting everything, administration, transportation, technical services, labor, equipment, and materials, the cost of these facilities averages only in the neighborhood of $1,000 each. This is not a program of monumental dams, vast irrigation systems, or power. It aims to provide carefully planned small water facilities in order to achieve wiser use of the land over a long period of years. And, through wiser use of the land, it improves distinctly the welfare of the people who live on the land.

The money is not spent willy-nilly to build a puddle here and a windmill there. Each facility is planned and installed on the basis of the best possible use of the entire farm or ranch. Along with the water facilities goes soil and water conservation. There is a definite decrease in waste—waste of water, waste of land, waste of manpower, waste of production capacity, and waste of money. By some this program has been criticized on the grounds that it is slow. The prompt and complete answer to that kind of criticism is that well-planned, permanently useful work is far better, far less expensive, and far more desirable in the long run than comparatively fast, "hit or miss" projects that have neither present nor future value.

During the short time this program has been under way, installations have been completed, or well started, which in the end will benefit more than 1,200,000 acres. Every one of these facilities will aid in bringing about wiser and more profitable use of the land.

The item, gentlemen, is $500,000. With it we can continue a program which is producing results of permanent value to the Nation and to the people and agriculture of the West. If we fail to approve this item, much of the good work already done will suffer, for it is naturally impossible to clear water rights, make plans, and construct many facilities, all within a single year. But, more important, it will be the people who are trying to make a living, at an American standard, on the dry lands of the West, who will suffer if this item fails.

I cannot overemphasize the importance of this item to the farmers and stockmen of the West. It means securing water for livestock, pasture, and gardens. This goes to the vitals of the whole existence of our Western States. I appeal to the Members of this House this afternoon to stand by the farmers of these 17 Western States who are trying to carve out a living in that arid country and give them a chance to retain their homes and live as human beings. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I believe the Members probably have come to the point where they can recognize that when an item comes up concerning water in the West the gentleman from Washington, the gentleman from Montana, the gentleman from Arizona, the gentleman from Kansas, the gentleman from Nebraska, and a few others of us will be up here fighting for a little water. That is again true this afternoon.

This item is a $500,000 item. It was sent up by the Bureau of the Budget. It is not in excess of the Budget. The Senate has insisted upon this item going in the bill.

I know the argument that will be presented before this debate is concluded, that too much of this money is spent for overhead and not enough in the field. I was impressed by that argument somewhat myself the last time this issue was before us. To get the facts on the case, I went back to the people who are working in the field. I wrote some of the editors of newspapers in the territory in my district where this program is being carried on. Before I had even gotten a reply to my letter I received letters from two editors and from half a dozen farmers telling me that this is the most important item in the agricultural program, as far as they are concerned. They had seen the report that the item was beaten by three votes last time. They wrote in to explain that the reason this money goes for supervision is that that is what the farmers want. They want technical assistance in laying out their contour lines for ditches, for small dams, and things of that sort. They want to know the right line for their ditches to spread the water on their hay bottoms and the correct face and back slope and the safe height for their dams so they will not wash out.

The farmers themselves are doing the work, and if we can expend $500,000 and have it multiplied by the farmers doing their own work under this program or by using, if they have to spend money, their Triple A checks, or something of that sort, we ought to do it. We are only asking for $500,000 to provide engineering and technical assistance and what wells or other facilities that can be financed when the farmers are willing to do their own work. I have newspaper articles and I have letters in my office which I would be pleased for anyone to see showing that this is a case where the farmers themselves are doing the work, and that if this fund, primarily, seems to go to overhead administration or supervision it should to multiply the results obtainable. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I feel that if my friends who are opposing this item could be out in the great West when one of the great droughts appear, they would not oppose this appropriation. I have seen the hot winds come and sweep with a blistering trail across the prairies of that great country, the heavens become brass, and the earth as iron, and people were very much discouraged.

It is a great country, it is the bread basket of America, but there are periods when water is truly the life of the land. In most of that area, I know in the southwestern area, the average annual rainfall is 21 inches per year over a 30- or 40-year period. That is enough to make a crop if the water is properly handled, but when the land becomes as hard as iron and the rain comes in a flood it rushes off, 80 or 90 percent of it, and they do not get the advantage of it.

When they hold the water there, through furrows in the pasture and contouring of the land and through the use of wells and small ponds, the land produces. I have seen projects of several thousand acres including a number of farmers that had the benefit of this furrowing and contouring, and this expert advice and engineering where the grass would be twice as good and the crops twice as good, where the rainfall was the same, but where they had properly utilized the water.

I have had these farmers come to me and say, "Is there not some way we can get the Department to send the engineer or some one to show us how? We will do the work. We want to get our land and our water and our crops saved." Now, this is heart rending, but it is true. I do not believe there will be $500,000 spent by this Government this year that will do as much as this $500,000 will do.

It is easy for those who have never faced the blazing and suffocating drought to take water for granted, to refer to frog ponds, and to the field men who are doing this grand job as bureaucrats, and to make light of the parching thirst of land and people. But let the Missouri or some other great river go on a rampage, and they cry out for help and get it. And they should. But how much better it is to use the water to slake human and natural thirst, before it reaches the flood stage.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM] told me that on one occasion when the land on which he lived was so dry they were digging wells, trying to get water for the stock, that one scientific man came from Washington, found water, 17 wells were sunk, and in every case they found water for the keeping of their livestock. Now that man is worth while.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I thank the gentleman.

Some reference was made to the item of traveling. As a matter of fact, when you are in the country you must do some traveling. Many of these farmers only want somebody to show them how to do the work and save this water for themselves and save their country. It will save the Government many millions of dollars in the long run. It is like preventive medicine. It is conservation in the truest and finest sense. The work should go forward. It means much to the entire West, to the land, to the people, and to the Nation.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to my colleague from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. This program has been under way for about 3 years and is now in full swing. This is a very modest sum, and it is all for administrative purposes. Is it not a fact that if this appropriation is denied that this great work will have to fold up?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Certainly, that is true, and it would be a great loss to the country. Oh, if people only understood what water conservation means to the rich western land and to our future food supply, the vote would be unanimous.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, if the House will indulge me for a very few minutes, I would like to read a message from a French labor leader, that appears in the afternoon paper. Speaking of the procession of thousands of refugees fleeing from France, he sent this message to America:

"I wonder," said the labor leader, "whether you will ever see anything like that in America. For your sake, I hope you never shall."

Then, apparently more to himself than to me:

"That"—pointing to the tragic processions below—"is one of the things that democracies must learn how to avoid. It is a result of a combination of many things—of Trojan horsemen and 'fifth columnists,' of actual enemies, secret and avowed, undermining a country from within.

"It is also the result of the mistake made by sincere supporters of democracy who, while pursuing ends desirable in themselves, wholly forgot that without adequate national defense the social gains, however marvelous, were doomed to be lost, and much more with them.

"What a lesson this should be for the future—for America and for democracy in general. The democracies have a tremendously difficult problem ahead, but it must be solved if any of them is to survive. They must find a way to make capital, labor, and government all realize that the general good of one is inseparably bound up with the good of the others.

"They must find a way to prevent Trojan horsemen and 'fifth columnists' from using free institutions to destroy those same institutions. What I mean is that, in Germany and Russia, there is no such thing as freedom of speech and assembly and religion—no civil liberty. Those expressing views contrary to the idea of the governments are promptly liquidated.

"Yet agents of Hitlerism and Stalinism, paid and unpaid, have been given free rein in countries like mine—and yours—where they invoke the very freedoms they seek to destroy, in order to conceal their nefarious activities.

"Of course, the solution is difficult, but it must be found as a matter of sheer self-defense in such a world as this."

I hope that the administration will cooperate with us in getting a solution of this problem before adjournment. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, this question has been rather exhaustively discussed, but I take this time to say that I agree with the gentlemen who have spoken in favor of it, and I feel that by all means we ought to allow this $500,000 to carry on this water-facilities program which has been in operation for about 3 years. I am sorry that so many of our colleagues seem to wholly misunderstand the program. It is truly a worth-while program, and it must be continued.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if my colleagues will bear with me for a moment or two while I read a paper released from the American Legion headquarters. There is no group in the United States who understands war any better than do the veterans of the last war, and today, one of the great veterans' organizations who speak for the veterans of this country is the American Legion, and I read to you the statement issued this morning from the Legion headquarters by O. K. Armstrong at Springfield, Mo.:

AMERICAN LEGION AND WAR IN EUROPE

THE AMERICAN LEGION NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS,
Indianapolis, Ind.

Statement issued from American Legion Headquarters, Washington; O. K. Armstrong, of Springfield, Mo., member of the Foreign Relations Committee, declares that the hour has struck for the American Legion to take a stand against involvement of the United States in war. Mr. Armstrong, magazine writer, conferred last week with National Commander Raymond J. Kelly and with Foreign Relations Chairman Wilbur Alter.

The hour has struck for the American Legion to take a vigorous stand and assume leadership to keep this country from involvement in war.

The program of the American Legion, from resolutions of past national conventions and committee actions, stands squarely for keeping our country at peace through a strong national defense and noninterference in the quarrels of other nations. Legionnaires everywhere should make an effort to carry out the mandate of the last national convention in Chicago, which reads:

PREVENT INVOLVEMENT IN THIS CONFLICT

We not only believe that this Nation need not become involved but insist and demand that the President of the United States and the Congress pursue a policy that, while preserving the sovereignty and dignity of this Nation, will prevent involvement in this conflict.

National Commander Kelly has repeatedly stressed that our security and that of our hemisphere are our primary concern. It is time for the Legion to rally behind him to a man in his recent declaration that it is idle to consider the feasibility of intervening in the great conflict across the Atlantic.

LEGION COMBATING ALL PROPAGANDA

The Legion program calls for combating all propaganda designed to break down our neutrality. If any who plead for our participation in war do so with the hope of profit of any kind, financial, industrial, political, or any other, they should be branded as enemies of our American homes, institutions, and ideals.

We need sane thinking and fast, calm, silent action. A strong man well armed needs no hostile and bitter words to assert his defense.

We must halt the cultivation of the feeling that war inevitably awaits us. It is the American tradition to create good will among men and nations, and the American Legion should take the lead now as never before in continuing that tradition. As a nation intent upon preserving democracy, we shall need all the friendship of foreign governments and peoples we can find.

In recent conferences with National Commander Kelly and Chairman Alter I have pledged my time and energy to this task. I hope my fellow Legionnaires will do likewise.

The greatest contribution the veterans of the last World War can make to America and the world is to preserve our Nation on guard and at peace. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON].

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not take the 3 minutes allotted to me. This program is not in conflict with reclamation. It consists of projects on individual farms that are surveyed and planned by this great organization that helps to develop the facilities on the individual farms at small cost. The 17 States that are interested could not possibly pass this legislation, but 171 Members voted for it before, and I know that this House will have enough national interest to agree to this motion to recede and concur.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this calls for an expenditure of $500,000 to operate a group of bureaucrats. In 1939, the last fiscal year, they spent $52,000 for traveling expenses. They have a flock of automobiles chasing around the country. Last year they spent a total of approximately $368,000. This year they hope to get by with $500,000, and next year they want $500,000 more. Is there a man who knows anything about farming who has any idea that there is any farmer in this country who does not know how to build a small dam to hold back water on his own farm? That is all they say these bureaucrats do, except to spend money for traveling expenses. It is perfectly apparent that the development of wells and that sort of thing is an interesting thing. But they can do those things just as well themselves, as if they had a bureaucrat traveling around the country in an automobile telling them how to do it. I hope you will vote on this and vote no and turn it down.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I shall take only a moment or two. This is the old shelterbelt idea. Formerly the Government planted trees on these dust-bowl farms free of charge and paid the farmers to fence and tend them.

Now they are asking the Government to build ponds on the same farms—to spend public money on private land—not as a loan but as a gratuity, and want half a million dollars to carry on this benevolent work. The truth is that this land should never have been put in cultivation. It is not suited to farming and should have been left as grazing land. Farmers on this marginal land will never be self-sustaining, regardless of how much free money the Government ladles out to them year after year and especially when it is handled as the go-betweens are handling this particular money. They are asking for $500,000. The breakdown accompanying the estimate shows that $360,000 of the $500,000 will go for salaries of high-powered, high-priced employees, and only $140,000 of the $500,000 will actually reach the farmer. In other words, this appropriation is primarily to provide fat, juicy sinecures out of the Public Treasury at a time when the Treasury is empty and every dollar of the $500,000 must be borrowed.

At Valley Forge, when the need of the American Army was greatest and when the fortunes of the Revolution were at the lowest ebb, such few cattle as they were able to obtain for the depleted commissary were bought from the neighboring farmers.

Among them was a cantankerous old gentleman who first agreed to sell his stock for Continental script, but, after the cattle had been delivered, concluded he ought to have British gold. It might have been that he fell under the influence of the contemporary "fifth column." At any rate he visited camp and created considerable disturbance over the price of his beef. Finally he was taken to Washington and Washington listened to him patiently and then said, "Here we are, striving our utmost to maintain harmony, drill an army, and establish the independence of the Colonies and you come rushing into camp bawling, 'Beef, beef, beef.'"

History repeats itself, and at a time when the entire Nation is cooperating on a defense program and exerting every energy to maintain the independence Washington established, these gentlemen inject a discordant note—$500,000 for juicy jobs—and flock to the floor of the House bawling, "Pork, pork, pork." [Applause and laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the preferential motion of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY] to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division there were ayes 130 and noes 92.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 198, nays 147, answered "present" 3, not voting 83, as follows:

Mr. White of Idaho with Mr. Wolverton of New Jersey.
Mr. Sumners of Texas with Mr. Keller.
Mr. Boren with Mr. Taylor.
Mr. Sabath with Mr. Scrugham.
Mr. Mitchell with Mr. Lewis of Ohio.

Mr. LEONARD W. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I had a pair with the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. CURTIS. If he had been present he would have voted "aye." I voted "no." Therefore I withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. KILBURN. Mr. Speaker, I had a pair with the gentleman from Idaho, Mr. DWORSHAK. If he had been present he would have voted "aye." I voted "no." I withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I have a pair with the gentleman from South Dakota, Mr. MUNDT. Had he been present he would have voted "aye." I withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. MICHENER changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on this conference report may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

INVESTIGATION BY F. B. I.

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (Rept. No. 2651), which was referred to the House calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 537

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of House Joint Resolution 571, a joint resolution to authorize the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice to conduct investigations in the interests of national defense, and for that purpose to permit wire tapping in certain cases. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTION

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (Rept. No. 2652), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 538

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 10100, a bill to establish the composition of the United States Navy, to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the Members, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in the Appendix of the RECORD an amendment that I propose to offer to the sugar bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

RELIEF APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the resolution (H. J. Res. 544) making appropriations for work relief and relief, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

UNLAWFUL USE OF BADGE, MEDAL, OR EMBLEM OF VETERANS' ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 5982) for the protection against unlawful use of the badge, medal, emblem, or other insignia of veterans' organizations incorporated by act of Congress, and for providing penalties for the violation thereof.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5982) for the protection against unlawful use of the badge, medal, emblem, or other insignia of veterans' organizations incorporated by Act of Congress, and providing penalties for the violation thereof, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "manufacture, sale, or purchase for resale,"; and restore after such words the following language stricken out by the Senate amendment, viz, "either separately or appended to, or to be appended to, or the reproduction on any article of merchandise manufactured or sold," and the Senate agreed to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2 and agree to the same.

HATTON SUMNERS,
FRANCIS E. WALTER,
JOHN W. GWYNNE,
Managers on the part of the House.

PAT MCCARRAN,
FREDERICK VAN NUYS,
JOHN A. DANAHER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5982) for the protection against unlawful use of the badge, medal, emblem, or other insignia of veterans' organizations incorporated by act of Congress, and providing penalties for the violation thereof, submit the following explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon in conference and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Senate amendment No. 1 proposed to change the words "manufacturing, wearing, purchase or sale, either separately or appended to, or to be appended to, or the reproduction on any article of merchandise manufactured or sold" to the following language: "manufacture or sale in interstate commerce." The amendment would have limited the bill to apply to manufacture or sale in interstate commerce. The House receded from its disagreement to the amendment with an amendment to insert the following in lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment: "manufacture, sale or purchase for resale" followed by the language "either separately or appended to, or to be appended to, or the reproduction on any article of merchandise manufactured or sold,"; and the Senate agreed to the amendment.

Senate amendment No. 2 added to the prohibited acts the reproduction of insignia for commercial purposes. This amendment was regarded as strengthening the bill; and the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment.

HATTON SUMNERS,
FRANCIS E. WALTER,
JOHN W. GWYNNE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. This is the bill on which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] was one of the conferees?

Mr. WALTER. Yes; and he is present. It is a complete agreement.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FERGUSON, Mr. MURDOCK of Utah, and Mr. REED of New York asked and were given permission to revise and extend their remarks.

FRED B. WOODWARD

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may be discharged from consideration of the bill (S. 3727) limiting the operation of certain sections of the Criminal Code and the Revised Statutes, and that the bill be rereferred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this agreeable to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The clerk of the Judiciary Committee called me and asked if we would have this bill rereferred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. An identical House bill was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, has been reported by the committee, and is now on the calendar. In the meantime the Senate has passed a similar Senate bill. When it came to the desk it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Because the Committee on Indian Affairs had jurisdiction of the original House bill dealing with this subject the Senate bill should be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs also.

Mr. MICHENER. Is this rereference agreeable to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I presume it is. The clerk of the committee called and asked me to have this done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article appearing in the Saturday Evening Post, by John McCutcheon.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Monroe Doctrine.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, on the 18th of June our colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLEOD] spoke over the red network of the National Broadcasting Co. I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein that address.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from George N. Peek.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WOLVERTON (at the request of Mr. POWERS), indefinitely, on account of official business.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, on May 28, less than a month ago, I addressed the House on the subject of Senate Resolution 245 and the vital importance of its adoption to the people of the city of Detroit. I did not then, nor shall I now, attempt to impress upon my colleagues from other States—Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Texas, particularly—the bearing of that resolution upon the daily lives and the rights of millions of their constituents.

Senate Resolution 245, introduced by Senator NYE last March 14, authorizes an investigation not merely of Federal antitrust violations in natural gas commerce but likewise the enforcement of those antitrust laws and the general administration of justice, affecting the consumers of natural gas in this country. As indicated by my previous address, Mr. Speaker, the preliminary hearings on Senate Resolution 245 by a Senate Judiciary Subcommittee, chairmanned by Senator HATCH, have been concluded. And I am gratified to report for the RECORD, Mr. Speaker, that Senator HATCH's subcommittee on Monday, June 10, informed the Senate Judiciary Committee that a full investigation is warranted.

You may recall that those preliminary hearings were marked especially by testimony of a grave nature by the Honorable John W. Smith, who is president of the common council of the city of Detroit, former mayor, and citizen of undoubted integrity. Mr. Smith, speaking also as chairman of the natural gas committee of the United States Conference of Mayors, testified as follows, and I now read from a transcript excerpt of the hearing:

Senator HATCH. Mr. Smith wants to take a train. Would you mind deferring to him for just a moment or two so that we can accommodate him?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Lee was going to ask me a question, I think.

Mr. LEE. The question I would like to ask Mr. Smith before he leaves is whether he has any information as to why the proposal of the consent decree at the present time—if you want to characterize it that way—came about.

Mr. SMITH. At the Department of Justice, in conference with the Assistant Attorney General, Mr. Arnold, and other gentlemen who were attached to the Antitrust Division, I asked them why they wanted to proceed in this manner. They said there were two reasons. The first was that they could prosecute these cases, but that that would take 2 years or more. The second reason was that they had a bad court in Delaware.

Senator HATCH. When was this conference?

Mr. SMITH. This was on several occasions. There were a number of people in the room at the time—the corporation counsel of the city of Detroit and eight or nine persons were in the room, some of whom were connected with the Mokan.

Senator HATCH. Is that the only comment you care to make?

Mr. SMITH. That is what he asked me to make.

Former Senator BULKLEY. The conference that Mr. Smith referred to was on July 11. I referred to it myself.

Mr. Speaker, I venture to predict that the testimony I have just quoted will become historic, for it raises an issue that can never be resolved until a thorough and determined search for all the truth has been completed and a cure is found for whatever evils may be brought to light. In the pursuit of that truth, and with a hope of speeding Senate action on Senate Resolution 245, I wish to read into the record the text of four communications. The first is a letter which I addressed to the Honorable John P. Nields, of the United States district court, Wilmington, Del., on June 5, 1940. The second is a letter I received, under date of June 6, from Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold. The third is from the copy of a letter which Mr. Arnold informs me he has sent to Judge Nields, also under date of June 6. My fourth exhibit, Mr. Speaker, is the text of a letter which was sent to the Senate Judiciary Committee, attention Senator HATCH, under date of June 12, by John W. Smith, as Detroit council president and natural-gas committee chairman of the Mayors' Conference.

My letter to Judge Nields, Mr. Speaker, was principally for the purpose of urging that he assure to the public a double protection by referring the new proposed "consent decree" to the Federal Trade Commission as master in chancery. This was the course Congress had intended could be followed by a Federal court in consent-decree matters, and in view of the statement attributed to Mr. Arnold I felt that the court might not want to overlook such reasonable and effective procedure. The letter follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 5, 1940.

Hon. JOHN P. NIELDS,
United States District Court, Wilmington, Del.

DEAR SIR: By way of introduction, permit me to say that my name is JOHN D. DINGELL, and that I am a Member of Congress, representing the Fifteenth Congressional District of the State of Michigan, located within the city limits of Detroit.

I write you in connection with the case of the United States of America, petitioner, v. Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation et al., defendants (in equity No. 1099), now pending in your court on a motion for the approval of a plan purporting to end a monopoly and restraint of trade in natural gas, which is seriously injurious to the people of my district and throughout a large and populous contiguous area.

This letter is prompted by my conviction, which I have held since 1935, that the only certainly effective remedy for the restraint cited above is simple but effective—namely, the complete and permanent separation of the Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co. and Michigan Gas Transmission Corporation from both defendants, Columbia Oil & Gasoline Corporation and Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation, as well as from the general body of their substantially identical stockholders.

The failure of the Department of Justice to insist in your court upon the above remedy, despite the fact that in its several petitions filed in the case the Department specifically prayed for that relief, has resulted in the introduction of a resolution in the Senate of the United States for an investigation to determine whether the antitrust laws have been violated in commerce in natural gas, and "whether the antitrust laws have been fully, adequately, and impartially enforced to enable consumers and potential consumers to obtain supplies of natural gas * * * on a competitive basis."

At public hearings before a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate, recently held on this resolution, testimony was given by responsible persons that high officials of the Department of Justice, in charge of enforcing the antitrust laws, had declared that the Government is being forced to accept an unsatisfactory and less effective remedy for this illegal restraint—namely, the "plan" described above—because the judge to whom the matter has been presented is a "bad judge," who will not grant the relief prescribed by law, which has been traditionally followed in similar cases, and which the gravity of the situation in this particular case manifestly demands.

Prior to these hearings on the above resolution (S. Res. 245), the Attorney General stated (in a letter to United States Senator GERALD P. NYE, March 15, 1940): "I have no doubt that Judge Nields would welcome any information which would be helpful in arriving at a determination of the fairness, equity, and legality of the proposed plan." The Attorney General, however, I am informed, has opposed the city of Detroit's entry into the case with a result that the city's formal petition for permission to intervene in this case has been denied by your court. As an intervener, the city of Detroit would have been in a position to safeguard the more than one and one-half million citizens of my community on this basis, i. e., that it would have been able to procure a review of the decision of your court in the appellate court, and finally, if necessary, in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Obviously, the appearance in this case of a great community so vitally concerned, as is the community which I represent, on the narrow and limited basis of amicus curiae, is inadequate. Therefore, the suggestion advanced to Senator NYE by the Attorney General, I take it, applies to any Member of the Congress, so that I now bring to your attention a method which Congress intended should be used by the courts in such cases as this, and which would assure to all interested parties a full and complete hearing by an agency ideally equipped to investigate and report to your court upon the efficacy of this particular "Columbia plan."

I refer to section 7, Federal Trade Commission Act, September 26, 1914 (38 Stat. 717), which reads as follows:

"SEC. 7. That in any suit in equity brought by or under the direction of the Attorney General as provided by the antitrust acts the court may, upon the conclusion of the testimony therein, if it shall be then of opinion that the complainant is entitled to relief, refer said suit to the Commission, as a master in chancery, to ascertain and report an appropriate form of decree therein. The Commission shall proceed upon such notice to the parties and under such rules of procedure as the court may prescribe, and upon the coming in of such report such exceptions may be filed and such proceedings had in relation thereto as upon the report of a master in other equity causes, but the court may adopt or reject such report, in whole or in part, and enter such decree as the nature of the case may in its judgment require."

As a Member of Congress, I can only say that any inference that justice is being withheld by a "bad judge" is a charge of the most serious character, and nothing should be left undone by any agency having jurisdiction in the matter to establish the truth or dispel the fallacy of such a statement.

An inquiry by the Federal Trade Commission, as a master in chancery, under section 7 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, would assuredly comply with the intent of Congress, since the Commission, by authority of Congress and at great cost, has within recent years conducted a thorough investigation of monopolistic conditions in the natural-gas industry.

Its lengthy investigations have given the Federal Trade Commission an experience and skill not approached by any other agency or individual. This facility is available for use by your court in this case. The section was enacted by Congress obviously because it was felt that the Trade Commission would become the most useful adjunct to a court of equity in the formulation of decrees in cases dealing with monopolies and restraints of trade.

I am aware that hearings on this proposed Columbia plan have been completed by one master in chancery, but in an issue so grave as this, and in these days when our form of government and our American concepts of justice are being so viciously assailed, the opportunity for your court to obtain a double check on the Columbia plan by the Federal Trade Commission, it seems to me, merits your consideration.

Another reason is, production of machinery for national defense will be seriously affected by the restriction upon the use of natural gas by manufacturers in the Detroit and nearby areas which exists in this case. The fuel and transportation shortages which so seriously impeded the country in the last war strongly confirm this view; and it goes without saying that they ought not to be permitted to recur. In fact, nothing should be permitted to endanger the fullest development and use of all available fuels in this important industrial area in the interest of national defense. A reexamination of this matter by the Federal Trade Commission is, therefore, no reflection upon the master, who passed upon the plan at a time when present conditions were not foreseen.

The present consent decree, entered in 1936, has been described by the Detroit Common Council as "a delusion and a snare," and I can well share the fears of the city of Detroit that justice may be again impeded and your court led into error. In an address to the House of Representatives on May 28, last, I made a statement concerning the Columbia consent decree of January 29, 1936, which conveys also my opinion of the present so-called Columbia plan. I stated:

"I always did have a strong suspicion that this whole deal, including above everything else the consent decree, was a betrayal of the public interest, and I so stated before the committee. I added that the stench reached the high heavens. I condemned the cowardice which caused the acceptance of the consent agreement because it was the trick which I warned the negotiators about in my letter of September 3, 1935, which I reproduce herewith:

"It would have been better to have lost everything than to have accepted a shameful, hollow compromise sanctioned by the court which turned out to be of no advantage to the Panhandle Co. and to the city of Detroit."

In conclusion, may I present again the single purpose of this letter, namely, to respectfully request that your court place the entire Columbia plan before the Federal Trade Commission as master in chancery, as authorized by section 7 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, so that—

(a) A double check may be given by an unexcelled authority on all facts and arguments presented on the Columbia plan to date;

(b) All pertinent information available or obtainable since conclusion of earlier hearings on this plan may be brought into the record of the case.

Accepting the open invitation of the Attorney General to address you, I urge this course in the firm belief that it will be extremely helpful to your court "in arriving at a determination of the fairness, equity, and legality of the proposed plan."

I am transmitting copies of this letter to the clerk of your court with the request that they be forwarded to the several parties in the case.

Respectfully yours,

JOHN D. DINGELL.

The second letter, from Mr. Arnold to me, reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, June 6, 1940.

Hon. JOHN D. DINGELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN DINGELL: If you decide to publish your letter to Judge Nields in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, will you please introduce into the RECORD at the same time my own letter to Judge Nields, which I mailed to him today, a copy of which is enclosed. If you do not introduce your letter, I will not make my reply public.

Sincerely,

THURMAN ARNOLD,
Assistant Attorney General.

The third letter, that is, the text of a copy of a letter which Mr. Arnold informs me he sent to Judge Nields, is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washingon, June 6, 1940.

Hon. JOHN P. NIELDS,
United States District Court, Wilmington, Del.

DEAR JUDGE NIELDS: A copy of the letter to you by Congressman DINGELL, of Michigan, dated June 6, 1940, relating to the case of United States against Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation et al., now pending before you, has been brought to my attention. I understand the Congressman intends to publish his letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It contains statements to the effect that high officials of the Department said you were "a bad judge," and for that reason we were being forced to accept an unsatisfactory remedy in that case. This statement is false. It also contains a statement that we opposed the city of Detroit's entry into the case. That statement is also false. On the contrary, the Department urged the Detroit officials to express their views to the court. In spite of this they did not appear at the hearing on the plan, which is the subject of the Congressman's letter.

The whole matter of the relation of the Department to your court was aired in an investigation before a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee. At that hearing an attempt was made by those attacking the Department of Justice to embarrass the relationship between this Department and your court by testimony of confidential conversations in which the witness stated remarks were made about you personally. In replying to this testimony I declined to enter into the issue of veracity between myself and those witnesses on what might have been said about your honor. In the first place, I had no recollection of any remarks about you. In the second place, I consider it undignified to discuss personal opinions about a Federal court in a congressional hearing. In the third place, it was my impression that the committee itself considered such a discussion extremely distasteful and inappropriate.

In view of the publication of the letter by Congressman DINGELL, I think, however, that I should say that at no time was your honor's integrity or ability ever called into question in any conversation and anyone who asserts that it was is making a false statement. At the hearing the charges against the Department of Justice were shown to be without any foundation whatever. That should conclude the matter.

I regret that I have to write this letter. It is necessary only because the letter written by Congressman DINGELL attempts to rehash that phase of the investigation from a partisan point of view. Therefore, unless a reply is published, Congressman DINGELL's letter might give an erroneous impression of the attitude of the Department toward your court.

Sincerely,

THURMAN ARNOLD,
Assistant Attorney General.

The fourth letter, the text of a copy of a letter sent by Mr. Smith to the Senate Judiciary Committee, is my final exhibit. In view of Detroit's key importance to preparations for national defense, Mr. Smith's appeal cannot be ignored. But I direct attention, too, to Mr. Smith's reiterated support of the testimony he gave before Senator HATCH's subcommittee. This letter reads as follows:

CITY OF DETROIT, June 12, 1940.

Re Senate Resolution 245.
SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.
(Attention Hon. CARL D. HATCH, chairman, Senate Judiciary Subcommittee.)

MY DEAR SENATOR: On Monday last the President told the Nation: "We will not slow down or detour. Signs and signals call for speed—full speed ahead!"

I quote this challenging statement on national defense, Senator, because it brings into sharper focus the public need for early adoption of Senate Resolution 245 by the United States Senate. For if Detroit industries are to fulfill their vital functions in helping to rearm America with maximum efficiency, they are entitled to the use of a constant, ample natural-gas supply at a low cost.

I repeat the President's statement here because I also learned on last Monday that Senate Resolution 245 may be shelved until Congress reconvenes next January. Such a delay would, in my opinion, be an unfortunate slow down or detour instead of a speed-up toward effective national security.

Natural gas is primarily an industrial fuel. A Cleveland manufacturer once declared that "no greater catastrophe could befall Cleveland than the loss of its natural-gas supply." Detroit industrialists first petitioned the Detroit Common Council for natural gas in 1930. Today, 10 years later, though faced by a Nation's supreme demands, they are still without it in substantial quantity.

I testified before your subcommittee that Detroit can use 220,000,000 cubic feet of natural gas daily; but less than half that volume is under contract now, in a normal time. You need only recall the serious fuel famines of the first World War to recognize the strategic importance of building a second natural-gas pipe line to Detroit as a Federal defense weapon. But our city can hope for no such relief until the unlawful restraints imposed by the Columbia Gas & Electric interests are permanently removed.

But Senate Resolution 245 can do more than help to strengthen America against enemies without. It can bring to light serious weaknesses within our country. If democracy is to endure, it must have the desire and will to clean its own house. On that basis alone, the city of Detroit can properly appeal for Senate adoption of Senate Resolution 245.

Further, the record should show, Senator, that I stand squarely and resolutely behind the testimony I gave before your subcommittee last April, in relating the reasons advanced to me and to others by Justice Department officials, for their acceptance of the so-called Columbia plan, which affects Detroit so deeply.

As president of the Detroit Common Council and as chairman of the Natural Gas Committee of the United States Conference of Mayors, may I say that the reflection cast upon the Federal court by Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold was unmistakable in its import, and I am ready to bring corroborating witnesses before any committee of the Senate or the House of Representatives.

I refer to such a matter with extreme reluctance, Senator, but I may say that, even in 1935, the late Senator Couzens believed that a Senate inquiry into the natural-gas monopolies was justified. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, v. 79, p. 3785, S. Res. 108.) How much more impelling, then, is our need for the adoption of Senate Resolution 245 in 1940?

On behalf of the mayors' conference and my own city, I want to thank you, Senator, for the fair and earnest attention you are giving, as chairman of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee, to the merits of Senate Resolution 245. We hope for early and favorable action by the full committee.

Respectfully,

———— ————,
President, Common Council, City of Detroit, and Chairman, Natural Gas Committee, United States Conference of Mayors.

Mr. Speaker, I am entering these communications not only because they belong in the RECORD but also as an earnest and candid invitation to Judge Nields to discuss my suggestion that the Federal Trade Commission be asked to reexamine the so-called Columbia plan, which is opposed bitterly by the city of Detroit, and which, by circumstances, allegedly has also been forced upon the Department of Justice.

I want to say further, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Smith's testimony cannot be tested without a full Senate inquiry, nor can the serious charge attributed to Mr. Arnold be dispelled by mere denial. Meantime, let me warn the Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation that my city's capacity for resistance is powerful and tenacious.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 9117. An act to eliminate the tax on brandy and wine spirits used in the fortification of wine; to increase the tax on wine; to compensate for the loss of revenue occasioned by the elimination of the tax on brandy and wine spirits used in the fortification of wine; and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9909. An act to amend sections 2803 (c) and 2903 of the Internal Revenue Code.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 9117. An act to eliminate the tax on brandy and wine spirits used in the fortification of wine; to increase the tax on wine; to compensate for the loss of revenue occasioned by the elimination of the tax on brandy and wine spirits used in the fortification of wine; and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9909. An act to amend sections 2803 (c) and 2903 of the Internal Revenue Code.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, June 20, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1767. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to provide, in cooperation with the Port of New York Authority, for the construction in New York Harbor of a graving drydock large enough to accommodate the largest naval ships built or building; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

1768. A letter from the Chairman, Civil Aeronautics Authority, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to provide for a grant to the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co. of a right-of-way across certain land owned by the United States; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

1769. A letter from the President, Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend section 2 of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the suppression of prostitution in the District of Columbia," approved August 15, 1935; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JUNE 20, 1940

(Legislative day of Tuesday, May 28, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and everlasting God, who hast taught us in Thy holy word that Thou dost not willingly grieve or afflict the children of men, and that those who sleep in Thee sleep not eternally: Accept our prayers on behalf of the soul of Thy servant, now departed from this Senate. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and may light perpetual shine upon him and upon all who mourn his loss, till we shall all be gathered into the fellowship of Thy saints. Through Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Wednesday, June 19, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

DEATH OF SENATOR ERNEST W. GIBSON, OF VERMONT

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the seat on my right, occupied for the last few years by my distinguished colleague ERNEST W. GIBSON, is vacant and is in mourning. My colleague passed on this morning to that Upper Chamber in which his virtuous life and his noble character entitle him to a seat among the very elect, of those who loved their fellow man.

On his desk we lay the unfading amaranth, representing the devoted regard of every one of his colleagues in this great body, of the officers and officials of the United States Senate, of the official reporters, of the members of the press, of the pages, of the doorkeepers, of everyone who had any contact at all with Senator GIBSON during his long and faithful and distinguished service here on Capitol Hill.

He was born in 1872 in Londonderry, Vt., the son of William L. and Saville Stowell Gibson. I remember visiting that hilltop farm about 7 years ago, and viewing the horizons of his youth, whence I have no doubt came some of the strength and nobility of his character, for one may not omit to receive from those Green Mountains, with the shining rivers in between, a stimulating energy, and a stability which comes from their very moderation and the calm beauty of their wooded slopes.

He married in 1897 Grace Fullerton Hadley, of Chester, and to them four children were born—Hadley Gibson, deceased; Ernest W. Gibson, Jr., now secretary of the Vermont Senate; Preston F. Gibson, now municipal judge of Brattleboro, and Doris Gibson, whose filial piety is well known to us all, whose love devoted her life to promoting his welfare and his happiness.

Senator GIBSON, by choice, was a lawyer, and, Mr. President, by choice, he was a soldier. He early showed his interest in military affairs, and enlisted in the Vermont National Guard in 1899. He rose to the rank of colonel before his enlistment expired in 1908. Returning to the service in 1915, he served on the Mexican border, and later went overseas during the World War as a captain of infantry, and from 1921 to 1923 served as colonel of the One Hundred and Seventy-second Vermont Infantry. He served in the House of Representatives for a period of over 10 years before coming to the Senate, first taking his seat December 5, 1923, and serving continuously in that body through the Sixty-eighth, Sixty-ninth, Seventieth, Seventy-first, Seventy-second, and Seventy-third Congresses until his appointment to the United States Senate by Gov. Stanley C. Wilson November 21, 1933. He was elected for the unexpired term of Senator Porter H. Dale January 16, 1934, and was reelected for the full term November 8, 1938.

He was a member of many important committees during his service in both Houses of Congress; and at the time of his death he held membership on the Naval Affairs, Commerce, Library, Civil Service, and Territories and Insular Affairs Committees.

He was a frequent visitor to Hawaii, and made several trips during his terms to the Philippine Islands and other insular possessions for the purpose of obtaining information for use in formulating constructive policies relating to territorial and insular affairs, in which he was especially interested.

During the months in which the Commerce Committee was engaged in maritime legislation and amendments to the pure food and drug laws, Senator GIBSON worked arduously with the late Senator Copeland, chairman of the committee.

Senator GIBSON was an ardent worker for the welfare of Vermont, and rendered conspicuous service while in the House in his pursuit of Federal funds to pay in part for the losses sustained in the flood of 1927, the most disastrous in the history of Vermont. After a long fight, waged largely in House committees, Representative GIBSON was successful in getting the bill over to the Senate. Proposing aid to the extent of $2,654,000, the bill was finally approved and attached to the agricultural appropriation bill of 1929, which was approved May 16, 1928. These funds were a great help to the State in its rehabilitation program.

His service on the District of Columbia Committee in the House and the Senate resulted in legislation helpful to the schools, hospitals, and parks of the District of Columbia.

He was a constant newspaper reader, and was usually prepared early in the morning to discuss the most important daily events as set forth particularly in the New York newspapers, which he carried under his arm. He became something of a minute man in this respect. Besides, he was a prolific contributor of letters to newspapers on public questions, and he pounded out his ideas on a typewriter in the manner of a skilled newspaper man.

Mr. President, the people of Vermont, who reelected him by a significant majority—a vote of 73,990 to 38,673—loved Senator GIBSON. He did not have to make a campaign for reelection. By choice, and wishing to have that fine contact with his people which comes from service on the public platform, he made a few speeches during his campaign; but there was no expenditure of funds; there was no hustling about and organizing. Senator GIBSON was reelected as a demonstration of the confidence and regard of the people of the State of Vermont, and they will grievously miss him.

Our hearts go out to his faithful office staff. Throughout his rather long illness, and the gallant battle preceding his demise, they have been constantly watching and praying for his welfare.

I must be pardoned for making a personal reference in order to record a fact which I think is worthy of perpetual memory, and that is that during all the time of our joint service in the Congress of the United States, and though we frequently voted differently regarding measures pending here and general policies, there never has been a single unkind episode between us. I shall prize, I shall always cherish that remarkable, kind, friendly, affable, witty relationship which was due largely to the character of ERNEST W. GIBSON.

To his family we cannot possibly do so much as we wish we could, but we here record our deepest sympathy for them.

Mr. President, it was characteristic of ERNEST W. GIBSON to be modest, unassuming, to give little weight to protocol and conventionality, and to set value upon the substance rather than the form. In his lifetime he would have preferred that the Senate of the United States continue, in these strenuous hours, its labor of trying to provide means of national defense, rather than take the customary action of adjourning immediately out of respect for his memory. His survivors—these boys and this daughter of his—thoroughly appreciate the character of their father, and have requested us not to allow even this great sadness and even our great love and regard for their father to interrupt the progress of the public business.

Mr. President, in view of the patriotism represented in the suggestions of this sorrowing family, in view of their faith that their father, if alive, would have wanted this thing done, I shall ask that the Senate proceed with the business of the day as a mark of respect for the great character of ERNEST W. GIBSON, and then permit me, at a suitable hour in the day, to make the customary motion that the Senate adjourn in testimony of our great regard and our great sorrow at the passing of ERNEST W. GIBSON.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is little that I can add to the very beautiful and touching tribute which has been paid to Senator GIBSON, whom we all admired and respected, by his colleague, whom we all admire and respect. No greater tribute could be paid to the memory of Senator GIBSON than has been paid to him already by his family, who have made this request, speaking sentiments which no doubt he himself would entertain, and which, for all we know, may have been communicated to them, in regard to the action suggested by the Senator from Vermont.

One's public service and private character are not always measured by verbosity. Frequently that characteristic may denote the lack of public service and private character.

I knew Senator GIBSON many years. I admired him, and I had for him great personal affection. As his colleague has said, he was modest and unobtrusive, but genuine. He represented in a real sense the rugged hills of his State and of New England, from which there has been diffused throughout the length of this great land that blood which has helped to make this Nation a great Republic.

In the vast armies of Napoleon there was one soldier for whom Napoleon had a deep affection. He was a private in the ranks, and on many occasions Napoleon offered to promote him, but he always refused, on the ground that he preferred to serve in the ranks of Napoleon's army. His name was Latour d'Auvergne, and when finally he died in action Napoleon ordered that his heart should be preserved, and that on each roll call his name should be called and his nearest comrade should reply, "Dead on the field of honor."

In view of the character of our departed colleague, in view of his record in legislative and in military matters, serving his country, I think we can all say today that he died on the field of honor.

Mr. President, I appreciate what has been said by the Senator from Vermont. I appreciate this wonderful feeling on the part of Senator GIBSON's family. For many years we have sat here and observed his beautiful and charming daughter in the gallery and have noted her devotion to her father. I can assure the Senator and the Senate that we will not have a prolonged session today, but will proceed for a while, according to the request, with the business of the Senate, after which the Senator from Vermont may make his motion.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority, fiscal year 1941, in the amount of $25,000,000, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF LABOR AND FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY (S. DOC. NO. 242)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriation required by the Department of Labor and the Federal Security Agency, fiscal year 1941, amounting to $22,590,000, which, with the accompanying paper, were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES, FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY (S. DOC. NO. 243)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Federal Works Agency, fiscal year 1941, in amount of $9,700,000, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, DEPARTMENT OF STATE (S. DOC. NO. 244)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of State, fiscal year 1941, amounting to $500,000, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, WAR DEPARTMENT (S. DOC. NO. 245)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the War Department, Army Air Corps, fiscal year 1941, to be immediately available, amounting to $43,500,000, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR (S. DOC. NO. 249)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of the Interior, fiscal year 1941, amounting to $600,000, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE (S. DOC. NO. 250)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of Commerce, fiscal year 1941, amounting to $239,000, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

RIGHT-OF-WAY TO THE RICHMOND, FREDERICKSBURG & POTOMAC RAILROAD CO.—WASHINGTON NATIONAL AIRPORT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide for a grant to the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co. of a right-of-way across certain land owned by the United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Memorializing the Congress of the United States to recognize Louisiana's interest in the sugar industry by permitting it to produce a greater proportion of the continental sugar consumption

Whereas the Louisiana sugar industry has become a very efficient industry but has been throttled by unprogressive policies of the Agricultural Department of the United States Government; and

Whereas under the 1937 Sugar Act arbitrary figures were adopted to control sugar production in the United States; and

Whereas Louisiana's sugar quota for 1940 is 362,000 tons, or 36,000 tons less than its 1904 sugar production; and in contrast thereto the quota for beet-sugar production and for sugar production of the Territorial possessions of the United States has been materially increased over the figure of 1904; and

Whereas the basis for the Louisiana quota is further unfair, unjust, and unreasonable because the period used by the Department of Agriculture in arriving at the basis between the years 1909–13 is a period when our Louisiana cane suffered from mosaic disease and from drought; that the acre production during said period of time was 2,154 pounds and now the acre production is 3,681 pounds: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of Louisiana (the house of representatives concurring), That we do respectfully urge upon the Congress of the United States, now in session, that the proper authorities vested with the control of continental sugar production be requested to give the State of Louisiana a fairer sugar quota; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this concurrent resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, to Louisiana's senatorial and congressional Representatives in Washington, and to the press.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Memorializing the Congress of the United States and the Civil Aeronautics Authority to establish an aviation base at Lafayette, La.

Whereas the United States, in its defense program, is seeking to establish aviation bases in various sections of the country; and

Whereas the city of Lafayette, La., offers a modern airport with latest equipment and facilities; and

Whereas there is now in the city of Lafayette, La., a college known as Southwestern Louisiana Institute, where students study aviation, several of whom have already received pilot's licenses; and

Whereas in the defense program Lafayette, being near the Gulf coast, could be used for an air base to prevent any successful attacks through the Gulf of Mexico; and

Whereas, should the existing airport be not sufficiently large to fill the requirements and needs of the Federal Government for an air base, there is a sufficient quantity of lands that could be acquired adjoining the airport to make the said airport as large as necessary: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Louisiana (the house of representatives concurring), That we do respectfully urge upon the Congress of the United States, now in session, and the Civil Aeronautics Authority that the proper authorities vested with the selection of air bases in the national-defense program be requested to make Lafayette, La., one of its air bases; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this concurrent resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, the Louisiana senatorial and congressional representatives in Washington, and to the press.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Memorializing the Congress of the United States to adopt such legislation and to provide such funds as may be necessary to establish and maintain an adequate national defense for the United States of America

Whereas a greater part of the armies of the civilized world are now engaged in mortal combat which will inevitably result in the loss of countless lives, the destruction of property, and jeopardize the very existence of nations themselves; and

Whereas due to the improved mechanized power of modern warfare, particularly in the air, the position of the United States of America is not secure from attack by the aggressors of the world; and

Whereas the President of the United States of America has, on Thursday, May 16, 1940, recommended to the Congress of the United States that it do immediately provide funds in the amount of not less than $1,182,000,000 to strengthen the national defense of the United States; and

Whereas it is the deliberate opinion of these legislative bodies that such action is not only proper but necessary in order to insure the safety of this Nation and the perpetuation of American interest and ideals, to the end that the best interests of this Nation may be served: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Louisiana (and the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized to forthwith adopt such legislation and provide such funds as may be necessary to establish and maintain an adequate national defense for the United States of America in view of existing world conditions, and that it be further memorialized to adopt the program of national defense outlined by the President in his message to the Congress on May 16, 1940; be it further Resolved, etc. That copies of the resolution be forwarded to the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the President of the United States of America.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens of Caldwell, Idaho, praying that the United States preserve its neutrality and keep out of war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Lions Club of Flora, Miss., endorsing the national-defense program, and favoring the enactment of legislation to stop all subversive activities in the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MEAD presented a petition of sundry citizens of Buffalo, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to stop all subversive activities in the United States, and also that no training other than military training be undertaken under Government supervision, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WALSH presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Foreign Commerce Club, Horton I. Marlor, president, Boston, Mass., praying that the United States adopt a strong national-defense program, and also a Government service-training system, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Leominster, Mass., praying that Congress remain in session during the international crisis, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a resolution of the executive board of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, Maryland Branch, Baltimore, Md., requesting that the United States keep out of war, and protesting against the enactment of legislation to conscript man power or wealth, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., endorsing the national-defense program, and praying that the United States may keep out of war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of the Young Women's Democratic Club of Montgomery County, Md., endorsing the national-defense and rearmament program of the President of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5823) for the relief of Morrissey Construction Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1905) thereon.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3741) for the relief of Charles P. Madsen, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1906) thereon.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 4137) relating to transportation of foreign mail by aircraft, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1907) thereon.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 3869) to authorize the participation of States in certain revenues from national parks, national monuments, and other areas under the administrative jurisdiction of the National Park Service, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1908) thereon.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9722) to provide for the regulation of the business of fire, marine, and casualty insurance, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1909) thereon.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9139) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1910) thereon.

EXPEDITION IN NAVAL SHIPBUILDING—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS (REPT. NO. 1863)

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, under permission granted me a few days ago, from the Committee on Naval Affairs I am filing a written report to accompany the bill (H. R. 9822) to expedite naval shipbuilding, and for other purposes, reported by me on the 17th instant from that committee with amendments.

Since this bill was reported favorably some amendments have been added by the committee which will be presented on the floor and explained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and printed.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MALONEY:

S. 4163. A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Peter M. Roune; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURKE:

S. 4164. A bill to protect the integrity and institutions of the United States through a system of selective compulsory military training and service; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WALSH:

S. 4165. A bill to provide, in cooperation with the Port of New York Authority, for the construction in New York Harbor of a graving drydock large enough to accommodate the largest naval ships built or building; and

S. 4166. A bill to provide for the disposition of certain moneys received by the United States in connection with proceedings against the Standard Oil Co. of California and others, pursuant to the joint resolution of February 21, 1924 (43 Stat. 15); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WHEELER:

S. 4167. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing construction of water conservation and utilization projects in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States," approved August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1418), and an act entitled "An act to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes," approved August 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 869); to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

(Mr. LUNDEEN introduced Senate Joint Resolution 282, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and appears under a separate heading.)

ACQUISITION OF MILITARY BASES IN WESTERN HEMISPHERE

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, for some time we have had under discussion, on this Senate floor and in the daily press, the acquisition of land now in non-American hands within the Western Hemisphere. Air and naval bases are of utmost importance to our national defense. These islands and American possessions must be put under our flag now—not later or when it may be too late, but now.

Time and again during many years I have pioneered this legislation. I hope we may have Senators' support now that the storm clouds of Europe are rising on our horizon.

I am introducing a Senate joint resolution which is more comprehensive than any other resolutions proposed in the past. The joint resolution is very short, and I ask that it lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 282) authorizing the President of the United States to purchase or otherwise acquire by peaceful means islands or possessions of non-American nations within the Western Hemisphere was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire, by negotiation and purchase, islands and possessions of non-American nations within the Western Hemisphere. In the event negotiation and purchase fails, the President is hereby authorized to proceed to acquire such vital and necessary islands and possessions by the armed forces of the United States.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum or sums as may be necessary upon recommendation of the President to carry out the purpose of this joint resolution.

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND THE RULE—AMENDMENT

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted the following notice in writing:

In accordance with the provision of rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that it is my intention hereafter to move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 10104) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1940, and June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, the following amendment, namely:

At the proper place insert the following:

"SEC. —. The date in the first proviso of the fourth paragraph under the heading 'Bureau of Internal Revenue' (relating to refunds of processing and related taxes), in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1938, as amended, is hereby changed from 'July 1, 1940,' to 'July 1, 1941'."

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10104, the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1940, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

(For text of amendment referred to see the foregoing notice.)

EXPEDITION IN STRENGTHENING THE NATIONAL DEFENSE—ADDITIONAL SENATE CONFEREE

On motion by Mr. SHEPPARD, the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] was appointed an additional conferee on the part of the Senate on the bill (H. R. 9850) to expedite the strengthening of the national defense, now being considered in conference.

KURT FRINGS—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 248)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 3673, "to enable Kurt Frings to enter and remain permanently in the United States."

My disapproval of this enactment is justified, I think, upon the ground that the alien, a native of Cologne, Germany, was refused a German quota immigration visa at the American Consulate General in Mexico City in 1938 because he admitted committing acts constituting perjury, an offense involving moral turpitude, in connection with his application for a nonimmigrant temporary visitor's passport visa at the American Consulate General at Tokyo, Japan, in 1935.

EARLE EMBREY—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 247)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 2209, an act for the relief of Earle Embrey.

S. 2209 in terms provides for the payment of $679.86 to Earle Embrey, New Albany, Ind., in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for a refund of social-security taxes paid by him during the year 1938, under a misinterpretation of the provisions of title IX of the Social Security Act with respect to credit for the amount of contributions paid into an unemployment fund under a State law.

The files of the Bureau of Internal Revenue disclose that on January 31, 1938, Mr. Embrey filed a return of tax for the calendar year 1937 under title IX of the Social Security Act, showing tax in the amount of $809.84 which has been paid in full. No credit was taken on the return for contributions to State unemployment funds. On May 17, 1938, Mr. Embrey paid into the unemployment compensation fund of the State of Indiana the sum of $679.85, representing contributions with respect to employment during 1937 required of the taxpayer under the unemployment compensation law of that State.

The original provisions for credit against the tax imposed by title IX of the Social Security Act, contained in section 902 thereof, permitted the allowance of credit, to the extent of 90 percent of the tax, for contributions with respect to employment during the calendar year paid before the due date of the taxpayer's return; that is, before January 31 next following the close of the calendar year or such due date as extended for not more than 60 days. Since the contributions for the year 1937 were not paid prior to January 31, 1938 (no extension of time having been applied for or granted), credit against the tax on account of the contributions was not allowable under the original provisions of law referred to. Accordingly, claims filed by Mr. Embrey for refund and abatement of the tax, based upon the payment of such contributions, were rejected in full.

However, the provisions for credit against the tax for 1936, 1937, and 1938 under title IX of the Social Security Act were subsequently liberalized as to all taxpayers by section 902 of the Social Security Act amendments of 1939, enacted August 10, 1939. Section 902 (a) (1) of the amendments provides for the allowance of credit against the tax for 1936, 1937, or 1938 for contributions with respect to employment during such year, paid into an unemployment fund under a State law before the sixtieth day after the date of enactment of the amendments; that is, before October 9, 1939. Section 902 (d) of the amendments provides for refunds, based on allowable credits, where the taxpayer has paid his tax without the benefit of the credit.

Since Mr. Embrey paid contributions into the unemployment compensation fund of the State of Indiana in the amount of $679.85 with respect to employment during the calendar year 1937 prior to October 9, 1939, that amount was under the liberalized provisions allowable as credit against the Federal tax for such year. The Federal tax having been paid by Mr. Embrey without the benefit of this credit, he was entitled to a refund of the tax equal to the amount of the credit.

The files of the Bureau of Internal Revenue disclose that on December 22, 1939, a check in the amount of $679.85 in favor of Mr. Embrey was transmitted to the Collector of Internal Revenue at Indianapolis, Ind., for delivery to Mr. Embrey, and the files further disclose that Mr. Embrey has received payment in full.

Accordingly I withhold my approval of S. 2209.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

ALTERATION OF BRIDGES OVER NAVIGABLE WATERS—VETO MESSAGE—ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I desire to make an announcement. There has been some interest in House bill 9381, a railroad bridge bill which the President vetoed and which was passed by the House, upon reconsideration, and is now on the desk. I desire to make announcement to the Senate that I intend to ask for consideration and action on that bill tomorrow at the most convenient time.

REVENUE BILL OF 1940—TAXATION OF WHISKY

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a telegram from Robert Barry, an official of the National Distilleries Co., who says his company makes, in addition to straight whisky, five or six blended products, and he approves the action of the Senate in taxing both straight whisky and blended products.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 20, 1940.

WALTER MULBRY,
Secretary to Senator Albert B. Chandler,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Liquor News, an important trade paper, calls specific attention in issue out today to failure of national distillers to take position on rectifiers tax; putting us in position of dodging issue. Would very much appreciate therefore if Senator will introduce my telegram in RECORD, saying that at time original telegram from Kentucky distillers be inserted Monday our officials had not been contacted and that, also, we produce five or six blended whiskies. We believe increased tax on rectification just as justifiable for national-defense revenues as that on straight whiskies.

Regards,

ROBERT BARRY.

[Mr. CLARK of Missouri asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the St. Louis Post Dispatch of June 19, 1940, entitled "How We Are Being Led to the Brink," which appears in the Appendix.]

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10055) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will proceed to state the amendments of the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Treasury Department—Coast Guard", on page 5, after line 2, to insert:

Salaries, Office of Commandant, Coast Guard: For an additional amount for personal services in the District of Columbia, fiscal year 1941, $98,880.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to address myself briefly to certain phases of the pending appropriation bill. I understand that the funds carried in the bill, added to those which have been appropriated previously, will give us a Regular Army of 375,000 men. The previous appropriation bill carried funds for 280,000, and I believe I am correct in saying that this one carries funds for 95,000.

I have frequently stated that in my opinion we should go higher than this, although, of course, this is a forward step. I shall not, however, offer again the amendment I have previously offered, to raise the strength of the Army to 750,000, because while I believe strongly that we should have an Army of that size, it is a perfectly empty gesture to do anything of that kind when the War Department is experiencing the greatest difficulty in obtaining recruits for an Army of 280,000 men, and grave doubts are expressed by those competent to have an opinion as to whether or not it will be possible to build the Army up to the very small number of 375,000 by the process of voluntary enlistment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am somewhat surprised at the statement made by the Senator, although I do not have sufficient knowledge to express an opinion as to its accuracy; but I have noticed in the press, and I have received a number of letters corroborating the views therein expressed, that a large number of persons desired to enlist, that they were seeking opportunities to enlist, and visiting the various places where enlistments might be made. I am surprised to learn that difficulty is being experienced by the Army in obtaining the necessary complement in order to build our Army to proper proportions.

Mr. LODGE. I myself was surprised, I will say to the Senator from Utah; but I have in my hand the figures furnished me by the Adjutant General under date of June 19, which show that as of June 11 the First Corps Area, the Second Corps Area, the Third Corps Area, and the Fifth Corps Area were all behind the quotas which had been assigned to them with a view to raising 13,194 men, which is the present objective of the Army in order to carry out its program for a total of 280,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator pardon me for asking whether he would be willing to express an opinion, in view of the dark clouds that are hanging over all the world and casting some shadow upon the Western Hemisphere, and the inadequacy of our Army, and the failure of so many of our young men to enlist, whether he believes that we should resort to conscription or to some other method by which to augment the military forces of our country?

Mr. LODGE. I am coming to that in just a moment. The facts which I am now presenting I think are a foundation for the edifice which I am trying to construct.

Mr. President, at this point I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a part of my remarks a communication which I received from The Adjutant General under date of June 19, 1940, showing that the present volunteer system does not work.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

a. On May 16, 1940, the War Department dispatched requisitions to all corps areas for the procurement of an additional 13,194 enlisted men for the Army and a direction that the task should be completed by June 30, 1940. The following tabulation shows the plan and the status based on last reports received from the field as of June 16:

Corps area	Original quota May 16	June 11 revision to insure completion of quotas in lagging corps areas	Total results as obtained as reported on June 16	Remainder to be procured by June 30
First	1,143	787	387	400
Second	1,362	677	364	313
Third	1,640	1,500	986	514
Fourth	1,881	2,681	1,670	1,011
Fifth	1,875	1,810	1,361	449
Sixth	1,297	1,297	1,158	139
Seventh	972	1,062	649	413
Eighth	1,925	2,281	1,780	501
Ninth	1,099	1,099	596	503
Total	13,194	13,194	8,951	4,243

b. The plan for the procurement of the next increment of an additional 38,000 men to raise the Army to a strength of 280,000 men will begin within the next few days calling for monthly priorities of 18,179 men for July and 17,346 men for August, plus 2,748 flying cadets. Requisitions to corps areas are now in preparation and are expected to be dispatched to the field not later than June 20. The original requisitions for each corps area under this plan will call for approximately the numbers shown below:

Original requirement

Corps area:
First	3,040
Second	4,560
Third	5,320
Fourth	5,320
Fifth	4,560
Sixth	3,800
Seventh	3,040
Eighth	5,320
Total	38,000

c. The details of the plan for the procurement of an additional 95,000 men to raise the Army to a strength of 375,000 men are not yet completed and the proposed starting and terminating dates have not been definitely set. The appropriation bill for this number has not yet been passed.

The original requisitions for each corps area under the plan for 95,000 additional men will call for approximately the numbers shown below:

Original requirement

Corps area:
First	7,600
Second	11,400
Third	13,300
Fourth	13,300
Fifth	11,400
Sixth	9,500
Seventh	7,600
Eighth	13,300
Total	95,000

The recent bill passed by the House of Representatives on June 17 raising the authorized strength of the Army to 400,000 men is understood to be authorization for a new legal limit replacing the former legal limit of 280,000 men and does not in itself mean that the Army will be recruited to that strength immediately.

Mr. LODGE. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a statement with respect to the population of Army corps areas in 1937.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as the Senator from Utah so ably inferred, in view of the fact that we are not procuring the men for this little army—and it is a little army, Belgium

[1] Bureau of the Census midyear estimate, July 1, 1937.

[2] Island of Puerto Rico is included in this area but population of 1,774,000 was not added in with the States in the area.

[3] Excludes a portion of Arizona west of west longitude 114° and south of north latitude 33° which is attached to the Ninth Corps Area for purposes of administration, etc., of the Border Patrol.

[4] The Ninth Corps Area includes the portion of Arizona referred to in note 3 and also Alaska with a population of 62,200 in 1937, which was not included in the population of the area.

had an army of 600,000 men, and here we are unable to get the men for an army of 300,000—it is my hope that by enacting some kind of a selective service law now, we may develop a highly trained armed force which will make unnecessary later a wholesale draft, and will thus spare the American people, in the terrible event of war, the needless bloodshed which would come from throwing into battle large masses of men who are only slightly trained and have only their bravery as their armor.

This terrible war in Europe teaches us many lessons, but one of the lessons it has taught us emphatically is that qualities of mind and spirit, no matter how superb they may be, are no match for troops that are highly trained in mechanized warfare.

Another lesson this war has taught us is that modern armies cannot be raised and trained after the war has started. It simply cannot be done.

I submit that it is clear from the figures of The Adjutant General, which I hope every Senator will read when they appear in the RECORD tomorrow, that the volunteer system is not working. I submit that schemes for militarizing the C. C. C. are grossly undemocratic. They single out a group of underprivileged boys for special treatment, and I do not believe that is the right way to proceed.

The proposals to draft noncombatants, which have been discussed—I have seen something said about drafting our girls, for example—have my vigorous opposition. I do not believe we have reached the stage in America where we need to commit the affront to family life and to all our institutions that would be involved in drafting womanhood.

But, Mr. President, we need trained combat troops for our own defense, and we are not getting them. We should get them now. We owe it to the people to see to it that this period shall not be known as the Chamberlain era in American history. So, for that reason, I hope that some kind of selective service measure will be acted on promptly.

That is the statement which I desire to make, and before I yield my seat I shall ask to have printed as part of my remarks a statement which has been prepared for me, showing the additional cost of bringing the Army from the strength of 375,000 up to a strength of 750,000. In asking for that unanimous consent I call attention to the fact that this is the initial figure, and that the annual figure to be added for maintaining an army of 750,000, once we get it set up, would be about one-half billion dollars.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Increase in Regular Army of 375,000 to reach a strength of 750,000 for the first complete fiscal year

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. KING. The able Senator has just suggested that we should have the more efficient selective system. Is there any legislation now pending which would accomplish the object he has in mind, and, if not, has he submitted a bill which would provide for a proper development of the selective system, and which would in the end reach the objective which we seek?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Utah that I have been studying several bills. I have not introduced a bill myself, although I should be very glad to do so if I thought there was any demand for it. I understand that the War Department has such legislation ready, and that it could be gotten up here in 10 minutes in the event there was a disposition on the part of the leadership here to support such a proposal.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator further believe, in the light of the information which he has received, and part of which he has brought to our attention, that a measure of the character he has indicated, which provided for a proper selective system, would have no difficulty in receiving the approval both of the House and the Senate?

Mr. LODGE. I should hope that that would be true.

Mr. KING. I share the Senator's hope, and I think it is not merely faith. I believe his hope is founded upon what I trust is reality.

Mr. LODGE. Well, I certainly hope so, because it is something that we ought to come to grips with at once.

Mr. BRIDGES. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he thought that the fact that we pay C. C. C. boys $30 a month, and pay members of the Army $21 a month, had anything to do with the slacking up or slowing up of enlistments?

Mr. LODGE. I think for certain types of people that would be an inducement, but I do not know how much of a factor it has been.

INVESTIGATION OF ENFORCEMENT OF ANTITRUST LAWS BY DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have just been reading the proceedings which took place in the House of Representatives, as printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday, and observed the remarks made on the floor of the House by Representative DINGELL, of Michigan, concerning a Senate resolution, and the hearings had thereon by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. The Representative from Michigan correctly stated the situation as developed in the subcommittee. He called attention to the provisions of the resolution, and I feel that in justice to one of the departments of the Government I should make an added explanation of the attitude of the subcommittee, and also the attitude of the Department.

The resolution to which I refer was submitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], and requested a Senate investigation of the entire natural-gas industry. It also requested an investigation as to whether or not alleged violations of antitrust laws are properly enforced by the Department of Justice.

The subcommittee which heard the testimony was composed of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], and myself. We agreed, I think unanimously, that an investigation should be had and so reported to the full committee. We did not think this was the proper or appropriate time to conduct the investigation, and we made such a recommendation to the full committee. As a result of the action of the full committee, the resolution is in the Senate Judiciary Committee today waiting to be called up by the subcommittee.

The point I particularly desire to bring out relates to the second part of the resolution which asks for an investigation in effect, of the Department of Justice, as to whether or not the antitrust laws are being properly enforced. I wish to say that Mr. Thurman Arnold, in charge of the Antitrust Division, appeared before our committee and testified at length. The Department of Justice did not oppose that part of the resolution, and in justice to Mr. Arnold I take the floor to make that statement today, and also to say that Mr. Arnold himself not only urgently requested that the Senate committee be authorized to investigate the natural gas industry, but also urged the committee to investigate the activities and doings of the Department of Justice in connection with alleged violations of the antitrust law.

I thought it only fair to Mr. Arnold that the Senate and the House should know that his Division of the Department of Justice, does not oppose the investigation, but on the contrary has requested it.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations of two members of the President's Cabinet were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10055) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 5, line 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "War Department—Civil functions", on page 6, after line 7, to insert:

CORPS OF ENGINEERS—RIVERS AND HARBORS

Maintenance and improvement of existing river and harbor works: For an additional amount for the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized as may be most desirable in the interest of commerce and navigation, including the objects and under the conditions specified under the headings "Improvement of Existing River and Harbor Works" and "Maintenance of Existing River and Harbor Works" in the Budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, to be immediately and continuously available until expended, $8,127,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II—War Department—Military activities—Air Corps", on page 9, line 8, after the word "Army", to strike out "$249,830,282" and insert "$293,330,282", so as to read:

Air Corps, Army, $293,330,282; and, in addition, the Chief of the Air Corps, when authorized by the Secretary of War, may enter into contracts prior to July 1, 1941, to an amount not in excess of $109,259,597, for the procurement of new airplanes, equipment, spare parts, and accessories.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Secretary", on page 12, after line 14, to insert:

SEC. 201. The appropriations for "Regular supplies of the Army," "Clothing and equipage," "Army transportation," "Signal Service of the Army," "Air Corps, Army," "Medical and Hospital Department," "Engineer Service, Army," "Ordnance Service and supplies, Army," "Chemical Warfare Service," and "Seacoast defenses" for the fiscal year 1941 shall each be available for the employment of persons and the procurement of supplies and services, printing and binding, and communication service at the seat of government and elsewhere.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 25, to change the section number from 201 to 202.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title III—Navy Department—Bureau of Navigation", on page 13, after line 18, to insert:

Naval Reserve, including additional training for Naval Reserves, without regard to limitations, specified under this head in the Naval Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1941, and for training exercises of the Naval Reserve during the fiscal year 1941 and for each and every object connected therewith at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, including rental of civilian craft and hire of personal and other services, $7,500,000: Provided, That the first two provisos of the paragraph under the heading "Naval Reserve" contained in title I of the act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service, fiscal year 1941, are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Engineering", on page 10, after the word "material", to strike out "$25,200,000" and insert "$25,500,000", so as to read:

Engineering, including the necessary tools, equipment, and facilities in naval establishments or private plants for expediting construction and delivery of engineering material, $25,500,000, of which not to exceed 7 percent shall be available for the pay of employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Construction and Repair", on page 14, line 20, after the word "material", to strike out "$21,400,000" and insert "$21,500,000", so as to read:

BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR

Construction and repair, including the necessary tools, equipment, and facilities in naval establishments or private plants for expediting the construction and delivery of hull and other material, $21,500,000, of which not to exceed 7 percent shall be available for the pay of employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Ordnance", on page 15, line 2, after the word "including", to insert "increased facilities at Indianhead, Md., for the manufacture and storage of powder", and in line 9, after the word "land", to strike out "$63,028,370" and insert "$72,528,370", so as to read:

Ordnance and ordnance stores, Navy, including increased facilities at Indianhead, Md., for the manufacture and storage of powder, additional equipment, tools, and facilities at ordnance stations or private plants for production, handling, and storage of ordnance material and ammunition, acquisition or construction of one ferry boat for the Naval Torpedo Station, Newport, R. I., and not to exceed $25,000 for the acquisition of land, $72,528,370; and in addition the Secretary of the Navy may, prior to July 1, 1941, enter into contracts for ordnance and ordnance materials, including ammunition, to an amount not in excess of $28,560,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public works, Bureau of Yards and Docks", on page 19, line 1, after the word "dock", to strike out "(additional for fixing up ways No. 3 to take 45,000-ton battleship)", so as to read:

Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pa.: Additional improvements of power plant and distributing systems, $450,000; additional extension to yard dispensary, $50,000; extension of additional pier, $150,000; additional weight-handling and transportation equipment, $115,000; improvement of shipbuilding ways No. 1, $125,000; addition to shipfitters' shop, $300,000; electric shop, $255,000; shipbuilding dock, $10,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 19, after the word "land", to strike out "$24,000,000" and insert "$24,204,000", so as to read:

Naval Air Station, Quonset Point, R. I.: Additional aviation shore facilities, including buildings and accessories and acquisition of land, $24,204,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 12, to insert:

Naval Air Station, Canton Island: Aviation shore facilities, including buildings and accessories, $1,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 17, after the word "land", to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$2,000,000", so as to read:

Naval Air Station, Tongue Point, Oreg.: Additional aviation shore facilities, including buildings, accessories, and acquisition of land, $2,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 10, after the word "location", to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That the fixed fee to be paid the contractor as a result of any contract hereafter entered into under the authority of the above-mentioned act shall not exceed 6 percent of the estimated cost of the contract, exclusive of the fee, as determined by the Secretary of the Navy.

So as to read:

The provisions of section 4 of the act approved April 25, 1939 (53 Stat. 590–592), shall be applicable to all public works and public-utilities projects provided in this title, regardless of location: Provided, That the fixed fee to be paid the contractor as a result of any contract hereafter entered into under the authority of the above-mentioned act shall not exceed 6 percent of the estimated cost of the contract, exclusive of the fee, as determined by the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 15, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to expedite the construction or provision of the public-works and public-utilities projects mentioned in this act and in the Naval Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1941, the limit of cost indicated for each of such projects may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be varied upward or downward by an amount not to exceed 10 percent, but the aggregate of all such limits of cost shall not be exceeded.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Aeronautics," on page 25, line 17, after the words "so forth", to strike out "$870,400" and insert "$1,170,400"; and in line 20, after the words "in all", to strike out "$22,585,000" and insert "$22,885,000", so as to read:

Aviation, Navy: For maintenance, repair, and operation of aircraft factory, air stations, and so forth, $1,170,400; and for new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment, spare parts and accessories, $21,714,600; in all, $22,885,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE NOMINATIONS REFERRED

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ASHURST. Did a message arrive from the President of the United States? If so, I ask that the message be laid before the Senate, as in executive session, if there be any nominations.

As in executive session,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER in the chair) laid before the Senate the following Executive message from the President of the United States, which was read:

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 20, 1940.

To the Senate of the United States:

I nominate Henry L. Stimson, of New York, to be Secretary of War.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER also laid before the Senate the following Executive message from the President of the United States, which was read:

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 20, 1940.

To the Senate of the United States:

I nominate Frank Knox, of Illinois, to be Secretary of the Navy.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not a member of either of the committees to which the nominations have been referred, and, of course, it would be improper for me to indicate what action should be taken upon the nominations. Under all the circumstances, however, I respectfully submit that action should be taken within a reasonable time.

Both nominees are men of character and ability. Undoubtedly the President believed them to be fitted for their respective duties.

Mr. Stimson served as Secretary of War in a former administration, and is familiar with the duties of that important office. We are all familiar with his able and patriotic service when acting as Secretary of State. His paper dealing with the invasion of Manchuria by Japan will rank among the ablest state papers, and if his views had prevailed the situation in Asia might have been different from the unfortunate condition now existing.

I have no personal acquaintance with Colonel Knox, but he is known in military circles as well as in political circles.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10055) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 26, to insert:

MARINE CORPS

General expenses, Marine Corps, $2,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Alterations to naval vessels", on page 26, line 7, before the word "to", to strike out "$14,360,000" and insert "$24,360,000"; in line 8, after the word "expended", to strike out the semicolon and "and in addition, the Secretary of the Navy may enter into contracts for these purposes in an amount not in excess of $10,000,000", and in line 14, after the words "per centum", to strike out the semicolon and the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That in connection with the expenditure of the appropriation and the exercise of the authority in this paragraph, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to exceed the statutory limit on repairs and alterations to vessels", so as to read:

Alterations to naval vessels, including the provision of antiaircraft defense and the construction or acquisition and conversion of vessels for naval auxiliaries of all kinds, $24,360,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for the employment of classified personal services in the Navy Department and in the field service to be engaged upon such work shall not exceed 7 per centum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Navy Department—Salaries and contingent expenses", on page 28, after line 6, to insert "Office of the Secretary of the Navy, $10,000", so as to read:

For compensation for personal services in the District of Columbia, as follows:
Office of the Secretary of the Navy, $10,000.
Office of the Chief of Naval Operations, $20,000.
Bureau of Navigation, $35,000.
Hydrographic Office, $25,000.
Naval Observatory, $3,000.
Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, $16,200.
Contingent expenses, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Emergency fund", on page 28, after line 14, to strike out:

The Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President, without reference to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, and for emergency national-defense purposes, is authorized to enter into contracts prior to July 1, 1941, in an amount not to exceed $25,000,000, for all expenses in connection with the rental and conversion, or construction or acquisition and conversion of vessels to naval auxiliaries and patrol craft of all kinds.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the President, without reference to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, to rent and convert, or construct or acquire and convert vesssels to naval auxiliaries and patrol craft of all kinds, $25,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 2, to insert:

SEC. 301. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized, where necessary, to exceed the statutory limit on repairs and alterations to vessels during the existing emergency, and with the funds appropriated in title III of this act, to acquire and convert auxiliaries for service with the fleet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 7, to insert:

SEC. 302. The second proviso under the heading "Naval personnel" contained in title II of the act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year 1941 is hereby amended to read as follows: ": Provided further, That to the extent that Naval Reservists are not available the Secretary of the Navy shall recruit regular enlisted men in the Navy."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 15, to change the section number from 301 to 303.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. ANDREWS obtained the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee, I offer an amendment at the request of the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Florida.

Mr. ADAMS. I am performing a service on his behalf under instructions from the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado on behalf of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 23, at the end of line 9, it is proposed to insert "Provided, That said pipe line may be built in cooperation with an agency of the State of Florida."

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I do not know that I have any objection. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized to explain the amendment.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, the amendment is added at the end of line 9. Since the amendment was proposed yesterday before the Appropriations Committee I have consulted with the Navy Department. At the meeting of the committee yesterday I recommended an amendment which was acceptable to the Navy Department and thought it was being inscribed in the bill. This morning I learned that the amendment which is being proposed is not acceptable to the Navy Department. I did not have an opportunity to tell the Senator from Colorado this morning before he proposed it.

I have an amendment which I should like to offer as a substitute for the amendment offered in behalf of the committee by the Senator from Colorado. I understand that my amendment is acceptable to the Navy Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, in the nature of a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of line 9, on page 23, it is proposed to insert the following:

To be constructed by the Navy alone or in cooperation with an agency of the State of Florida, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, so that the Army, Navy, and civilian population may be jointly supplied with an adequate fresh-water supply.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the difference between the two amendments? The amendment which I offered on behalf of the committee was prepared at the instance of the Senator from Florida, and we assumed that it met the problem. I should like to know what change in the language is involved.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, the amendment which I proposed before the committee is in different language from the amendment which the Senator from Colorado has proposed. After the committee had adjourned yesterday, I saw the form of the amendment which the committee proposed to present, and learned that it was not in the form I proposed, and might not be acceptable to the Navy. I, therefore, communicated with a member of the committee and tried to have the amendment which I had drafted presented instead of the one just offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS]. This morning I have been in a meeting of the Committee on Naval Affairs, as well as another committee meeting, and have not had an opportunity to discuss the matter.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator explain what the difference is?

Mr. ANDREWS. I will be happy to do so.

Key West used to be a city of about 24,000 or 25,000 inhabitants, but since the East Coast Railway was destroyed by a hurricane, its population has dwindled down to about 15,000 persons. Formerly fresh water was carried over the 140 miles to Key West by train loads, but after the railway was destroyed by the West Indian hurricane this method of procuring fresh water for the island of Key West was, of course, made impossible. Those interested have been working on that project for several years, and at the last session of the legislature of Florida there was enacted legislation creating what is known as the Florida Keys Aqueduct Commission. They have had a survey made of the cost of constructing an aqueduct from the mainland, which is about 140 miles. After careful calculations, it has been ascertained that this aqueduct can be constructed for the $2,000,000 provided in the bill, but that amount will permit a pipe line only about 8 or 10 inches in diameter. It is understood that such a pipe line will not be sufficient to furnish water to the Navy and to the civilian population. Therefore the Florida Keys Aqueduct Commission has conferred with the R. F. C. and with the W. P. A., and additional funds will be provided in the amount of about $1,400,000 or $1,500,000. By combining their funds it will be possible to construct a pipe line 14 or 16 inches in diameter instead of 8 or 10 inches in diameter, and thus afford fresh water for about two or three times the present population of the island of Key West.

It is my understanding that the developments in Key West are now going forward very swiftly, particularly on the part of the Navy. Whether we think of it in that regard or not, Key West is likely to become more or less the Singapore of the Western Hemisphere, and it is probable that it will have three times the population it now has if the submarine base is further developed, which is expected to be done, and also the naval sub-air base and other facilities, including those of the Army.

The State of Florida offers to come in on this matter and help with its contribution in addition to the $2,000,000 provided in the pending bill.

For the reason stated we desire this amendment to go in the measure.

I desire to substitute the amendment as drafted and as just read by the clerk, because I have taken the matter up with the Navy, and the amendment, as revised, which I now propose, will be satisfactory to them. It authorizes them to construct alone, if they cannot agree on some basis of contribution and method of construction with the State of Florida. In other words, this amendment will add about one million four hundred or five hundred thousand dollars to the amount made available by the bill. Likewise the Florida Keys Aqueduct Commission owns the right-of-way of 140 miles, and will no doubt furnish the right-of-way for the construction of this pipe line to carry fresh water.

I think the proposal is feasible; I find no good reason at all why the work should not be done in the manner now proposed. The amendment would not bind the hands of the Navy but would allow the Florida Keys Aqueduct Commission to contribute the land and aid in the construction of this pipe line to Key West, which is also an absolutely necessary project in furtherance of national defense.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the difference between the amendments? We have three drafts. The Senator brought to the committee one draft of his amendment; then the committee has presented one; and the Senator now presents a third draft. We understand the background of it, but I should like to have the Senator explain the differences between the three amendments, what is the occasion for the amendment he now presents, and what would the consequences be to the Government.

Mr. ANDREWS. I will be glad to do that. The amendment which was drafted yesterday and handed to the committee was the one which was suggested by a Member of the House who helped pilot this particular provision through the House, Representative CANNON, of the Fourth District of the State of Florida, in which this project is located.

After it was drafted, and after seeing the one that is now offered by the committee, and comparing them, I took the matter up with the Navy Department, and this morning I have drafted an amendment with which I understand the Navy Department is absolutely in agreement. I understand they may not be willing to go along with the one the committee now proposes.

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask the Senator what is the difference between them? I understand what he says is about the Navy Department; but what is the difference between the amendments; and what is the effect on the Government and on the Treasury?

Mr. ANDREWS. My amendment is in the alternative and states more clearly what it is for. This amendment would enable the State of Florida, through this authority, to aid in this work. Both the Navy and the State have each got to do certain things; and the amendment allows the State to aid in the construction. The State, as I have said, has the right-of-way, and will, I understand, contribute it to the project.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. The amendment offered by the chairman of the committee, by direction of the committee, reads:

Provided, That said pipe line may be built in cooperation with an agency of the State of Florida.

That leaves it discretionary with the Navy as to whether or not it shall build the pipe line in cooperation with the State of Florida.

The amendment the Senator from Florida offers, it seems to me, says exactly the same thing, for it also uses the words "with an agency of the State of Florida." So far as I can see, there is absolutely no difference between the amendments.

Mr. ANDREWS. This is the language which the Navy Department told me this morning the Department wanted. If it should be adopted, at any rate it would be in conference.

Mr. BYRNES. If the amendment is adopted in the form as presented by the committee, it will be in conference, and if there is any question about the language, I suggest to the Senator from Florida he may then talk to the conference committee and explain, if there is any difference, what the difference is and why there is a difference.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment of the Senator from Florida but will adopt the amendment submitted by the committee. As the Senator from South Carolina has explained, if it should be changed, the change can be made in conference.

Mr. ANDREWS. I do not mind accepting the committee amendment and having it go to conference, where it can be worked out. We have been working on this matter for some time. This is a proposition that we have worked out; the project is in my State; and I thought that what I have said here with regard to it ought to be accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida withdraw his proposed amendment in the nature of a substitute? If not, the Chair will put the question on his amendment.

The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Florida for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I will accept the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, with the understanding that at the conference my amendment will be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida desire to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. ANDREWS. I withdraw it at the present time for the purpose indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] in behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to submit another amendment on behalf of the committee that has to do with the correction of a situation in reference to the Under Secretary of the Navy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 28, line 7, in the committee amendment, after the word "Navy", it is proposed to insert "including salary of the Under Secretary at $10,000 per annum."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GURNEY obtained the floor.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. GURNEY. I rose to ask a question of the Senator from Colorado, who is in charge of the bill.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. GURNEY. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. From the conference committee on the agricultural appropriation bill, I submit the second conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The legislative clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate and amendments of the House to certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 41, 42, and 60.

Amendment numbered 44: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 95: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 99: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by the Senate amendment as amended by the House insert the following:

"Loans: For loans in accordance with title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006), $50,000,000, which sum shall be borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at an interest rate of 3 per centum per annum and which sum shall not be used for making loans under the terms of said Act for the purchase of farms of greater value than the average farm unit of thirty acres and more in the county, parish, or locality in which such purchase may be made, which value shall be determined solely according to statistics of the farm census of 1940 after such statistics become available, but prior to that time may be determined in accordance with such regulations as may be promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture; and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized and directed to lend such sum to the Secretary of Agriculture upon the Security of any obligations of borrowers from the Secretary under the provisions of title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006): Provided, That the amount loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall not exceed 85 per centum of the principal amount outstanding of the obligations constituting the security therefor: Provided further, That the Secretary may utilize proceeds from payments of principal and interest on any loans made under such title I to repay the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the amount borrowed therefrom under the authority of this paragraph: Provided further, That the amount of notes, bonds, debentures, and other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding at any one time under existing law is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions hereof."

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 17, 20, 21, 37, 39, 43, 61, 65, 66, and 105.

Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

McNARY. I have not any objection. I think it properly should be considered.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. McNARY. I desire, however, to ask a question of the Senator from Georgia. These are the four amendments to which disagreements were had in the House and in conference?

Mr. RUSSELL. The House took three of the amendments out of disagreement by adopting them. They disagreed to the fourth amendment. It is my purpose to move that the Senate recede from that amendment, inasmuch as it has had two record votes in the House.

Mr. McNARY. I think that is quite proper. For the RECORD, will the Senator state what that amendment is about?

Mr. RUSSELL. The first two are very small amendments. One involves $10,000 for range investigations in the southeast. That amendment was adopted by the House. A companion amendment appropriated $15,000 above the Budget estimates to prevent the discontinuance of certain range investigations which are being carried on, I think in the Joaquin Valley in California, and $10,000 for similar work in relation to beef cattle studies in the southeast.

The other amendment approved by the House appropriated $500,000 to carry out the arid-lands program for the purpose of building small dams and water reservoirs in the drought area.

The amendment which was rejected by the House was the one appropriating funds for the eradication of the white-fringe beetle.

Mr. McNARY. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 8202, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 19, 1940.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 17, 37, and 105 to the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, and concur therein;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$12,449,440";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$12,449,440";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$14,353,435";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$17,924,435"; and

That the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 61, 65, and 66 to said bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 20, 21, 39, and 43. I may state that they merely correct totals, that action being made necessary because of the action on the other amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. I now move that the Senate recede from Senate amendment numbered 61.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. I move that the Senate further insist on Senate amendments numbered 65 and 66.

Mr. KING. May I inquire what those amendments are?

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall be glad to advise the Senator from Utah. Those two amendments are totals which were in disagreement, due to the action of the House in refusing to accept the Senate amendment appropriating funds for white-fringe beetle work.

I may say to the Senator from Utah that this is merely a necessary parliamentary process. These totals will be adjusted on the floor of the House, following which the Senate may concur in the amendments of the House to the Senate amendments.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10055) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota let me submit the last committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield for that purpose?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield the floor, and will take the floor again at a later time.

Mr. ADAMS. I submit an amendment simply to authorize the detailing of enlisted men to the Department relative to a minor matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. KING. Before the amendment is stated, may I inquire of the Senator the amount that has been increased in the bill over the authorization?

Mr. ADAMS. One hundred million dollars.

Mr. KING. And, generally, what does that increase relate to?

Mr. ADAMS. The principal item of increase is $43,000,000 for building airplane engines.

Mr. KING. By the Government, or by contract, or both?

Mr. ADAMS. By contract.

Mr. KING. What is the other item?

Mr. ADAMS. There is a series of items. There are two contract authorizations. There is an item of $7,500,000 for extra training of the Naval Reserves. There is an $8,000,000 item for ordnance matériel for the Marine Corps. The Bureau of Yards and Docks have some items. There is a $10,000,000 item for alterations in naval vessels. There is an emergency fund of $25,000,000.

Mr. KING. To what purpose will that fund be devoted?

Mr. ADAMS. It is in lieu of a contract authorization in the House bill. It is for the purpose of converting, renting, or acquiring naval auxiliary and patrol craft to protect the harbors.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that is a rather large appropriation for that purpose, in view of the fact that we have so many small craft which might be utilized for the purpose indicated.

Mr. ADAMS. All the Senate has done has been to change the provision from a contract authorization to a direct appropriation, of which I believe the Senator approves.

Mr. KING. Yes; I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 29, after line 14, it is proposed to insert a new section reading as follows:

SEC. 303. Enlisted men of the Navy may be detailed to the Office of Naval Intelligence during the fiscal year 1941.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask unanimous consent that the clerks be authorized to make the necessary corrections in numbers and totals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President——

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator wish to speak before the bill passes?

Mr. GURNEY. I do.

I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado some questions as a matter of information to myself. I am very much interested in the development of manganese because of the huge supply we have in South Dakota. I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to page 11, wherein there is appropriated $2,000,000 to be used by the head of the Bureau of Mines, Department of the Interior, for the erection of a Government pilot plant for the processing by electricity of manganese ores. I ask the Senator if it is the intention of the Department to place that plant somewhere near Boulder Dam? Is that the plan?

Mr. ADAMS. I am not able to answer the Senator's question offhand. The fact that the amendment provides for the electrolytic process suggests that the plant would have to be located near one of the great water-power developments.

Mr. GURNEY. Was there any information on the subject in the hearings?

Mr. ADAMS. We had no Senate hearings on the matter. The House hearings may show that.

Mr. McNARY. Where is the item; on what page?

Mr. GURNEY. Page 11, line 6.

What I am interested in is this: Has any information been given to the committee as to the amount of ore available? I know, of course, that electricity is available at reasonable rates, but I am not so sure that a large supply of ore is available in that territory.

Mr. ASHURST and Mr. BYRNES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the able Senator from South Dakota is inquiring whether there are manganese ore deposits near Boulder Dam, permit me to say that in Mojave County, Ariz., which is the northwest corner of the State, large deposits of manganese ore are known to exist. Doubtless, with the hydroelectric energy generated at Boulder Dam, ultimately a vast deal of this manganese ore will be mined, and processed.

I happen to know of these deposits because many years ago, while aiding in making a survey as to manganese resources, it was startling to me to learn that in 32 States of the Union there are manganese deposits. In order, however, properly to develop them, a protective tariff would be required, because of the cheap, forced, or slave labor of Soviet Russia, and the cheap and underpaid labor of other countries which export manganese to the United States.

I wish to associate myself with the Senator from South Dakota and any other Senator who will aid in a program for the development not alone of manganese properties but of other essential strategic and critical materials and metals.

Mr. GURNEY. I realize all that, and I am heartily in accord with any program which will develop this critical and strategic material; but I am concerned as to what the surveys show as to the amount of ore available in that territory, and I am also concerned as to the quality of the ore. Can the Senator enlighten me on that subject?

Mr. ASHURST. Although I come from one of the great mining States of the Union, candor and frankness require me to say that I am not a practical miner; but information which was gathered for me more than 10 years ago led me to the opinion that the manganese deposits in Mojave County, Ariz., and other counties in Arizona, if developed, would furnish considerable manganese.

Mr. GURNEY. There is another question which comes to mind when we think of building a pilot plant, and that is that a private pilot plant has already been in operation for some time in Kentucky, and this appropriation puts the Government in competition with a private plant which has already shown the efficiency of this kind of electrolytic processing of manganese ore.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make a comment on that subject?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course, I am interested, coming from a mining State where we feel we have manganese ores which we would like to have developed. If I were in position to draw the amendment, I should strike out the words "by the electrolytic process", so that the Department of the Interior might develop these ores by any available process.

Mr. GURNEY. I thank the Senator; I was getting to that point. To bring the matter to a head, I move to strike out the words "by the electrolytic process", on page 11, line 10.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no practical experience with reference to the electrolytic process.

Mr. President, it may be inferred, because of the use of this language, that the electrolytic process would be considered a more eligible one. Before we strike the words out it seems to me the Senate should be advised as to whether or not this is the most eligible and the most practical method. The words "by the electrolytic process" undoubtedly must have been inserted for some reason.

Mr. GURNEY. I am sure they were inserted for the purpose of putting the plant where there was cheap power, but I am not sure that that is the process by which manganese ore can be produced most cheaply.

Mr. ASHURST. Nor am I.

Mr. GURNEY. If it should be decided by the Bureau of Mines or the Department of the Interior that the electrolytic processing of ore is the better method, if we should strike out these four words they could establish a plant at Boulder Dam, or at any other place, and use any other process they desired to use.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I think the Senator is exactly right, and I think the words should be stricken out, so that the whole matter will be left for the Bureau of Mines to determine, after proper investigation, what process is to be used. What they want is manganese, not the method, and they will not be restricted to any process at all if the amendment offered by the Senator shall be adopted.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. There is a very specific reason for the language now in the bill. For many years an attempt has been made to reduce the grade of manganese by the electrolytic process. In order to make a proper experiment, it is necessary to have the cheapest possible power. The whole matter is in an experimental stage. There are in thirty-odd States manganese of varying grade, ferromanganese and nonferromanganese. The highest grade in the United States is less than 60 percent.

Boulder Dam is a Government project at which the very lowest priced electric energy is about to be made available, in fact, is available now, and surrounding that project for an area of 250 miles there are great quantities of manganese ore of various grades, some in Arizona. There are hundreds of thousands if not millions of tons in Lincoln County, Nev., which is not far distant from the Boulder project.

In order to carry out this experimentation so that we may use the manganese of the United States, which is so essential, this electrolytic process has been tried out, and wherever it has been tried out it has proven to be very successful. This language is used in an attempt now to set up, at a point where there is the most reasonably priced electrical energy, a pilot plant to develop the electrolytic process for the production of manganese.

Today we are getting our manganese largely from Russia, although with Brazil we entered into a reciprocal-trade agreement in which manganese was involved. After we entered into the reciprocal-trade agreement with Brazil, under the most-favored-nation clause Russia came in with her manganese produced by peon labor and slave labor, and could outbid Brazil. Hence we are not getting our manganese from Brazil now. We are getting it from Russia, to the detriment of manganese mining in the United States, the reason being that the Russians can bring manganese in as ballast, and outbid us, even with the highest grade of manganese we produce.

It is proposed that the plant in mind shall utilize cheap electrical energy at a point nearest the places where manganese ore is produced. I think it would be a serious mistake to strike the language from the bill.

Mr. GURNEY. I am sure the statement made by the Senator from Nevada is entirely correct. My information is that the pilot plant would make available electrical energy at approximately half a mill a kilowatt-hour, while it is now being furnished to the pilot plant established by private industry at Knoxville, Tenn., at one-half cent a kilowatt-hour.

I am still sure that the words should be stricken from the bill, because there are other processes for purifying manganese ore, such as those used in Cuba, and it is possible that the Government would find it much better to spend this $2,000,000 in other sections of the country where larger quantities of ore could be purified and made available about where we need it.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I shall support the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota. I do not believe that it will in any way interfere with the plant the Bureau of Mines may have in mind now at any place near Boulder Dam, or near any of the other places where reasonable power prices are obtainable. The fact that the language indicated by the Senator from South Dakota was stricken out would not preclude the Department or the authorities from proceeding with a plant they have in mind. However, if the language is taken out, it will make other resources available for the production of manganese.

There is much manganese in my State. The southwestern quarter of my State is practically nothing else but manganese, and, as indicated by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], we have to compete with manganese imported from foreign countries. It is surprising to learn how many Senators—and I was among them—were not satisfied with the reciprocal trade agreement legislation which we passed some time ago, because it interfered with the orderly development of manganese in the entire Southwest, while that industry was at the same time competing with Russia, and possibly with Brazil.

I feel that the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota should prevail, and, in my opinion, it would not interfere at all with placing the plant near Boulder Dam or elsewhere, but it would help other sections of the country to develop their own resources.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I suggest that the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota is an amendment of extreme importance at this time. I have been interested for a good many years in an effort to develop manganese and to develop other strategic minerals in this Nation. The hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs, of which I was formerly a member, and the hearings before special committees, disclose the fact that there are many processes by which the ore may be separated and converted into ferromanagnese of such a grade that the Army and Navy would like to have it. The trouble has been a dispute as to various processes. Army and Navy men are more or less set in their ways, and scientists are more or less adamant in their opinions at times, but we do know that there is a dispute between scientists today. Only last year Du Pont sent a representative who testified before a committee of the Congress that they had a process whereby these low-grade minerals might be raised to a sufficient grade. I think it would be the height of folly for the Congress to say to the Bureau of Mines, "Build a pilot plant for experimentation with a certain process." Let us take the bridle off those men and give them an opportunity. What the Senator from Nevada has said is true, and it may develop that the process he has indicated will prove to be the process adopted, but let us not hamstring or hamper the Bureau or the Department.

If the amendment shall be adopted, I earnestly hope that the House will agree to it, and that we shall say to the Bureau of Mines, "Take the various processes which are being advocated by various people and by various scientists, experiment with them and report to the Congress the one best suited to this country for the development of our particular grade of ore."

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, what is the language of the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 11, line 10, after the word "therefrom", it is proposed to strike out the words "by the electrolytic process."

Mr. PITTMAN. There would not be anything left then, would there?

Mr. GURNEY. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. How would it read with that language stricken out? As I understand, the Senator is striking out the words "by the electrolytic process."

Mr. GURNEY. "By the electrolytic process."

Mr. PITTMAN. It seems to me that the remainder of the sentence does not provide for any process.

Mr. GURNEY. They can use any kind of process whatever to get the manganese ore into usable shape.

Mr. PITTMAN. But the Senator's amendment does not refer to any process at all.

Mr. GURNEY. That is correct.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator's amendment would result in providing only for a plant to beneficiate manganese.

Mr. GURNEY. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. Does not the Senator think it would be better to say "by the electrolytic or other process"?

Mr. KING. "Or any other feasible process."

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; "or any other feasible process."

Mr. GURNEY. I am willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. MILLER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GURNEY. I am agreeable to the suggestion so long as it does not confine it to any one certain process. If the Senator cares to offer that as an amendment to my amendment, I shall be glad to accept it.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think that language would be better than the language in the Senator's amendment, because some process should be referred to. I suggest that the Senator modify his amendment by inserting, after the word "electrolytic", the words "or other", so as to read "electrolytic or other process."

Mr. GURNEY. I shall be glad to modify my amendment accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, as modified, will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 11, in line 10, after the word "electrolytic", it is proposed to insert "or other."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have been a little surprised and gratified to learn of the large deposits of manganese in the United States. I recall that upon two occasions in the Finance Committee, of which I am a member, we attempted to encourage the development of manganese deposits in the United States by the imposition of tariffs. Upon the first occasion to which I refer a rather high tariff was imposed. Later, when another tariff bill was under consideration, representations were made that the tariff then existing was not adequate and we increased it. Representatives of the Government appeared and stated that the deposits of manganese in the United States were so spotty and were so lacking in merit that it would be very difficult for us ever to develop satisfactory manganese enterprises in the United States.

I did not accept that view, and therefore favored the higher tariffs, but I regret to say the promises which were made before our committee were not verified. Years have gone by since then—that is, since 1930 and 1932—and we still have not developed manganese to meet the requirements of our country.

Much has been said about the manganese deposits in Russia. I happened to visit the region of the Caucasus Mountains in Russia and I visited the places where manganese deposits were being developed, and also the developments of the gold deposits in the Ural Mountains. It is true that rather cheap labor was used, but methods of extracting the ore were not comparable in their scientific aspects, if I may use that expression, to the methods employed in the United States, and the Russians did not produce manganese as cheaply as many of us had imagined.

The point I am trying to make is that I am very glad if it has been discovered that we have adequate manganese deposits in Lincoln County, Nev., or in Arizona, or in South Dakota, or elsewhere, to meet the imperative demands of our country. Manganese is one of the necessary strategic minerals, and if we can produce an adequate supply to meet the needs of our country I shall be very glad, indeed.

There is much to say in favor of the position taken by the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN]. I made some investigation of the electrolytic process while in Russia, and also when we were investigating the matter before the Finance Committee, and it seems to me that if the manganese development in the United States were to assume adequate proportions, it would be largely through the electrolytic process, unless, perhaps, through some process now unknown.

Mr. MCCARRAN. Mr. President, the Senator is undoubtedly aware that in many States of the Union there are great quantities of manganese, but in some States it is of a low grade. So in order to make it commercially possible to mine it and utilize it in the arts and sciences, and in connection with the steel industry, processes, of which the electrolytic process is one, have been tried by way of experiment.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, it seems to me we should have more than one pilot plant. The feasibility of the electrolytic or any other process cannot be determined in a single pilot plant. I would suggest an amendment, on page 11, line 10, after the words "pilot plant", to insert "or plants."

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, at this time I ask for the adoption of my amendment, as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I ask for action on the amendment I have proposed on page 11, line 8, after the words "pilot plant", to insert the words "or plants."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN in the chair). The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill H. R. 10055 was read the third time and passed.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10039) to provide for the expenses of national preparedness by raising revenue and issuing bonds, to provide a method for paying for such bonds, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. DOUGHTON, Mr. CULLEN, Mr. MCCORMACK, Mr. COOPER, Mr. TREADWAY, Mr. CROWTHER, and Mr. KNUTSON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

TRANSPORTATION OF RED CROSS RELIEF SUPPLIES

Mr. PITTMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. MCNARY. I do not want to anticipate the proposal which I believe the able Senator from Nevada is about to make, but if he makes it I want to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. PITTMAN. I shall make my proposal in the form of a motion.

Mr. MCNARY. I believe the Senator from Nevada intends to bring up a joint resolution which was considered in the Foreign Relations Committee concerning a matter which was before us a day or two ago.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes. I tried to have action taken on it yesterday, but I could not obtain unanimous consent at that time.

Mr. MCNARY. If my anticipation is correct, before any statement is made I think we should have a call for a quorum, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark, Idaho	Hill	Murray
Andrews	Clark, Mo.	Holman	Neely
Ashurst	Connally	Holt	Norris

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 279.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 279) to amend section 4 of Public Resolution No. 54, approved November 4, 1939, entitled "Joint resolution to preserve the neutrality and the peace of the United States and to secure the safety of its citizens and their interests."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not express any antipathy, but I think the joint resolution should be explained, in the light of the discussion of a few days ago.

Mr. PITTMAN. I shall make an explanation with regard to the joint resolution.

On last Tuesday we had under consideration Senate Joint Reslution 279, amending section 4 of the Neutrality Act with reference to American Red Cross vessels. The restriction was that a Red Cross vessel might proceed to belligerent ports with the safe conduct of all the belligerent countries named in the President's proclamation. That restriction, of course, makes it impossible for the Red Cross to do anything in Europe, because it is now impossible to obtain safe conduct from three of the countries, because they are not active. Even Germany, which the testimony shows is entirely willing for this ship, which is now at sea, to go into the harbor at Bordeaux, said that nothing would happen to the vessel going over as far as Germany was concerned, but that Germany might be bombing Bordeaux at the time the vessel arrived and that the port might not be safe. At any rate, Germany would not grant safe conduct.

If our Red Cross is to function in Europe, that restriction must be eliminated. The necessity for the Red Cross functioning is evident. There was never as much suffering in the world as there is in Europe today, and we have more resources to give in that relief than has any other country in the world. In fact, our Government has appropriated $50,000,000 to be used by the President through the Red Cross or other agencies for such relief.

For many years all governments have treated the Red Cross as an agency of mercy. The Red Cross went back of the battle lines in France in the World War. It was used to carry the wounded. The Red Cross conducted hospitals, as well as relief stations, behind the lines. As a matter of fact, some of the personnel of the Red Cross lost their lives in that war. They willingly took the chance to do the humane work they were doing throughout the world.

We cannot entirely eliminate every chance of a Red Cross vessel being sunk. We can eliminate every practical danger; and that is what we should do. When the joint resolution was under discussion a few days ago, the chief objection was that it did not protect against Red Cross vessels being driven through a blockaded zone. There was nothing to restrict them. We had to trust the President, and the president of the American Red Cross. The president of the Red Cross testified before our committee. He very plainly said that as long as he was in charge of a Red Cross vessel he would not allow it to go into a zone where there was bombing. The same statement was made by Mr. Breckenridge Long, Assistant Secretary of State. That fact was brought out by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] on the floor of the Senate. It was stated that in a matter of this kind we should not simply take the word of an Assistant Secretary of State. So I asked the members of the Foreign Relations Committee to attend a meeting yesterday for the purpose of considering this joint resolution. The committee had considered it once and reported it, but the debate on the floor indicated that there should be some further consideration. When the committee met yesterday I presented another amendment to the joint resolution, in the nature of a proviso reflecting the sentiments of Congress. Some Senators thought there should be an actual limitation by a proviso, so that was agreed upon. There were other suggestions with regard to the language of the joint resolution which were an improvement upon the proviso as I drafted it.

Its present form is the result of that consideration lasting an hour and a half. I intend to offer this amendment——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, has the Senator a copy of the proviso, and would he mind reading it?

Mr. PITTMAN. I have it in my hand now for the purpose of reading it, and I will offer it after the joint resolution is taken up. At the end of the resolution as reported in printed form, it is proposed to add the following:

Provided, That where permission has not been given by the blockading power, no American Red Cross vessel shall enter a port where a blockade by aircraft, surface vessel, or submarine is being attempted through the destruction of vessels, or into a port of any country where such blockade of the whole country is being so attempted; and provided further, That such American Red Cross vessel shall be on a mission of mercy only and carrying only Red Cross materials and personnel.

The words "a blockade being attempted" are used and we have described how, namely by destroying vessels from the air or by surface vessels or by submarines, so as to avoid the technical construction of the word "blockade" in international law. We have used the word "blockade," but we have broadened its definition.

I may say that personally, from the testimony of the Assistant Secretary of State and the president of the Red Cross and because of the whole history of the American Red Cross, I myself was satisfied without the original provision. The history of American Red Cross vessels is unique.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. May I ask who suggested the provision the Senator has just read as an addition to the resolution? Those words were not contained in the first resolution.

Mr. PITTMAN. I suggested this amendment in substance as it is now, but the language is not the exact language because suggested changes were made in the meeting of the committee yesterday.

Mr. McNARY. What I want to find out is, Does the Red Cross subscribe to the language now suggested by the able Senator from Nevada?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; I telephoned Norman Davis about it, and asked him if he had any objection to the amendment, and he said "No"—that it was carrying out exactly what the Red Cross would do, anyway, and the Assistant Secretary of State said the same thing.

The reason I was not so insistent as some were with regard to this amendment is that the whole history of Red Cross vessels is different from that of all other vessels. Red Cross vessels do not have all the responsibility, so to speak, of a private ship under the flag of its government. Throughout the whole World War there was not a Red Cross vessel of any country sunk. We know that all countries respect the Red Cross. They respect the Red Cross because it administers to suffering with impartiality as to races and belligerents. It is not a government agency but an institution of people.

While Germany cannot give a safe conduct because a safe conduct means that they will lead the vessel through their own mine fields and take care of it, there was not any objection expressed to this ship bringing her cargo to Bordeaux, and I do not think there ever will be.

Under my statement that I will immediately offer this amendment if the joint resolution is taken up, I ask for a vote on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada to proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 279.

NOMINATIONS OF HENRY L. STIMSON AND FRANK KNOX

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I do not rise to oppose the joint resolution which the Senator from Nevada desires to have considered or the amendment which he has suggested. As a matter of fact, I think the amendment he has proposed, and will later offer to the joint resolution, is proper and indicates that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations is trying to do everything he can do to prevent this country becoming involved in European affairs.

I rise now for an entirely different purpose. The President has just sent to the Senate the nominations of two gentlemen, one to be Secretary of the Navy, and the other to be Secretary of War. Colonel Knox, of the Chicago Daily News, has been nominated to be Secretary of the Navy. He is an ardent Republican; he was candidate for Vice President on the Republican ticket in the national election of 1936, and those who listened to his speeches during that campaign know that he was more vitriolic against the President of the United States than was any other man I have ever heard speak over the radio or from the public platform. He denounced every single labor and liberal policy of the administration which had been in office during the previous 4 years.

The other gentleman is Henry L. Stimson. Both of them, I may say, so far as I know, are honorable gentlemen, but the country ought to know that both these gentlemen are the most conservative of the conservative Republicans in this country. The people of the country ought to know this means that this administration is turning away from the liberal policies we have talked so much about; that it is turning away from the underprivileged; that it is turning its back upon the one-third of the people who are ill-housed, ill-fed, and ill-clothed. We still have those people with us; but our thoughts are being turned toward Europe and toward war.

These two men were chosen, without doubt, because of all the interventionists in the Republican Party they have been foremost in that cause. They have been actively advocating more than mere preparedness. All those with whom I have come in contact want preparedness. They want it upon a sane, sound basis; they want to go about it sanely and calmly, and with the idea of seeing that the money we are appropriating shall be spent in a proper way. We want to defend this country against anybody who may ever dare attack it, whether on the Pacific or on the Atlantic. The great majority of the people of this country are even willing to go further; they are willing to aid any South American country and to go to its rescue in the event any other nation attempts to attack it. But the people of the country should know exactly what the nomination of these two gentlemen means and the significance of their selection.

Mr. Stimson, I understand, is 73 years of age. He was appointed at the end of Mr. Taft's administration as Secretary of War. He was one of the 30 men who met recently secretly in the city of New York and were responsible for putting out the advertisement trying to propagandize the American people into taking steps that would lead this Nation down the road to war.

What does it mean to the Democrats of this country? Does it mean that Democrats cannot be found in the United States of America who are able and capable of filling the offices? Does it mean that the Democratic Party has abandoned all its principles of liberalism? Does it mean, if you please, that now we Democrats are going over into the heart of Wall Street and taking the very essence of Wall Street representatives and putting them into the Cabinet under a Democratic administration? Does it mean, if you please, that these men are appointed because of the fact that they have been advocating direct intervention? Does it mean, if you please, that the policy of the Democratic Party for peace has been changed to one of war?

These two appointments ought to be particularly pleasing to the warmongers, to those who think we ought to go to war; to those who think that isolation means putting our heads in the sand. But it should not be pleasing to those who no longer feel that we are a colony of the British Government; it should not be pleasing to those who do not want to see American boys go across the water and be slaughtered upon the battlefields of Europe; it should not be pleasing to the peace-loving people of this country. I can visualize the response of every great newspaper in this country that has been advocating direct intervention, everything short of war, everything, if you please, to take one step nearer to the brink, knowing that when we turn on the gasoline when near the brink, and keep pouring it in we cannot stop without going oved the brink.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Information some years ago was to the effect that Mr. Stimson was a member of the firm of attorneys of which Elihu Root was the head, and who were the attorneys for the French and British Governments. I think it ought to be investigated now, whether or not Mr. Stimson is still an agent of a foreign country as attorney.

Mr. WHEELER. I must confess that it is with a heavy heart that I, as one Member of this body, see the drift of events. I had hoped that the Democratic Party would continue to be the liberal party. I had hoped that the Democratic Party would continue to be interested in the one-third of the population which is ill-housed, ill-fed, and ill-clothed. I had hoped that the Democratic Party would be the peace party of the United States, and not make the foolish errors which have been made in the past, and that we would not drive the people, by hysteria and pounding, the same old way that they have been driven before. The men who met in the secret meeting in New York were the same group that carried on the propaganda to get us into the last war. They were using the same old slogans in the same old way. Now, instead of having them in New York and in Chicago, we are to bring them down and put them in the Cabinet. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Montana has, in my judgment, drawn from the appointment of Colonel Knox and Colonel Stimson some deductions which I do not believe are well founded. I think at least the Senate and the country should reserve judgment upon the wisdom of these appointments until the committees to which they have been referred have reported, and the nominations are brought before the Senate for its action.

Undoubtedly there are in the Democratic Party men who are qualified to be Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy. Undoubtedly there are in the Democratic Party men just as well qualified as the two gentlemen whose names have been sent to the Senate. But, Mr. President, there has been a feeling in this country, and it has found widespread comment and circulation in the press, that in this hour of our extremity, in this hour of our emergency and our anxiety, partisan politics ought to cut no figure either in the exercise of Executive authority or in the deliberations of these legislative bodies.

I am not intimately acquainted with either Mr. Stimson or Colonel Knox, but I happen to know Mr. Stimson more intimately than I do Colonel Knox. Many years ago Mr. Stimson was Secretary of War. The position of Secretary of War is an administrative office. The Secretary of War does not decide the policies of the Government with respect to liberalism or reaction. He is chiefly an administrative officer, charged with the duty of conducting the War Department. While he is a member of the Cabinet, and sits around the Cabinet table, and undoubtedly discusses policies, his office is chiefly an administrative office; and there is, and ought to be, very little partisan politics in the administration of that office.

The same thing is true of the Secretary of the Navy. So far as I know, Colonel Knox never has held a public office. He may have held one of some character at some time, but I do not recall it. Four years ago he was a candidate for Vice President on the Republican ticket, and was not elected. Since then, and more especially in the past few months, it has been necessary to consider the opinions and the views of others besides those who happen to belong to the majority party in dealing with our international relations. Colonel Knox is one of those who have been invited by the President into conferences dealing with our international relations.

He has exhibited toward the party which defeated him a liberalism which has seemed to me to be commendable. He has been willing to cooperate with the Government of the United States in carrying forward its policies. However much men may differ as to those policies, it has been necessary for the Government to have policies, and it has had policies, and it has sought the advice and counsel and assistance of men beyond the membership of the party in power in formulating and in carrying out those policies.

Mr. Stimson was Secretary of State under Mr. Hoover. I believe it cannot be disputed that he was an outstanding Secretary of State. There are in this country many persons who believe that if his views in 1931 had been adopted by the nations then in a position to take action, we might not now be in the position in which the world finds itself, because, as Secretary of State, he urged upon one of the belligerents in the existing war certain action in the Far East which, if taken, might have prevented the accumulation of conditions and circumstances which have brought the world to its present unfortunate state.

I do not believe that the appointment of these two gentlemen indicates that the Democratic Party has turned its back upon liberalism. I believe the outstanding significance of their appointment is that the President of the United States recognizes that in this hour partisanship, insofar as it may be abandoned, ought to be abandoned; that the experience and the wisdom and the counsel and the cooperation of men of all political faiths ought to be placed at the disposal of the Government of the United States and, through it, at the disposal of the American people. That, in my judgment, is the significance of these appointments.

I do not believe their appointment, together or individually, indicates that we are headed toward war. Under the Constitution there is only one authority in this Nation that can declare war, and that is the Congress of the United States. Until Congress is convinced that a declaration of war is the last resort, the ultimate resort to which we must go in order to protect and preserve our institutions, no Secretary of the Navy or Secretary of War can take us into war.

I am proud of the fact that the Democratic Party—and I do not say this in any spirit of partisanship—has always been the liberal party. I have always believed it to be the liberal party, taking its history from the beginning until now. I do not say that in derogation of many eras of liberalism under the Republican Party, especially under the leadership of Col. Theodore Roosevelt from 1901 to 1908. I think in more recent years the Democratic Party has justified its position as the liberal party of the United States; by which I mean it has at least been the party which has moved toward the recognition of the theory which has placed the Government of the United States and all its agencies and all its experience and its knowledge and its power at the disposal of the American people in trying to solve their problems—economic, social, industrial, moral, and political. I believe in that sort of liberalism; and I have always believed, and I now believe, that if and when the time ever comes that any political party or any administration ceases to look forward instead of backward, ceases to be willing to move into unoccupied territory, if necessary, in order that the welfare of the American people may be advanced, that party and that administration will no longer be trusted by the American people. That has been the history of political parties in the United States.

In my judgment, no man can doubt the patriotism and the loyalty as American citizens of either Colonel Knox or Mr. Stimson. I am not even prepared to say that within their own conceptions of the term "liberalism" they are not themselves liberal. I so regard Mr. Stimson. He was a great Secretary of State. I do not know what his legal employments have been.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield in a moment. The Chief Justice of the United States, Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, was at one time accused of being a Wall Street lawyer. When he was nominated to be Chief Justice of the United States, and his name was sent to the Senate, many perfectly sincere, conscientious Senators voted against confirmation because they feared that his legal connections, while he was practicing law, might even unconsciously color his opinions as Chief Justice. I think those fears have been found to be groundless; and, in my judgment, Chief Justice Hughes has made and is now making an outstanding Chief Justice of the United States.

In view of the record of these men and their attitude on public questions, as it has been expressed and demonstrated, disconnected from any of their private interests, I do not entertain a fear that they will in any degree fail in the highest discharge of their duty, that they will fail to bring to the offices to which they have been nominated wide experience, broad vision, and deep knowledge, not only of world conditions but of the history and conditions of the United States.

I believe that when they have been confirmed by the Senate, as I feel sure they will be, and have served in their respective capacities, the American people will have cause to congratulate the President of the United States on the fact that he has been willing to go beyond the boundaries of his own political party, omitting numerous men who were qualified to serve in these capacities within that party, to show his interest in the American Republic first and in some political organization second.

In view of the remarks of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], whose sincerity I do not in any way question, I felt that I should say at least this much before the committees to which the nominations have been referred have had an opportunity to act upon them. In my judgment, it would be unfortunate if the American people should in advance be prejudiced against the men who have been nominated by the President to fill these nonpolitical, nonpartisan offices, by anything which might be said on the floor of the Senate. That is my excuse, if I need one, for the remarks I have made.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the distinguished leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], has spoken of the "extremity" in which the United States is in at the present time. He spoke of these nonpolitical offices. After all, the only extremity the United States is in is what we have conceived in our own minds. We are in no extremity, and it is unfortunate that it should go out to the American people that this great country of ours, the richest of all the countries of the world, is in dire distress and in an extremity.

Partisan politics? I am not playing partisan politics. If I were going to charge that politics was being played, I would say that the selection of these men just before the Republican Convention is to meet might more properly be looked upon as politics than the expression of an objection to their nominations.

Great liberals? Of course. The minute the Democrats take a man from Wall Street he becomes a liberal, and the minute he does not come along with us he is a reactionary. A leopard does not change its spots that quickly.

Partisanship? Of course. When the day comes that there is not some partisanship in the United States, when there are not two parties, then we will have dictatorship. We should have at least two strong parties in the United States. We should have a clash of opinion between Democrats and Republicans, liberals and conservatives.

We are not in the war, we are not defenseless, no airplanes are going to come over and bomb us and bomb any cities. No one has attacked us, and no one is going to attack us.

Mr. TOBEY. And we are not going to war.

Mr. WHEELER. And we are not going into the war, if a majority of the Congress has its way about it. But when the distinguished Senator from Kentucky says that the Congress is the only body that can declare war, let me call his attention to a speech made by the Chief Executive of this Nation at Chautauqua, N. Y. I cannot quote the exact words, but I have seen them. In that speech he said, in effect, that any

President of the United States and his Secretary of State could get this country into war.

This country can be gotten into war by inflaming the public mind. I think the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who voted against our entrance into the last war, has stated that many Senators stood upon the floor of the Senate and Representatives on the floor of the House and voted for our entrance into the war even though they did not want to vote for it, but they voted in that way because of the propaganda, because the public mind had been inflamed, because the same propaganda out of Wall Street and out of Great Britain inflamed the public mind until Representatives and Senators, thinking of being reelected to Congress, voted for our entrance into the war, against their better judgment. I am told that some of them voted for it with tears in their eyes, because they did not believe in it; but because of the fact that they were driven on by the propaganda, they voted for our entrance into the war.

Take this country into war? The man who wants to take this country into war is doing the greatest disservice to the people of the United States any man can possibly do, no matter who he may be. It seems to me nothing short of criminality to urge the people of this country to send American boys to war, or to get this country into the war.

Someone may say, "You are pro this or pro that." I am not pro-British, I am not pro-French, I am not pro-German, I am not pro anything else that is not American. I am pro-American, and I want to look at this question from the standpoint of the welfare of the great masses of the American people.

I know Colonel Knox, and I have high regard for him personally. I have spoken with him on the same platform. I have read the editorials which have appeared in his papers, I have seen them constantly, I know the trend of his thought with reference to the war, and I know the trend of the editorial policy of his paper. Anyone who can read those editorials and anyone who knows that trend knows that it has all been for intervention, for taking the country further, step by step, down that road.

Anyone who heard Mr. Stimson's speech a few nights ago, and has seen his public utterances, knows the trend of his thought. I am not questioning his integrity or his honesty.

These are both honorable men. But I state that, notwithstanding the fact that they are honorable men, the country should know what the trend of their minds is, what their editorials and public utterances have been, what they are leading us to, and what it means, so that the people will not be fooled.

If the American people want to go to war, certainly that is their privilege. If they want to go to war and they do go to war, every man in the Senate will, of course, do his patriotic duty to support the Government. But until that time comes, those of us who are opposed to that course and think it is unwise, and think it is wrong to propagandize the country, feel that we should tell the American people, so that they will not be fooled as to the whole trend of the thought of these men, whose public utterances we have followed in the editorials we have read.

Liberals? Of course Mr. Stimson is now a liberal, now a great progressive. And Colonel Knox is now a great liberal. When did he become a liberal? Certainly not in 1936, when he was a Vice Presidential candidate, because, as I stated before, if there was one man in the United States who made vitriolic speeches and denounced the President and the New Deal from one end of the country to the other, it was this same distinguished gentleman, Colonel Knox. I never heard more vitriolic speeches. That should be notice to the liberal forces of the country just what the drift is; it should be notice to the peace-loving people of this country just what the drift is.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I had intended to speak on the resolution, but I cannot fail, in passing, to comment on the appointment of Col. Frank Knox and Mr. Stimson to the Cabinet of the President of the United States. At least the President wanted his Cabinet to be nonpartisan, because it is now 5 to 5, with Mr. Wallace, Mr. Ickes, Mr. Hopkins, Colonel Knox, and Mr. Stimson.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not know who the Senator counts as Democrats, but I have been under the impression that before these appointments were made there were only three Democrats in the Cabinet, and one of them has now been superseded.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I did not rise to discuss that matter, but I read in the newspapers 3 weeks ago that there was pressure from London to get Harry Woodring out of the Cabinet, and it has succeeded. Why does London seemingly know more about our foreign policy than the United States Senate knows? Did Lord Lothian tell the President when he conferred with him that Mr. Woodring was in the way?

I do not hold any brief for Mr. Woodring. I am not taking up his case. But the difference between Mr. Woodring's policy of helping the Allies and that of the new nominee is just this. Mr. Woodring's policy was to do everything for the Allies within the law and to look after America first, but the policy of the new nominee is to do anything for the Allies that is necessary and America be damned.

Col. Frank Knox, a liberal. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] spoke of him as a liberal. I do not have the editorials with me, but I shall put them in the RECORD this week—editorials dealing with the matter under discussion and showing what sort of liberal Colonel Knox is.

Of course, the President of the United States wanted the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to do his bidding without any question, and he now has men who will do it, because they are right along with him in conducting us along the path toward war.

Everyone here knows—the Senator from Kentucky gave us a little lesson in civics—that the Congress declares war.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I will yield. I shall be more generous to the Senator from Kentucky than he was to me when I asked him to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sorry that I did not yield to the Senator. I wanted to finish my remarks before I yielded. It was not because I had no desire not to yield to the Senator.

Mr. President, I am not attempting to lecture the Senate on civics, and particularly I am not trying to lecture the Senator from West Virginia on civics.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator can lecture me on practical politics, but not on civics.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I shall not attempt to lecture the Senator on practical politics. I leave that to the State of West Virginia itself, which has already done so. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLT. The only difference between the State of West Virginia and the State of Kentucky is that it cost $60,000,000 to reelect the Senator from Kentucky. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. BARKLEY. That statement is an unmitigated untruth.

Mr. HOLT. I thank the Senator for expressing it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. Well, I have expressed it.

Mr. HOLT. Well, I am glad he did.

Now, going ahead with what I started to say. I wish to say that, of course, it is very good that we shall have a Secretary of the Navy. We have had one off and on. The Secretary of the Navy is now a candidate in the State of New Jersey. Apparently it is not very important to have a Secretary of the Navy, when he is needed to run on the Democratic ticket in New Jersey at this very, very important time. I shall not discuss that matter.

It has been known for some time that most all of these laws being passed give the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy power which they have never had in the history of our country, and powers which were never even thought of are now put into the hands of two warmongers—and I speak of Knox and Stimson. I shall discuss them later on in the Senate.

I should like Colonel Knox to tell the country about his international investments which he personally holds in South America. Let him come out and tell the truth and show his interest in America—but which end of America?

Coming back to the matter of declaration of war, we know that Congress has to declare war. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] spoke about how war could result by inflaming public passion. There is another way of getting into war, and that is by creating an incident by reason of which the other side declares war on us. You can get into a fight either by hitting somebody or by creating an incident which results in him hitting you. That is what the administration is trying to do. Since certain policies of the New Deal failed, actions have been taken in recent months which would tend to create an incident to involve us in the controversies of Europe.

The President said at Chautauqua that day by day decisions will get us into war, if we are not careful. Every one of those decisions has been toward war.

Speak of creating an incident? Yes. In every way possible effort is being made to create an incident by which the public could be inflamed, or to create an incident because of which some nation could declare war, or make an overt act against us. Does anyone here think that either Colonel Knox or Mr. Stimson, the great liberals of Wall Street, spoken of by the Senator from Montana, would hesitate to do something to create such an incident? If anyone thinks so he is either fooling himself, or he is not familiar with the record of these individuals.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from West Virginia will recall an incident within the memory or within the congressional term of service of some Members of this body, when without any declaration of war by the Congress, or any authority of the Congress, a Secretary of the Navy actually committed an act of war against a nation with which we were not at war, by landing bluejackets and marines, and shelling the port of Vera Cruz along the coast of Mexico. Without any authority of Congress whatever he created an incident which was an act of war, had the adverse party been strong enough to treat it as an act of war. We landed the bluejackets at Vera Cruz without a declaration of war, and occupied it for months. We shelled that city, killed some of its citizens because, forsooth, the Secretary of the Navy became enraged because the government, which had not been recognized by the United States, refused to salute the American flag.

Mr. HOLT. Of course, the Senator from Missouri is correct in his statement.

Going back to the first statement I made, the London newspapers spoke about how they could not get cooperation from Mr. Woodring. They could not get cooperation from him. I did not know we would discuss this subject today, or I would have brought with me files and records I have. I intend to put them in the RECORD to show that the idea of cooperation with England was discussed at the time, to which I referred.

Mr. President, England need not fear today that there will be no cooperation on the part of either Mr. Stimson or Mr. Knox. Such assurance was probably had before they were named to the Cabinet. I say here this afternoon on the floor of the United States Senate that all indications point—some of you may say that I should not say it because of my political affiliation—but my opinion is that there have been commitments made for our involvement in the war and now the question is, Will those commitments be fulfilled?

So far as I am personally concerned—I may be only one, but I am sure there are more who are with me—I shall vote against that involvement. Day by day, step by step we are getting nearer to war. It is said, "That is not a step taking us to war," and the next day another step is taken toward war. These jingoists were put into the Cabinet as a step toward peace—peace with the Republican interventionists. That is what some wanted, not peace with the world. And I say here this afternoon that time will record the history of 1937 to 1940 in the foreign relations of the United States as the most damning indictment against secret diplomacy this country has ever seen. Time will prove it, just as after the last war we found out what happened behind the scenes. We may not like it, but it is the truth. This is another move in the direction of cooperation to get America into this war.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I am very reluctant to speak this afternoon, because I can understand how anxious the Senate is to adjourn to pay honor and tribute to one of its most distinguished Members. But I will not let the curtain come down on this session without at least one Senator standing up to deny the accusation or insinuation, made on more than one occasion in the past hour, that there is an attempt upon the part of the President of the United States to lead this country into war.

If there is a Senator who does not believe that there is a grave and compelling need for preparedness, I should like to have him now rise in his place and so state. If there is a Senator who doubts that there is danger to us as a result of the situation in foreign places, I should like to have him so state, and tell us why there is need for preparedness if there is no danger. I should like to have some Senator point out now, in the immediate wake of these insinuations, what step the President of the United States or the Government of the United States has taken that is the slightest indication of an effort to involve us in a foreign war or to bring our boys into participation in war.

Not so long ago we experienced the excitement of the so-called Neutrality Act. I said then, and I now repeat, that I would not vote to send our boys to participate in a foreign war. I said then, and I say now, on my own responsibility and in the broadest sense, that the United States Senate is a peace bloc, and that we want to avoid war; but surely every Senator knows, as does every careful-thinking American, that we are in at least the lighter shadows of war. If that were not true, Mr. President, we should not be reading and hearing a constant accusation on the part of some that we have neglected a proper preparedness.

It seems sad to me, Mr. President, that in this trying hour of the world's history we are not a united people. The totalitarian powers of Europe, with their hateful philosophy and ideology, are marching toward the destruction of god-fearing people. Religious Poland is gone. Czechoslovakia is in the dust. Holland and Belgium have been subjected to indignity, humiliation, and distress. France has her back against the wall. England is in terror and terrible danger; and the totalitarian leaders, who have turned their backs on God, are going forward. Why? Because they are a united people; because they have a national ideal—a base ideal, to be sure, but a national ideal.

In the shadow of all that terror and reason for fear, with Gethsemane probably just down the road, in the United States Senate, representative of the Nation's leadership, the ambassadors of the great sovereign States are tearing themselves apart, when the crying need of the hour, in addition to preparedness, is national unity.

I do not know that Mr. Stimson and Colonel Knox need my defense, and I do not know that I should come to their defense at this moment, because I am not sufficiently informed as to their background or their ideas, but I have a supreme faith in our national leadership and in an outstanding man who has an imagination capable of coping with the situation. It not only deeply distresses me, Mr. President, but, as a Senator of the United States, I resent it when, in an hour of peril, which we all admit, there is a question as to whether or not a man has a right to serve because he may be a conservative rather than a liberal.

Mr. President, I am quite willing to match my votes for the short time I have been in the Senate, on any liberal standard that may be chosen, with those of Senators who question the political views of any men now called to serve. At such a time as this I very much resent the attempt to wave the exciting flag of Wall Street before the American people. I know, as the result of an experience on a committee of this body, that men who were engaged in the manufacture of munitions during the last war have tried to avoid participation now because of the stigma cast upon them as a result of their experience in the last war. I know that our Government, our people, and Members of the Senate are hoping and praying that we may again accelerate and stimulate their interest and activity in the manufacture of munitions and implements of war as we rush toward preparedness.

Mr. President, in probably the darkest hour in all the world's history, when there should be a melting of the hearts and a meeting of the minds of the men of this great Republic, we find the leadership of the United States Senate going in different paths and raising questions of politics, such as the question of whether a man is a liberal or a conservative.

Mr. President, I am old enough to remember the last war. No such questions were then raised. I have lived long enough to know that come war again—and I pray God it will not come—a man's political views will not be questioned. He will not be asked whether he is a conservative or a liberal, or whether he comes from Main Street, Oak Street, or Wall Street.

While I speak today unprepared, and only because I felt that there was a need for someone to raise his voice against these charges, I hope that some heed will be paid to one feeble voice, so that, despite the excitement of an election year, and because of the uncertainties and worry of the times, we may come together, particularly in this body, as we consider the problems which are a sacred responsibility now more than ever before in our country's history.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to occupy only a few minutes in speaking of the matter which has just been discussed.

I have no desire to make any comments about the two nominations sent to the Senate this afternoon. If, as the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] says he understands, either of the two gentlemen, Mr. Knox or Mr. Stimson, has made any commitment to a foreign government to participate in an effort to involve this country in war, that is a matter which should be susceptible of proof; and I think we can confidently rely upon the proper committee of the Senate, upon an investigation, ascertaining whether or not that is the fact. Should it be the fact, it would certainly influence the votes of Members of the Senate.

I have no idea that the Senator's information is correct. While I have only a slight acquaintance with the two gentlemen who have been nominated, their records cause me to believe that neither of them would be guilty of making a commitment to any foreign government to involve this country in war. If such a commitment could be proved, no Senator would vote to confirm their nominations. But, Mr. President, it would be exceedingly unfortunate if a statement of that kind were made for which there is no justification, and which cannot be proved, because, after all, the statement is carried to the country; and if there is a denial 1 week or 2 weeks hence, the denial will probably never overtake the charge.

I recall that during the World War politics was forgotten. I was then a Member of the House of Representatives, and I will say for the Republican Members of the House that never once was there any justification for the charge that politics influenced their consideration of any question. They stood up as Americans, and not as partisans; this country was united, and we were proud of the record of the Republicans and Democrats alike in the Senate and in the House of Representatives. If today there is nothing against the gentlemen whose nominations have been sent to the Senate this afternoon other than the fact that Mr. Stimson and Mr. Knox are Republicans, I certainly will vote to confirm their nominations, because I believe at this time in the history of our country we should realize when we call on the Republicans in the Senate and the House to forget politics and support the program of the Government for the defense of the Nation, then the least we Democrats can do is to forget partisan politics and to prove by our actions that we have forgotten it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does not the assumption that these two gentlemen desire to bring us into war contemplate that the President of the United States desires to bring us into war? We know that that is not the case, and we know that he would select men who would share his views and do everything possible to avoid war, but to prepare this country for every eventuality.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, of course I have no such idea, and I know the American people do not believe that the President of the United States wants this country to engage in war. I do not want to engage in war. Where would an army land across the sea? At what port could they be landed? Who is seriously thinking of such a thing? No sane man here has any such idea in his mind. What would we send abroad—375,000 men?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We have been sending some of the very latest naval vessels, some of which have not even been delivered, in violation of law.

Mr. BYRNES. I disagree with the Senator as to there being a violation of law, but that is a matter that should be gone into and, if it is in violation of law, then it should not be done. I was speaking of men when the Senator interrupted me; that is what I had in mind; because the American people are being told that we are going to send their boys abroad. I know of nobody in a place of responsibility or power who has any such idea.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does the Senator know of anything even in the way of material that has been sent or is being sent that Congress has not authorized to be sent?

Mr. BYRNES. I know to what the Senator refers and we know what has happened. I heard officials of the Navy Department testify as to planes which were being manufactured for the Navy Department 6 months ago by Pratt & Whitney, as I recall. Pratt & Whitney told the Navy Department that a new engine had been developed which had greater power, would give greater speed, and which was twice as good as the one that was being manufactured for the United States Navy. At that time the Government of Finland, in sore need of planes, wanted to buy those planes under construction; the Navy Department released its order, and let Finland buy them when Pratt & Whitney agreed that, in place of those planes, they would provide for the Navy Department, for a little less money, planes much superior to those under construction. The same process has been followed, according to information we have had in the Appropriations Committee, in the case of other materials. I know that in the press there is a discussion about some ships, but because I have not the facts and do not know them, I do not express an opinion about that matter, for I think that at this time we should avoid making statements unless we are absolutely certain of the facts in the case.

But, Mr. President, I must admit that I was prompted to ask the Senate to indulge me because of the statements made by my good friend, the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. I have not discussed the war in Europe, so far as I can recall, since the neutrality bill was under discussion last year. Several times I have heard made the same statement or a statement similar to the one made by the Senator from Montana. I know him well enough to know that he makes it in all sincerity. Today he said, referring to the Senator from Nebraska during the World War, that the Senator from Nebraska had voted against entering that war; that he understood at that time Members of the Senate and House voted for America to enter that war when they did not believe in it, some of them crying as they voted, because they were driven to it by British propaganda. That was substantially his statement; I would not attempt to quote his exact words. That statement has been made in the press and has been made on the floor of the Senate and the House. I know the Senator from Nebraska voted against entering the World War. I had respect for his views, just as I had respect for the views of other members of the House who voted against entering the war. One of the dearest friends I had in life was the Representative from North Carolina, the Democratic leader of the House of Representatives, Claude Kitchen. Two hours before that vote was taken he asked me to come to his room. He said he was going to vote, as did the Senator from Nebraska, against entering the war. In the presence of his wife and children, he told me of his determination; he said that for two nights he had not slept; and he also cried on that occasion. I admit I joined him in that respect. I was against his position; I was going to vote for the resolution to enter the war; but I respected him as a man who had convictions and had the courage of those convictions. When he was criticized, I defended him with all my soul. At the same time, I claimed the same right to respect for my views.

No British propaganda caused the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], or the others who voted for the resolution to enter the World War. Why did we vote for it? Was it because of munition manufacturers? There never could be a greater mistake. I hold no brief for them; I would have nothing to say in their behalf at that time or any other. I have never attempted to study the profits made by them. Yet I wish to say that the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] has been brought home to us. Within the last few days the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and I, interrogating a witness before the Appropriations Committee, were told that at least one of the great manufacturers of powder in this country stopped manufacturing powder because throughout this country he was called a merchant of death. He had money. Why should he subject himself and his family to criticism of being a "merchant of death"? He refused to take orders; he does not want them now; and this country, in its hour of unpreparedness, goes to him today to ask him, to plead with him, to manufacture powder. Officials of the Navy Department told us that they even encouraged orders from other governments to be placed with him. We are a peace-loving people; we cannot hope under our society in civilization to build up powder plants all over this Nation sufficient to supply us with powder in time of war. We look to such manufacturers now, and when we do we find they do not want to go into the business which we denounced.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. In the particular case to which the Senator has referred, when we were interviewing one of the Government witnesses, it was developed that the powder manufacturer had, at the request of the Government only, kept his plant open in time of peace and took an annual loss of $300,000 a year, so that the Government would not be without a powder plant in case we got into war.

Mr. BYRNES. As I said in referring to the matter, I hold no brief for munitions manufacturers; but I know, as a Member of the House at the time the declaration of war was agreed to, in the presence of Members of the Senate who were then Members of the House, I felt just as did some others. I am not surprised that the Senator should say he was informed that men were in tears. That was true.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. What I said was that the Senator from Nebraska—and I think he made the statement upon the floor of the Senate when there was before us a bill for the purpose of providing for a referendum, and if I am mistaken, he will correct me, though I think I quote him correctly, or in substance, when I state that he said men voted for the war who did not want to vote for it, because the people back home were urging them to do so.

Mr. BYRNES. I would agree with that. So I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. WHEELER. I may have said——

Mr. BYRNES. British propaganda.

Mr. WHEELER. "British propaganda," but, of course, I had no reference to the Senator from South Carolina. I know him too well to do so, and I know the Senators to whom he has referred were not influenced by British propaganda; but I also know that there was British propaganda in this country at that time; and I think everybody recognized the fact that there was terrific propaganda here to get us into war. I differed with the Senator, for I did not feel that we should have gotten into the last war, but I respect the opinion of the man who thought we should, and he had as much right to his views as I had to mine.

Mr. BYRNES. I am glad the Senator's statement is not that they were prompted by British propaganda. If he said "prompted by the views of the people at home," again I will say that was true. Who cannot recall it? It was no munition manufacturers' propaganda. Who cannot recall the days of 1915–16, when vessel after vessel flying the American flag was sent to the bottom of the sea, and American men and women were sent to a watery grave? That is what caused the American people to demand a declaration of war.

Talk about Congress going to war. The people will make the Congress go to war whenever it goes. Only the people will do it. Congress will be the last to act. I thought more of my country and of the Congress in the trying days in 1917 than ever before or since; for men, regardless of party, rose to the best that was in them, and voted their honest convictions at 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning, as I recall the time that vote was taken. Tears were in the eyes of many men. Why should they not have been?

I have before me the record of some of the things that were recorded by the American Legion as having happened prior to our entrance into the war. When ship after ship was sunk, when our Government demanded respect for the United States of America, what respect was shown? We know there is propaganda on many issues, but Members of the Senate and House properly appraise it. We knew prior to our entrance into the World War that in our midst there was propaganda on the part of the German Government. We knew that Count von Bernstorff, right here in Washington, in the shadow of this Capitol, had a $50,000 slush fund to influence the actions of the United States Congress. I remember the day when the evidence was presented to the American people. Did that make the people of America feel good? No British propaganda was required to arouse the people. There was not a red-blooded American who could pick up a newspaper and read of Americans being slaughtered, and then read of the representative of a foreign government putting out a slush fund to influence the action of Congress, without feeling the deepest resentment and outrage. And then the Zimmermann note was found by our Intelligence people, disclosing an effort by Germany to induce our peaceful neighbor to the south of us, Mexico, to go to war with us, to take up arms against us at our back door, and to induce Japan to make war upon us.

Talk about British propaganda. Whose factories were sabotaged? We found machines wrecked and factories blown up, and we found the representatives of the German Government doing it. Was it propaganda? Germans were tried in the courts of the United States for these offenses. They were convicted, and many of them served sentences. They had a trial by an American jury, instead of a concentration camp or a death sentence, as they would have had in other countries.

I will say to the Senator from Montana that about 2 weeks before we entered the war, on one Sunday, in 158 churches in America resolutions were adopted and sent to the House of Representatives demanding that we enter the war. There was no British propaganda there. It came from the God-fearing Christian people of America. They stood up and said, "In the name of America, we demand of the Senate and House that they vote for war." Finally, Germany gave notice it would disregard all protests and engage in unrestricted submarine warfare upon our shipping. America went to war.

I only want to say that regardless of what propagandists may now say, when I voted for the declaration of war, I voted for it because I believed there was no other course for America. Under the same circumstances, I would vote the same way today.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, a few moments ago the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] expressed the hope that this subject might be postponed until the committees of the Senate, to which had been referred these nominations, might have an opportunity to report.

I should have been entirly content to acquiesce in that request of the Senator from Kentucky had he not himself proceeded to enter into a lengthy apology for the appointment of the two nominees whose names have been sent to the Senate, which was followed by the impassioned resentment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] as to any Senator who happened to disagree with his views; and now those addresses have been followed by the impassioned war address of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator's characterization of my remarks as an apology is entirely out of place. I would have said nothing about this matter if the Senator from Montana had not injected it in here, and I merely replied to him.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I say to the Senator from Kentucky that I heard the Senator say that the matter ought to be postponed, and he himself then proceeded to enter into a lengthy discussion of it. I merely am exercising my right, as a Senator, to express a very brief opinion.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did state that. I expressed the view that until the committees could bring in the nominations for consideration here the American people ought not to be prejudiced in advance against them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And then the Senator attempted to prejudice the American people in advance in behalf of the nominees.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I attempted to reply——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I heard the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I attempted to reply to what the Senator from Montana said. If the Senator from Missouri regards that as an apology, he has a right to regard it as he sees fit.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand that I have that right, and it is a right which I am now exercising.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no doubt the Senator will exercise his right.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Unquestionably.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. MALONEY. Did I correctly understand the Senator to say that he believed I scolded someone?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understood the Senator from Connecticut repeatedly to express his resentment against anybody who disagreed with the policy now in effect; at least, I so understood him.

Mr. MALONEY. The Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What was it the Senator said?

Mr. MALONEY. I said I resented any charge made that Wall Street was trying to inflame the country into war, and that I resented the insinuation made that the President was trying to put us into war. I certainly said nothing which would give the Senator reason to believe that I desired to scold anyone.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The whole burden of the Senator's remarks was to charge anybody who disagreed with this policy with disunity, with causing a disorganization of the national policy of the country. I am perfectly willing to stand on the Senator's remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MALONEY. On the basis of that I shall say no more, and respectfully suggest that the Senator read my remarks before he makes a suggestion of that kind.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I listened to them. I do not need to read them, but I will be glad to do so.

I do not desire to detain the Senate, and take the floor for a moment only for this reason—that as one Senator who intends to vote against the confirmation of Mr. Stimson and against the confirmation of Colonel Knox, I do not wish it to be understood that I am casting those votes either because I believe for a moment that either one of them has been in treasonable or semitreasonable correspondence with any foreign power, or subjected to any improper influence from any other power, or because I am objecting to their political views, or to the fact that both are ultrareactionaries in their politics. Neither or those is the case, as has been suggested in this debate. I do not for a moment believe that either Colonel Stimson or Colonel Knox would be guilty of being subjected to influence by any foreign government. Such a thing would be an act of treason. I have not the pleasure of Colonel Stimson's personal acquaintance. I have known of him, of course, as every other reasonably well-informed American citizen has, for a great many years. I have enjoyed the personal friendship of Colonel Knox since the first regular convention of the American Legion in Minneapolis in 1919 and I entertain for him a high regard and most cordial and friendly personal feelings.

Both of them have justly earned the high regard of the American people. Both of them are men of ability. Both of them are men of high character. I do not doubt the patriotism of either one of them, although I very violently disagree with some of their views. Each one of them has a right to his own opinion. But, Mr. President, I shall vote against their confirmation because they are both interventionists, not secretly, not clandestinely, but openly. The writings and speeches of both of them conclusively show that they favor a policy of American intervention. They are for war or for acts which amount to war and are certain to precipitate war.

For that reason I shall vote against their confirmation, not because they happen to be conservatives—they are both conservatives of the conservatives, of course—not because they are Republicans and I disagree very wholeheartedly with their political views, but because I do not see my way clear to vote to confirm in two very important offices at this time men whose decisions, day-by-day decisions, as the President said in his great speech at Chautauqua in 1936 before he had his change of heart, might tend to make up a situation which might lead the country into war.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] said a little while ago—and I would not even mention the question of partisan politics if he had not injected it into the discussion—that he regarded the Democratic Party as a great liberal party. So do I. That is the reason why I am a Democrat. I regard the Democratic Party traditionally as the great party of liberalism in this country; and whenever the Democratic Party ceases to be the great party of liberalism, the Democratic Party will go out of existence, and will deserve to go out of existence. My great-grandfather voted for Jefferson's electors in 1796. He was a private soldier in the Revolutionary Army. From that day to this there never has been a man by the name of Clark in my family who ever scratched a ticket. I will match my democracy with that of anybody in this body, in the White House, or anywhere else. When the Senator from Kentucky says the Democratic Party ought to be a great liberal party, I say, too, that it ought to be a great liberal party. It has traditionally been the great liberal party; but, Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky must know, and all men must know that war propaganda and war spirit and the totalitarian governmental powers which accompany war are the inevitable, the invincible, the unconquerable enemies of liberalism.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will yield in just a moment. War spirit, war propaganda, war effort, involving totalitarian governments, are naturally the very antithesis of liberalism, it is the enemy of liberal political views. We have to look back only to the last war to see that, when Woodrow Wilson, after a magnificent record of liberalism in his first administration, and after, I am convinced, every effort to keep the country out of war, finally took the country into war, a successful war, he destroyed the beneficial results of his first administration and sent the great liberal Democratic Party to wander in the wilderness of defeat for 12 long, weary, tragic years. The Democratic Party, which had in Wilson's first administration been the very embodiment of liberal legislation and reform measures, was repudiated at the polls by the people of the United States after we had become the war party during the very progress of the war, and 2 years later the Republican Party picked up a fourth-rate United States Senator and swept the country with him, a man who was so far from being a liberal that he brought into power with him the infamous "Ohio gang," which brought about the most infamous and shameful era of corruption in the whole history of the United States, and destroyed the liberalism of Wilson's first administration.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know whether the Senator read Mr. Stimson's speech——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I heard part of it.

Mr. WHEELER. The one which he made on yesterday, which was quoted in some of the papers.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He made the speech night before last.

Mr. WHEELER. In it he said he was in favor of our giving everything we could to the Allies, and if they did not have the ships to take the supplies to Europe, that we should furnish the ships and convoy them over there.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course, Mr. President, and that is admittedly an act of war, open intervention in the war.

Mr. WHEELER. I was going to say that has always been looked upon as an act of war and intervention in war. If I did not make it plain—I thought I did before—I have not anything against Mr. Stimson or Colonel Knox. I agree with the Senator that they are high-class, conservative, reactionary Republicans. But, even so, I am not holding that against them. The thing I have against them for these particular jobs at this particular time is their interventionist views. Of course, those who want intervention should support them. I am entitled to my views, and the people of this country who do not want intervention, I am sure, will not like the appointments. Everyone who wants intervention will want them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I would say to the Senator from Missouri that I am very glad he brought up the matter of propaganda. If I am not mistaken, the Senator from Missouri is the author of a resolution for an investigation of propaganda in this country which is now reposing in the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It has been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TOBEY. Fine!

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is now and has been for some months in the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. TOBEY. I hope it may come to the Senate floor.

As to propaganda, within 2 weeks there appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an article depicting British propaganda during the World War, wherein Lord Northcliffe admitted spending $150,000,000 in the United States on British propaganda.

I can recall when I was chairman of a committee on war activities in New England during the World War, before we entered the war, a telephone call came from New York, and Newel Dwight Hillis, then minister of Henry Ward Beecher's church in Brooklyn, came to New England and gave a series of addresses, and told stories. For instance, he told of a time when a youth of Belgium had had his body saturated with petrol and burned before the eyes of his mother to a cruel death. That proved to be a 100-percent falsehood, British propaganda in this country, to foment the people of the country against Germany.

Mr. HOLT. Can the Senator from Missouri tell me the name of the chairman of the committee who is holding up his resolution for the investigation of propaganda?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is well known. The Senator can find it in the Congressional Directory. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I did not rise to discuss propaganda, although I have very positive opinions on that subject, and much information about it; and at the proper time I shall discuss it at some length. I rose to say, in view of the issues injected into the discussion over the nominations of Colonel Knox and Colonel Stimson, that I agree wholeheartedly with what President Roosevelt said in his speech at Chautauqua as to the importance of the day-to-day decisions which possibly can lead us to a situation involving us in war.

Having that in mind, and having in mind the views of Colonel Stimson and Colonel Knox, frankly and openly expressed, in favor of intervention, I cannot regard their appointments in any other light than as the selection of members of a war Cabinet. I cannot cast my vote to put them in a position where they might make the day-to-day decisions which might create a situation involving us in war, apparently in consonance with the policy for which they have already expressed support. I cannot vote to put them in a position to carry into effect the theories which they have openly expressed.

Therefore, without any reflection on the patriotism, the ability, or the character of either Colonel Knox or Colonel Stimson, I shall cast my vote against their confirmation. I cannot and will not vote for the creation of a war Cabinet. I will not vote to make the Democratic Party a war party, and I will not follow the Democratic Party as a war party. I will not follow any man who seeks to lead this Nation into war except in defense of the United States.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. HOLT. All I desire to say now is that tomorrow or the day after I shall discuss what the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] said, and I hope he will be present. I did not want the RECORD to be closed without my making this statement this afternoon.

I can understand why he as chairman of the committee is holding up the resolution. He is the one to whom I was referring. I do not dodge. There has been in his committee for a long time a Senate resolution to appropriate $25,000, twenty-five thousand measly dollars, to investigate foreign propaganda in the United States to involve us in war. It is resting peacefully there at the pleasure of the Senator from South Carolina. If there is no foreign propaganda, why does he fear an investigation by the United States of that propaganda?

I shall not say more, except that he was the one referred to in Round Table the paper of British Lord Lothian, as canny, and able, and shrewd, speaking of the Senator from South Carolina. I agree with that decidedly; Lord Lothian has him right. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I wish to say that propaganda does not work on Senators directly. That is not the purpose of propaganda. Anyone who knows what propaganda is knows it is not to work directly on the Senate, but to work on the people back home so pressure can be put on the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives. That is the general purpose of propaganda.

The Senator spoke a moment ago about Count von Bernstorff's money being here, but he did not see any of Lord Northcliffe's money, which was exposed somewhat later.

If he is interested in foreign propaganda, and if there is none of it in this country, he can best prove his sincerity in exposing that by reporting to the United States Senate a resolution which would allow the Vice President of the United States to appoint a committee to investigate foreign propaganda, and which would appropriate only $25,000 therefor.

As to discussing it later, I shall do so tomorrow, with some records which I am sure the Senate will be very glad to hear and to read about.

TRANSPORTATION OF RED CROSS RELIEF SUPPLIES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 279.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 279) to amend section 4 of Public Resolution No. 54, approved November 4, 1939, entitled "Joint resolution to preserve the neutrality and the peace of the United States and to secure the safety of its citizens and their interests," which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign relations, with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "vessels" to insert "unarmed and not under convoy," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That section 4 of Public Resolution No. 54, approved November 4, 1939, entitled "Joint resolution to preserve the neutrality and the peace of the United States and to secure the safety of its citizens and their interests" be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. The provisions of section 2 (a) shall not prohibit the transportation by vessels, unarmed and not under convoy, under charter or other direction and control of the American Red Cross of officers and American Red Cross personnel, medical personnel, and medical supplies, food, and clothing, for the relief of human suffering."

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 5, after the word "suffering", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following provisos:

Provided, That where permission has not been given by the blockading power, no American Red Cross vessel shall enter a port where a blockade by aircraft, surface vessel, or submarine is being attempted through the destruction of vessels, or into a port of any country where such blockade of the whole country is being so attempted: Provided further, That such American Red Cross vessel shall be on a mission of mercy only and carrying only Red Cross materials and personnel.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, it was on my insistence day before yesterday that action on the joint resolution under discussion was held up. I think time has proved that the position I then took was correct, and that the joint resolution needed to be amended. I think the amendment that was presented vastly improved the joint resolution. I do not think it removed the danger entirely, however. I was very fearful that sending this ship into the war zone would provoke the incident which would result in bringing us into war. I think the Foreign Relations Committee has definitely improved the joint resolution.

I am not ashamed of the fact that I objected to consideration of it. I did so in the name of American boys; not because I did not favor sending Red Cross ships overseas, because I feel it is right to provide as much as we can in that way, since it is done by personal contributions, and the organization is one whose object is to do mercy.

I wanted that statement to appear in the RECORD at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 2, line 1.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 279) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARINE INSURANCE (S. DOC. NO. 246)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN in the chair) laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 20, 1940.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: There is a bill, S. 2566, now pending before the Committee of Commerce of the Senate, which I consider to be of such importance to the American merchant marine and to the national defense that its enactment at this session of Congress is highly desirable in the national public interest. An identical bill, H. R. 6572, is pending on the Union Calendar of the House of Representatives.

The bill (S. 2566) to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, to provide for marine war-risk insurance and reinsurance and for marine risk reinsurance, and for other purposes, would make emergency provision for Government insurance against marine and marine war-risks for American vessels, cargoes thereon, and crews thereof, when insurance protection cannot be supplied in the American insurance market on a basis adequate for the needs of such shipping. Marine insurance is an essential factor in our water-borne commerce. Under existing conditions such commerce may suddenly, by reason of the unavailability or undesirability of the world insurance market now resorted to, be unable to procure such protection on reasonable terms. The Government therefore must be in a position to supply the insurance protection necessary to keep American water-borne commerce moving in any such emergencies. I emphasize the need for prompt enactment of this legislation because the need therefor may become acute at any time, particularly in the cases of certain American vessels of such high value that the American insurance market is inadequate to cover the risks involved.

I believe you will agree with me that the prompt consideration and enactment of this measure is essential to the maintenance of our domestic and foreign commerce, and to our national economy. I will appreciate whatever steps you may deem it advisable to take in order to expedite the consideration of this measure by the Senate.

Sincerely,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

CREDIT RESOURCES OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3998) to increase the credit resources of Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. McNARY. Does the Senator want action on that bill today?

Mr. BYRNES. I will do whatever the Senator from Oregon wishes. If delay is desired, I shall not ask for action on the bill today.

Mr. McNARY. Why not let the bill remain the unfinished business, and let the Senate carry out its purpose to adjourn out of respect to the memory of our late colleague?

Mr. BYRNES. Very well. I ask that the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved March 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 107), as amended by the act of March 4, 1939 (53 Stat. 510), be amended as follows: In section 4 delete the figure "$900,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "$1,400,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3998) to increase the credit resources of Commodity Credit Corporation.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN in the chair), as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

CONSIDERATION OF CALENDAR TOMORROW

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] makes his motion, I wish to advise the Senate that tomorrow, as soon as the routine business of the morning hour shall have been concluded, I shall ask the Senate to consider bills on the calendar to which there is no objection. There are a number of bills on the calendar which should be considered before the week is over, and I think we shall have time to do that tomorrow.

DEATH OF SENATOR ERNEST W. GIBSON, OF VERMONT

Mr. AUSTIN. I send to the desk resolutions, for which I ask immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 283) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and deep regret the announcement of the death of Hon. ERNEST W GIBSON, late a Senator from the State of Vermont.

Resolved, That a committee of six Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Under the second resolution, the Presiding Officer appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], and the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator, I move that the Senate do now adjourn until 11 o'clock a. m., tomorrow.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, June 21, 1940, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JUNE 20, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

In this sacred stillness, Heavenly Father, come Thou to our waiting hearts and minds. We thank Thee for Thy changeless goodness, which is manifested toward us in countless ways. Bless us with a pardon of our sins, with consciences which are sensitive to all wrong, and with strength to carry forward every good resolution. Comfort the poor and the distressed of our land and open the hearts of the fortunate and lead them to alleviate human suffering wherever found. Keep us loyal to our fathers' God, loyal to our country, loyal to our homes, and loyal to ourselves. Impress us that there are no errors in Thy eternal scheme and that all things work together for the final good of man. As we lift our eyes unto the hills from whence cometh our strength, we pray that Thy loving providence may be over all and that every citizen of our country may lay his best gifts at the altar of our Republic. Widen the sweeps of peace, contentment, and cooperation, defeating doubt, subduing fear, and destroying hate. May the Spirit of the Master give wise guidance, peace, and good health to our Speaker, the Members, officers, and employees of the Congress. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 10039. An act to provide for the expenses of national preparedness by raising revenue and issuing bonds, to provide a method for paying for such bonds, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HARRISON, Mr. KING, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and Mr. CAPPER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE REVENUE BILL OF 1940

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10039) to provide for the expenses of national preparedness by raising revenue and issuing bonds, to provide a method for paying for such bonds, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand this is agreeable to the minority members of the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Absolutely. I would not say to the minority members, because I have not discussed it with anybody but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER], but, as far as I know, it is agreeable.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is agreeable to those gentlemen?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. DOUGHTON, CULLEN, MCCORMACK, COOPER, TREADWAY, CROWTHER, and KNUTSON.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, on Monday last, during the consideration of the Consent Calendar, there were two bills on the calendar, H. R. 9389 and H. R. 9705, both reported by the Committee on Public Lands. When the bill H. R. 9389 was reached on the calendar, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] asked the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON] a question in regard to the bill, wanting to know if it was approved by the Department. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON] said it was. He also said that the bill provided for the Government to utilize certain land, and he added that it enabled the Indians to sue in the Court of Claims. I had a copy of that bill in my hand, and there was an amendment to the bill as printed, but the so-called second amendment was not printed in the bill after the committee filed its report. In the report, however, there was a second amendment, which had reference to the right to sue in the Court of Claims, a subject over which the Committee on Public Lands has absolutely no jurisdiction. This amendment was, as I stated, not printed in the bill as presented to the House, but when the bill passed and was printed in the RECORD the next day, it contained the second amendment, which was printed in the report, with the notation it had been adopted by the House.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that we do not consider reports when we consider a bill. I feel that it is unfair to this House and those of us who have been trying to protect the Treasury against the jurisdictional bills depriving the Government of a proper defense, that that amendment should have been adopted by the House when it was not printed in the bill. I desire to know if it would not be a fair request to ask the Senate to return that bill so that proper consideration can be given to it, the second amendment, which, to say the least, was subject to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The recollection of the Chair is that the amendment to which the gentleman refers was offered from the floor as a committee amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. It was a committee amendment, as shown by the report, but the second amendment was not printed in the bill.

The SPEAKER. It was offered from the floor when the bill was under consideration, however.

Mr. COCHRAN. It was not offered from the floor, according to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The usual manner of handling bills on the Consent Calendar, as the Speaker knows, is for the occupant of the chair to simply say, "Without objection, the committee amendment will be agreed to, and so forth."

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recall the details in connection with the consideration of all these bills. The recollection of the Chair is that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] was temporarily occupying the chair.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WARREN. I happened to be occupying the chair at that time, and I remember distinctly that the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON] stated the facts in connection with it and offered it as a committee amendment from the floor.

Mr. COCHRAN. The RECORD does not so show.

Mr. WARREN. I do not know what the RECORD shows, but that is what happened.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I want to state that that is exactly what happened.

Mr. COCHRAN. Did the gentleman offer the amendment from the floor?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. The RECORD does not show that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I also stated at that time that there had been a mistake made in not printing the amendment in the bill, but that another print had been requested and that I thought that print of the bill was here so it would be available.

Mr. COCHRAN. That puts the matter in a different light but the fact is the RECORD does not show the gentleman offered the amendment from the floor, nor does it state in the RECORD that the bill was not properly printed and that another print was available.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to withdraw his parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. COCHRAN. In view of what the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] have said, I agree that it was properly handled, but it is not properly shown in the RECORD, and I withdraw my parliamentary inquiry. Of course, I would not question what my good friends say happened. There were two errors, however, one in the failure to include the amendment in the reported bill and the second the failure of the Official Reporter to properly include in the RECORD that which actually transpired during the proceedings of the House.

Mr. Speaker, since making the remarks this morning concerning the proceedings of the House Monday the Official Reporter has found his notes which confirm the statements of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], who was occupying the chair, and the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON]. What actually transpired aside from what appeared in the RECORD was:

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker I offer a committee amendment.

* * * * * * *

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker this amendment is set forth in the report but was inadvertently left out of the bill. I ask that it be included in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the further reading of the committee amendment will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. Speaker, arrangements have been made to include what did transpire in the permanent RECORD.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAY asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

CONGRESSIONAL CONFERENCE ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, the strength of any nation is in the industry of its people. The foundation of national defense in our Nation is in keeping our people, resources, and productive plant at work. If America speedily solves her unemployment problem there is no question we can make our country impregnable.

For some months a number of us have been studying the unemployment problem. Our final report and program is ready and I have asked for this time in order to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD today and thus to present to the House and to the country the final report and program of the Congressional Conference on Unemployment. I hope all Members will take the trouble to read that report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELIZALDE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a telegram with respect to bituminous coal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter received from Elder E. M. Evans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the completion of the legislative program for the day I may be permitted to address the House for 12 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a telegram from one of my constituents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, particularly the gentleman to my right, I received a wire the other day from one of my constituents asking me to make sure that we do not become involved in foreign entanglements, and for the sake of the majority leader, I wish he would pay particular attention to what I have to say for the simple reason that he said the other day that if there was anything to be done to keep us out of war, he knew men on both sides of the aisle would be willing to do it. One of my constituents happened to visit me last week and sat in the gallery and I pointed out the distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Texas, and I said to him that the distinguished majority leader wanted to do precisely the same thing that you do—keep us out of war—and he said, "I know that he will do that because he looks like you—he has no hair."

I want to say that was a great compliment coming from my constituent in making comparable my looks and my hair with that of the gentleman from Texas, SAM RAYBURN. [Laughter.]

THE LATE SENATOR GIBSON

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances I ask unanimous consent that the 1-minute rule be relaxed with reference to the gentleman from Vermont. We know what he is going to speak about.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont has informed the Chair that he desires to announce the death of Senator GIBSON. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I regret to announce the death this morning of Senator GIBSON, the junior Senator from Vermont and a former long-time member of the House. The people of Vermont have lost a true friend of great heart; the State of Vermont has lost an eminent son whose lifetime of distinguished service brought honor to it; the Nation has lost an unusually able but unselfish public servant whose career as lawyer, soldier, and statesman was ever devoted to the welfare of his country.

For me his death marks the end of a lifetime friendship which had grown stronger with the passage of time.

I have just come from the Senate Chamber where so often we have met, but today—

> Well I know he waits not as of old—
> I could not find him in the oldtime place—
> I must pursue him, made by sorrow bold,
> Through worlds unknown, in strange celestial race
> Whose mystic round no traveler has told,
> From star to star, until I see his face.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLUMLEY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I speak for the entire Democratic membership of the House, and especially for those Members who served with ERNEST GIBSON, in saying that we have learned with the most profound regret of his untimely passing away.

He came to the House shortly after I did. We served together on the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation. He was a member of our veterans' block. He was a veteran of both the World War and the Spanish-American War. I knew him as intimately, perhaps, as did any other Member who now occupies a seat in this body, and I can truthfully say that I have never met with any man in this service for whom I had a higher regard or in whose integrity I had more implicit confidence. He was a statesman, conscious of his responsibility, who always believed in doing, and had the courage to do, what he thought was right. He was a patriot of the first order. He was a Christian without hypocrisy; he was a man without guile.

William Jennings Bryan, perhaps, the greatest Christian leader of modern times, expressed my sentiments more thoroughly than I could myself, and especially with reference to this distinguished friend, when he said:

> If the Master deigns to touch with divine power the cold and pulseless heart of the buried acorn, causing it to burst forth into a new life, will He leave neglected in the earth the soul of man made in the image of his Creator? If He stoops to give to the rose bush whose withered blossoms float upon the autumn breeze the sweet assurance of another springtime, will He refuse the words of hope to the sons of men when the frosts of winter come? If matter mute and inanimate, though changed by the forces of nature into a multitude of forms, can never die, will the imperial spirit of man alone suffer annihilation after it has paid a brief visit, like a royal guest, to this tenement of clay? No; I am as sure that there is another life as I am that I live today.

Some time ago, while in Cairo—

Said the Great Commoner—

I was shown a few grains of wheat that had slumbered for more than 3,000 years in an Egyptian tomb. As I looked upon those grains of wheat this thought came into my mind: If one of them had been planted on the banks of the Nile the next year after it was grown and all its lineal descendants had been harvested and planted from that day to this, its progeny would be sufficiently numerous to feed the teeming millions of this world. There is an unbroken chain of life which connects the earliest grain with the one which we now sow and reap. If there is an invisible something in a grain of wheat which enables it, when warmed by the sunshine and nurtured by the rain, to discard its old body and build out of earth and air a new one so much like the old that we cannot tell the one from the other and transmits its own likeness through 3,000 generations, I need not fear that my soul will have the power to clothe itself with a new body suited to another existence when this earthly frame has crumbled into dust.

SIDNEY HILLMAN

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I notice in the press this morning that Mr. Sidney Hillman has been named Advisory Defense Commissioner. The news disturbs me greatly. I favor national defense. I want a defense adequate to cope with the combined armed forces of the world, but, Mr. Speaker, God alone can save this Republic with the youth of the country put under the training of Sidney Hillman.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Washington Post of this morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I rise to announce to the House that I am introducing today another resolution of inquiry regarding conditions in the war zones. I think that the Foreign Affairs Committee should be given the very best information in order that the committee, which has to do with the conduct of our international affairs, may be very fully advised as to what is going on. I accuse the administration, and I accuse and I accuse again, as I have done frequently on the floor, of keeping from the Foreign Affairs Committee information vital to us, vital if we are to legislate properly to safeguard the people of this country. We do not have many hearings, and when we do we are given no important information, no one in authority comes to speak to us, and I have brought this to the attention of the committee and of the House continuously. The House turned down my resolution which asked and demanded that vital information from the President and the Secretary of State. Mr. Speaker, if the House does not act favorably on this resolution, I shall tell the House that it is the Members' own fault that they do not know what is going on, and they cannot go back to their constituents and say, "We have safeguarded you; we have kept informed." That is our sacred trust, Mr. Speaker.

My resolution, in effect, requests the President of the United States, if not incompatible with the public interests, to transmit to this House, for the information of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the essential substance of reports and communications received by him or by the Department of State, from diplomatic sources or otherwise, concerning conditions in war zones in foreign countries.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

HARRY BRIDGES

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. LELAND M. FORD addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain tables referred to about agriculture, some of which refer to counties in my own congressional district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include short articles on Oregon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein an address by Senator BURTON K. WHEELER on international and domestic problems, made in Minneapolis last Monday night by Senator WHEELER.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include a quotation from the Washington Times-Herald and a letter that I have received.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONDITION OF THE TREASURY

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I accuse this administration because of the fact we are $3,640,000,000 in the red, according to the statement made by Mr. Morganthau on the 15th of this month, or at the rate of $8,000 a minute in the red for this whole year, and I accuse this administration for the next year of being a still greater spender to the extent of $15,000,000,000. We will take in six and a half billion dollars, and be, therefore, eight and a half billion dollars short, which will be in the red at the rate of $17,000 a minute for all next year. It is terrible. Where are you going to get the money? Mr. Speaker, I am so blue today, I am just so blue I do not know what to do. [Laughter and applause.]

TRANSFER OF NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. KEEFE addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, President Roosevelt's proposal to now force upon our Nation compulsory military training and labor armies is so outrageous as to defy all description. With a brutal frankness he now tells our people he intends to make this Nation completely into a totalitarian state, that we must go the way of Mussolini, Hitler, and Stalin.

The course of complete regimentation he is now attempting to force upon us is identical with that pursued by them.

The primary purpose back of this move is not national defense—let us not be deceived in this. Roosevelt's real purpose in setting up compulsory military training and labor armies is to put the unemployed to some kind of work. Mussolini, Hitler, and Stalin promised their peoples jobs and the more abundant life in order to get themselves in power. After they got themselves in power they knew of no other way to make their promises good except to force their unemployed to work—with bayonets and bullets.

Roosevelt now finds himself in exactly the same position. He has failed to make his promise good to solve the unemployment problem in the democratic way. He sees no other way out of his difficulty but to follow the course of the European dictators, so he grabs the hammer and sickle, with which he hopes to make one final, fell swoop upon what is left of democracy in America and put a complete end to it.

Mr. Roosevelt reveals his hand still further when he designates Harry Hopkins and Sidney Hillman as the master minds to head and perfect his totalitarian scheme of regimentation. I regard Harry Hopkins as a perfect tool to carry out this communistic scheme. It is well known that he has been an ardent supporter of the socialistic plans put in operation in the last few years to destroy private industry. I believe it is a matter of record that Sidney Hillman has been definitely associated with the socialistic movement. Socialism is the same thing as communism. It is merely the first stage of communism.

Fathers and mothers of America, is this the heritage you want to leave to your sons, your daughters, your posterity? I cannot believe it. But one thing appears to me certain, unless this move to force compulsory military training and labor armies upon our Nation is sufficient to warn you of the imminent danger of our Nation becoming a totalitarian state, nothing can save us. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a telegram from the Rhode Island Textile Association urging that Congress remain in session during the present emergency.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein an article by Gifford Pinchot.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware, Mr. VAN ZANDT, and Mr. MAGNUSON were granted permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a statement I made before the Committee on Reciprocity.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and also to extend my remarks and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker and Members, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] showed a paper yesterday recording the death of Abraham Lincoln and predicting dire results to the Republican Party under certain circumstances. I want to show an old document, a copy of the Republican platform distributed to the delegates May 17, 1860, of the Wigwam Convention that nominated Abraham Lincoln first.

We are building the framework in Philadelphia today of another platform. Let me read from the first and the sixth paragraphs, and there are only seventeen:

That the history of the Nation during the last 4 years has fully established the propriety and necessity of the organization and perpetuation of the Republican Party, and that the causes which called it into existence are permanent in their nature, and now, more than ever before, demand its peaceful and constitutional triumph.

And how prophetic the beginning of the sixth paragraph:

That the people justly view with alarm the reckless extravagance which pervades every department of the Federal Government; that a return to rigid economy and accountability is indispensable to arrest the systematic plunder of the Public Treasury.

Let me say to my friend from North Dakota, whoever is nominated at Philadelphia next week will have the support of at least 90 percent of the Republican Party and 25 percent of the old Democrat Party and will be elected in November. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a telegram I had the pleasure of receiving this morning from Mr. A. C. Dorman, a very able and outstanding citizen in my district, which shows very adequately the sentiment of the people of my district.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks, and include an editorial from the Des Moines Register and also a petition from a group of poets.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE SUGAR ACT OF 1937

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution No. 515.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 515

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 9654, a bill to extend, for an additional year, the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937 and the taxes with respect to sugar, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read. No amendments shall be in order to said bill except amendments proposing the extension of any of the provisions of section 207 of the Sugar Act of 1937 and such amendments shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

At this time I yield myself 15 minutes. I ask that the Chair be kind enough to notify me when I have consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this rule provides for bringing before the House the so-called Cummings bill (H. R. 9654) to extend for 1 year the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937.

This bill will extend all portions of the Sugar Act of 1937 which are now in force. I hasten, however, to explain that by the terms of the Sugar Act of 1937, section 207, subsections (a) and (b), which put limitations on the importation of direct-consumption sugar—that is to say, refined sugar—from Hawaii and from Puerto Rico, expired, by the express terms of the act, on February 29, 1940. So now, and since February 29 of this year, there have been no limitations upon the importations of refined sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

I should add also that at a recent press conference—on last Friday, June 14, 1940, as I recall—the President is reported to have said that he and the Department of Agriculture and the Department of State hoped that the Cummings bill, H. R. 9654, would be passed exactly as reported by the Committee on Agriculture of this House. Furthermore, in a letter dated April 11, 1940, addressed to the gentleman from Texas, the Honorable MARVIN JONES, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House, the President stressed the inequity, as he saw it, of putting any limitation upon importations of refined sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico. In this letter of the President to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]—which, by the way, was printed in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 2659—the President said, among other things:

The people of the Territory of Hawaii and the possessions of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands are American citizens who compose some of those minority groups in our population with local governments that lack the protection of statehood.

If this circumstance were not given adequate consideration, it would be possible to destroy by legislation the livelihood of our citizens in the insular parts of the United States through the enactment of discriminatory prohibitions against their products; and they would possess no legal power to take counter measures in self-defense. Such a course of action, as I have pointed out on a previous occasion, would be tantamount to an imperialistic classification of citizens and a tyrannical abuse of minority rights that is utterly contrary to the American concept of fairness and democracy. Among the cases in point is the proposal to reinstate the former discrimination against the refining of sugar in the insular parts of the United States.

On the other hand, Representatives from New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Massachusetts appeared before the Committee on Rules when application was made for a rule for consideration of the Cummings bill, and insisted that the refining industries in the Atlantic seaboard cities were being ruined by unrestricted importations of refined sugar from Puerto Rico since March 1 of this year and that thousands of their well-paid American employees were being thrown out of work. These Congressmen insisted that the quotas in force up to March 1, 1940, upon the importations of refined sugar from Puerto Rico and Hawaii, particularly from Puerto Rico, should be restored, and to that end they asked that the Committee on Rules provide in the rule for consideration of H. R. 9654 for permission to offer an amendment restoring the restrictions on importations of refined sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico. I am informed that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] will offer such an amendment. What action should be taken on the McCormack amendment is a question for the House of Representatives to determine. In due course that amendment will be brought up for consideration in the House this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I should like to point out how extremely important, yes, how vital, is the passage of this bill to the beet-sugar-producing areas in the United States. There are 17 States in continental United States which produce beet sugar. It is not often that I ask the indulgence of the House; but on this matter, so vitally important to 17 States and particularly to the State of Colorado, I do ask your indulgence to hear me briefly.

The important provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937, so far as beet sugar is concerned, expire at the end of this present calendar year unless this bill is passed. Those of us who have gone into the question at all are convinced that it would be impossible for the Seventy-seventh Congress to enact legislation until at least 3 or 4 months of its first session, which will begin next January, shall have gone by. Under such circumstances it is clear that virtually the entire 1941 crop of beets would have to be planted without the growers knowing what returns they might expect from their crops or under what conditions the sugar manufactured from their beets would be marketed. That situation is one from which nothing but confusion could be expected. It would react with a tremendously depressing effect on a vital segment of western agriculture.

A few days ago, the members of the Colorado delegation, namely, EDWARD T. TAYLOR, FRED CUMMINGS, and I, sent to a number of Members of the House letters, dated June 15, 1940, signed by us, in which we set forth some of the important features of the beet-sugar industry. In the course of those letters we said—and I quote:

There are 70,000 sugar-beet growers in 17 States, and the production of beets requires the employment of 100,000 field workers annually. Ninety-four beet-sugar factories give employment to about 10,000 men (no women or children are employed) on an annual average throughout every year. In addition, there are thousands of men in coal mines and limestone quarries whose employment is directly dependent in large part on this industry. In 1939 every acre of beets grown in the United States resulted in $32 of revenue for the railroads. Moreover, there are many hundreds engaged in the fattening of cattle and sheep on beet pulp—and many hundreds more in stockyards and packing plants whose continued employment is dependent upon the passage of this bill. An instance of the importance of these feeding activities is the fact that the byproducts of 13 of the 18 beet-sugar factories in Colorado are used to feed 22 percent of all the lambs and 11 percent of all cattle dry-lot fed in the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado has consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I thank the Speaker for notifying me.

Mr. Speaker, in the State of Colorado the beet-sugar industry with its ramifications is a fundamental industry of our State. We are best known, I know, for our production of gold and silver. It is true that the discovery of gold is what made possible the original settlement of Colorado. I do not wish to minimize the present importance of our precious-metal mines. But the annual income derived from the beet-sugar industry, with all its ramifications and its subsidiary industries, is now more important to our State each year than the gold- and silver-mining industry, not only in value of product but also in employment provided.

The total pay roll of the entire beet-sugar industry throughout the United States in 1938 was $16,951,500; in 1939 it was $17,350,000. Under normal conditions Colorado beet-sugar factories and the offices of these factories employ during the operating season 5,720 men; no women or children are employed. The factory and office pay rolls for 1 normal year in Colorado are, in round numbers, $4,265,000. The production of sugar beets furnishes throughout the country opportunity for employment of approximately 100,000 field workers whose wages average $21 for each acre of beets. On a daily basis, their wages are the highest paid in any branch of the sugar industry, if not indeed the highest paid to any group of agricultural workers. The employment which the beet-sugar industry creates in related industries is almost impossible to calculate. But it is not to be questioned that thousands engaged in transportation, in mining, and in quarrying limestone owe their employment directly to the beet-sugar industry. The production of cotton in our Southern States and the fabrication of cotton bags and filter cloth require the services of many others. Upon the beet pulp and other byproducts of the beet-sugar industry is dependent the great cattle- and lamb-feeding industry in Western States. The beet-sugar industry is responsible for the fact that in Denver is the greatest lamb and sheep market in the United States.

The beet-sugar industry in 1938 paid a total freight bill of $21,580,000; and in 1939 the total freight bill was $27,069,000. This amounted to approximately $15.95 for every ton of beet sugar marketed in 1938 and $16.05 for every ton distributed last year.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on and on and fill the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with figures and statistics on this subject.

I think I have given enough to show how infinitely important this beet-sugar industry is to Colorado and to 16 other States. A few minutes ago I spoke of the 94 beet-sugar factories in the 17 States in which sugar beets are grown. Of these 94 factories, there are 10 factories in California, 18 factories in Colorado, 9 factories in Idaho, 1 factory in Indiana, 1 factory in Iowa, 1 factory in Kansas, 16 factories in Michigan, 2 factories in Minnesota, 5 factories in Montana, 7 factories in Nebraska, 5 factories in Ohio, 1 factory in Oregon, 1 factory in South Dakota, 8 factories in Utah, 2 factories in Washington, 2 factories in Wisconsin, and 5 factories in Wyoming, making a total of 94 factories in the 17 States.

The location of each of these factories is as follows:

LOCATION OF BEET SUGAR FACTORIES

NINETY-FOUR FACTORIES IN 17 STATES

California (10 factories): Alvarado, Betteravia, Clarksburg, Dyer, Hamilton City, Manteca, Oxnard, Spreckles, Tracy, Woodland.

Colorado (18 factories): Brighton, Brush, Delta, Eaton, Fort Collins, Fort Lupton, Fort Morgan, Grand Junction, Greeley, Johnstown, Longmont, Loveland, Ovid, Rocky Ford, Sterling, Sugar City, Swink, Windsor.

Idaho (9 factories): Blackfoot, Burley, Idaho Falls, Preston, Rigby, Rupert, Shelley, Sugar City, Twin Falls.

Indiana (1 factory): Decatur.

Iowa (1 factory): Mason City.

Kansas (1 factory): Garden City.

Michigan (16 factories): Alma, Bay City (2), Blissfield, Caro, Carrollton, Croswell, Holland, Lansing, Menominee, Mount Clemens, Mount Pleasant, Owosso, St. Louis, Sebewaing, West Bay City.

Minnesota (2 factories): Chaska, East Grand Forks.

Montana (5 factories): Billings, Chinook, Hardin, Missoula, Sidney.

Nebraska (7 factories): Bayard, Gering, Grand Island, Lyman, Minatare, Mitchell, Scottsbluff.

Ohio (5 factories): Findlay, Fremont, Ottawa, Paulding, Toledo.

Oregon (1 factory): Nyssa.

South Dakota (1 factory): Belle Fourche.

Utah (8 factories): Brigham City, Centerfield, Garland, Layton, Lewiston, Ogden, Spanish Fork, West Jordan.

Washington (2 factories): Bellingham, Toppenish.

Wisconsin (2 factories): Green Bay, Janesville.

Wyoming (5 factories): Lovell, Sheridan, Torrington, Wheatland, Worland.

Total beet-sugar factories, 94 in 17 States.

Mr. Speaker, without exaggerating, and with all the earnestness of my soul, I say to the Members of this House that if, for any reason, the Congress fails to extend this Sugar Act at this session, such failure will be a crushing blow to 17 States of this Union. Thousands of men—yes; tens of thousands of men—will feel the impact of this failure to continue the Sugar Act in effect. Thousands will be unemployed. The relief rolls will be increased. Business depression will ensue. An invading army in Colorado could not do greater damage or create greater havoc and misery than would the prostration of the beet-sugar industry in our State.

With all the earnestness and solemnity at my command, I entreat you to consider well what I have just told you. When the vote comes on this bill, bear in mind what dire disaster the failure to enact this bill would bring to 17 States of the Union, and especially to our State of Colorado.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Colorado has given a very fair explanation of what this bill is about. The rule makes in order that bill. The gentleman has just advised us that this bill as reported by the Agriculture Committee, and the one made in order by the pending rule—has the approval of the administration and that the President will sign the bill "as is."

There are two groups in this country who are primarily interested in the refining and production of sugar. The present bill continues the existing law exactly as it now is for 1 year. This law will expire on the 31st day of December 1940; therefore this is an emergency measure so far as beet-sugar production in this country is concerned.

The only opposition I know of comes from the refiners, who are confined largely to the seaboard States. I believe New Jersey and New York have the most of them. There are one or two minor refiners in California. Those factories refine raw sugar that comes to this country from offshore territory. In other words, they are primarily interested in refining raw sugar not produced in the United States. The more raw sugar that can be brought into the country the more work the refiners will have. The more sugar that is brought into the country the less sugar can be produced in continental United States.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. Does the gentleman think it is right to continue the limitations and the quotas on refined sugar coming from Hawaii and Puerto Rico and as a result practically destroy the refineries that we have built in New York?

Mr. MICHENER. My position is that this bill is not perfect. We know there has to be a general revision of the sugar law. I think everyone familiar with the situation accepts that as fact. We do know that the present law expires in this coming December; therefore, anything we do now at best will be but a stopgap. I am in favor of that, and I am in favor of going along with the bill as reported by the committee for one reason, if for no other, that the President, as we understand it, will sign this bill, and he will not sign the bill if amended.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. No. I do not have the time.

Mr. CELLER. Just for one question?

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman is irresistible. Make it short.

Mr. CELLER. The President stated he wishes quotas with reference to refined sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico continued, but the bill does not do that.

Mr. MICHENER. I am not arguing with the gentleman. I have no access to the President. I have not talked with him. Possibly the gentleman from New York, who is one of his close advisers, does know what he will do. I know what the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS] just stated, and if what he stated is true, then I am correct, but I am not going to argue with the gentleman. I am not familiar with all the details of this bill. I am a member of the Rules Committee. The bill will be thoroughly discussed by members of the Agricultural Committee, who reported the bill, and those gentlemen know all about its intricacies. In short, the bill extends for an additional year the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937. Under existing law the quota provisions and the conditional payment provisions expire on December 31, 1940. That is, no quota provisions will be in effect in or benefit payments be made for 1941 unless these provisions are extended. Section 1 of the bill makes these provisions expire 1 year later, December 31, 1941. As under present law, after 1941, the bill permits the Secretary of Agriculture to make accrued payments for the crop years 1941 and previous years. The bill does not continue the limitations on refined sugar coming from Hawaii or Puerto Rico. These provisions expired on March 1 of this year, and the bill does not revive them. The other limitations of the present law on refined sugar and liquid sugar importations are continued.

The bill also continues the taxes on the manufacture and importation of sugar. These taxes expire on June 30, 1941. Section 2 of the bill extends the taxes for 1 year so that they will expire on June 30, 1942.

The Sugar Act, section 503, authorizes the appropriation of amounts equal to the taxes on sugar coming from and sugarcane grown in the Philippines to be paid to the Philippines for financing a program of economic adjustment there. Under present law no payment may be made with respect to manufacture or importation of sugar and cane after June 30, 1941. Section 3 of the bill extends this date to June 30, 1942.

This rule does not throw the entire bill open to amendment. It only throws section 207 of the Sugar Act open to amendment, so if you have any amendments to other parts of the bill, save your breath, do not offer them, because they will be out of order.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the gentleman think a rule of this kind that prevents amendments to other parts of the Sugar Act is one that is fair to the membership of this House?

Mr. MICHENER. You know sometimes you have to accept things when the President has indicated what he will sign and what he will not sign. An emergency stares the beet-sugar industry in the face. I am one of those Members who will sacrifice things I might hope for in order to get the best I can. It seems to me that it would be foolish to vote for a bill that suited me if I knew that the bill could not become law. Here is a question of getting the best you can.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman feel that this House ought to do its own legislating?

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman always does his own thinking, and his conclusions are always worthy of consideration. Let us pass this rule as well as the amendment prepared by the Committee on Agriculture and stop there.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] will in due course offer an amendment to the pending bill to restore the limitations upon Hawaiian and Puerto Rican refined sugar. My sincere judgment is that this amendment should be supported by every Member of the House who is from a State producing sugar beets or sugarcane.

It is obvious that a flood of refined sugar made by cheap labor in the tropical islands will not benefit the sugar farmers of this country. The fact is that rapid expansion of the refining in Puerto Rico will bring with it a disruption in the marketing conditions affecting sugars of all kinds. This adverse price on American sugar will be particularly noticeable on the eastern coastal area from New England down the Atlantic coast to the Gulf ports. The American producers of cane and beet sugar are primarily interested in receiving a fair price for their product. Their Representatives here in this House should remember that the price the American producer receives for his sugar is determined by the price which prevails for refined sugar in the seaboard cities of the Nation.

During recent years the beet-sugar industry has sent thousands of bags of sugar from the Western States for marketing along the Atlantic seacoast. He who runs may read that a flood of Puerto Rican refined sugar will ruin the markets for continental sugar producers. This fact standing alone should invoke enthusiastic support for the McCormack amendment later to be presented.

However, there is a second and equally important reason why the Representatives of the sugar States should support the McCormack amendment and this reason applies particularly to the gentlemen on the Republican side of the aisle. It is impossible to conceive of a permanent protectice system for sugar such as was shown in the Sugar Act of 1937 unless that system provides a protection for the American workmen and American investment at the same time that provision is made for the American farmer. Over one-half of the people of this country live in States which refine cane sugar. These great populous areas insist that their sugar-refining workmen and great investments in this field be duly considered in legislation. Raw-sugar quotas have been properly enacted by Congress for the purpose of protecting American farmers. Hand in hand with them has gone refined-sugar quotas for the purpose of protecting American workmen. In all justice an equitable balance must be maintained or protective sugar legislation of all kinds will be thrown to the winds.

I desire to call as witnesses to the justice and necessity of the McCormack amendment several congressional experts in the national sugar-producing field. I first call my good friend the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS] the author of this bill. In 1937 when this same subject was under discussion my friend supported the reasonable demands of the refinery workmen when he said:

> The only brief that I have for the refiners is not for the refiners as such but I think that any good American citizen has a brief for every man who has a job in the United States (p. 8308, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD).

I call as another witness the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] an expert in this field and one of the ablest Republicans in the House. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] said in 1937, referring to an amendment to the Sugar Act to strike out quotas on refined sugar:

> We will be asked, through legislation, to declare a death sentence upon the investments made in this country; we will be asked to destroy plants that exist in this country; we will be asked to throw out of employment American citizens living here who now have jobs. That is a discrimination against American citizens living in continental United States.

I call as a further witness my colleague the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE]. He said at the time that this matter was under discussion in 1937.

> I prefer to leave those sections in the bill, because they affect men working in factories. These are our own people. They are spending their own hard-earned money, buying our own farm products, articles of food that we have to sell. I believe in protecting them.

So, from every neck of the woods in continental America and from both sides of the aisle came the demand that protection should be given at the one and same time to the cane- and beet-sugar industry and to the workmen and those with investments in refined sugar. I say this with all sincerity, and I am fully convinced that I am speaking not only for the sugar-refining East but for the interest of the beet and cane producer. In doing so I am merely echoing the basic sentiments of the gentlemen who are today proponents of this bill.

In conclusion I urge that, in all fairness to American workers and American investment, the McCormack amendment hereafter to be offered be adopted by the House. [Applause.]

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SACKS. The statement was made a while ago that if this bill contained the McCormack amendment the President would veto it. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the same argument was presented the last time we had the bill up for consideration, and the President signed the bill.

Mr. CULKIN. I do not believe the President, whether or not he runs—and that is in the lap of the gods—will veto this bill. He did not do it before and he will not do it now. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein certain tables prepared by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Hawaii?

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, the sugar issue is always one of great controversy and a good deal of misunderstanding. There are not so many people in the House who have the background of this legislation. I want to point out that the restrictions on the refining process in Hawaii and in Puerto Rico did not exist prior to 1934. Before then any domestic producer of sugar could increase or expand his production and market it as raw or as refined sugar as he pleased, but in 1934 we adopted a quota system which set up quota restrictions on different producing areas. Domestic producers had quotas and foreign producers had quotas. Then superimposed upon that there was this emergency restriction on refined sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico. We have objected to that, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of principle.

In 1937, when the Sugar Act of that year was enacted, the President, three Cabinet officers, and many Members of this House and of the other body also objected to that restriction as wrong in principle. It was practically admitted on the floor of this House by many speakers that it was a matter of expediency and not a matter of material interest, and not defensible as a matter of principle.

However, the President did sign the 1937 act, but he signed it with great regret and on assurances that had been given him by the spokesmen of the domestic sugar industry that such a limitation would not again be put in legislation controlling the sugar industry.

I want to say to those who are interested in the domestic sugar industry that the refining group—and I make no criticism of those who speak for them here who really speak for the employees. Nobody speaks for the refining group as such. We all know that it is the Sugar Trust—the Sugar Trust that was haled before a court on many occasions. Those who fight their battles on the floor here speak for the men who are employed by the refiners.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I am sorry, I do not have time to yield. This is a matter of most vital interest to the people of Hawaii. I must use all the time I can in my effort to put my case before the Members of this House.

I want to say that the refining group, to show their inconsistency, come before the Congress and say, "If we cannot have restrictions on refining in Hawaii and Puerto Rico, we do not want a sugar bill at all." In other words, they make the whole issue of the welfare of the domestic industry depend upon this provision, when, as a matter of actual fact, they do not get more than 300,000 tons of raw sugar from Hawaii in any one year, and we are to continue to supply that sugar under an agreement with the Hawaiian industry. But the gentlemen who are going to speak in behalf of the refineries, especially the one at Edgewater, would capitalize a labor argument when there would be no displacement of labor insofar as refined sugar from Hawaii is concerned.

I want to say further that under existing law, under the quota system, the refining industry is the beneficiary of four different elements of protection; but, not satisfied with this help, it insists that that degree of protection shall be extended to bar the importation of refined sugar from Hawaii.

You speak of off-shore areas. If the area is under the American flag, it is a part of the United States. You speak of tropical sugar from tropical countries, but if a tropical country flies the American flag, what difference does it make whether it is a tropical, temperate, or frigid zone country.

This law would place upon the production of sugar in Hawaii a double burden: first, a quota system, and then another limitation, because the provision is that there may be refined only about 3 percent of that quota for shipment to the United States. The trade between Hawaii and the rest of the United States is interstate commerce. It is a part of our system of government, which, under the Constitution, guarantees to all Americans equal privileges and contemplates the free exchange of goods and services between the different parts of the United States.

Under existing law there are four degrees of protection for the refining interests:

First, limitation on imports of Cuban-refined—direct consumption—sugar to 375,000 tons.

If the refiners fail in their objective of having the McCormack amendment adopted they will defeat the law and there will be no restrictions on refined sugar from Cuba, which then can send 500,000 tons of sugar or more into this country.

Second is a limitation on the expansion of the beet-sugar and domestic-cane industry. If this law is killed the beet- and cane-sugar industry of the United States will not be held down to present existing quotas.

Third, there is an embargo on imports of liquid sugar from all countries in the world except Cuba and Santo Domingo and restrictive quotas on those two countries.

This sugar enters into competition with direct-consumption sugar, and there again, if this continuing resolution is defeated, the refiners will be subject to that competition.

There is also a fourth protection which is the limitation on refined sugar from other foreign countries now held to a minimum quota. If the Cummings bill is defeated there will be no limitation on foreign sugar, so long as they can beat the hurdle of the tariff.

This shows the inconsistency of the position of the refiners.

I am sympathetic with the spokesmen for the workers who say they cannot support the bill because it would mean that these men would lose their opportunity to labor, but such dislocations occur throughout the country. The coal mines are going down because oil is coming up, and a textile mill goes up in North Carolina and in New Hampshire a textile mill goes down. A boot and shoe factory goes up in Kansas City, and one goes broke in St. Paul.

So I want to ask you to vote against the McCormack amendment, and then, if that amendment does not carry, I ask you to support the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, for many years the domestic sugar industry depended solely on a tariff on foreign sugar for its protection. Within the tariff wall, the domestic industry could increase or decrease its production, and market raw or refined sugar, as it desired, without any restrictions except those imposed by the usual economic laws of supply and demand.

Under this system the domestic industry did expand, but only after many bitter fights with the so-called Sugar Trust, comprising the associated refiners located on the Atlantic seaboard. There is a natural and inevitable conflict between this same trust and the American sugar producers. For every ton of sugar grown within the United States, 1 ton less of foreign sugar can be imported by them for refining and marketing in the United States. In many instances this displacement means a double loss to the refiners, as they are often heavily interested in the foreign plantations that produce the raw sugar they process.

The following table shows this gradual shift from foreign to domestic sugar producers which has steadily decreased the volume of business of the eastern refiners:

Percentages of sugar distributed for consumption in the United States supplied by the principal producing areas

In 1934 the Jones-Costigan Act instituted the present quota system for the stabilization of the sugar industry. An excise tax was levied on all sugar sold in the American market. For foreign sugars, this tax was in addition to the reduced tariff, which latter, of course, was not paid by domestic sugars. Upon full compliance with the various provisions of the act as to quotas, acreages, labor requirements, and so forth, domestic producers were reimbursed a part of this excise tax. The tax and the compliance payments were the means of enforcing the act, which otherwise might have been disregarded.

The theory of the act was to adjust production to consumptive needs and to provide an adequate supply of sugar at a price fair to the consumer, the producer, and the processor. Foreign producers, principally Cuba, were allotted quotas as well as domestic producers. The basis for the quota allocations was supposedly the average amounts produced by each unit for a period of years prior to 1934. Actually the quotas assigned favored continental producers at the expense of Hawaii and Puerto Rico. Severe cuts were made in the amounts which could be produced by Hawaii and Puerto Rico in order to provide larger allotments to mainland cane and beet producers.

However, the system worked; the domestic sugar industry obtained some degree of stability and consumer prices remained at a fair level in comparison with other agricultural commodities and with sugar prices of former years. The contention that the excise tax was a consumers' tax was disproved by the actual record. The control of production and of foreign imports prevented a rise in price, which, in fact, was less than during many previous periods.

The eastern refiners, whose raw materials came principally from Cuba, were not satisfied with the generous quota assigned that island, of which only a fixed percentage could be in refined or direct consumption sugar, but demanded, as the price of their support for this legislation, that the refining situation as it then existed be "frozen," in order that they might maintain their industry at its existing level. They could not hope to "freeze" mainland producers. Sugar beets are necessarily processed where grown; Louisiana's quota of cane sugar is all refined in the neighborhood, without restriction; Florida can, if it desires, refine its entire production on its own plantations.

But the refiners and their allies won their fight as against Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. By the Jones-Costigan Act, the latter could refine none of its sugar; Puerto Rico could market only 15 percent of its quota in refined form; and Hawaii, an incorporated Territory of the United States, was restricted to not more than 3 percent of its quota. Thus was superimposed upon an agricultural bill an industrial feature that had no place in this legislation; thus was the precedent initiated of treating American citizens of the Territories and possessions differently from their fellow citizens on the mainland.

This act placed a double restriction upon Hawaii, a burden not borne by any mainland area. First, the act fixed Hawaii's quota at about 70,000 tons less than it should have been; and, second, it limited the amount which could be processed in Hawaii to about 3 percent of that quota. The principle involved is greater than any material consideration. No other agricultural commodity, even under the severest program of production control, has had its processing fixed by law. The South, or any State in the South, may process all the cotton it raises. Kansas may mill its own wheat. Every mainland sugar-growing area may process the whole or any part of its production, but Hawaii may not. Hawaii became a colony under a new imperial policy and must be content to be a producer of raw materials.

The Sugar Act of 1937 next enacted by Congress accorded Hawaii and Puerto Rico a better position in regard to quotas insofar as the manner of their determination is concerned. However, Hawaii took another cut in its quota in order that increases could be granted Louisiana and Florida. A comparison of the 1936 quotas—the last under the Jones-Costigan Act—with those of 1937 shows that Hawaii suffered a reduction of nearly 50,000 tons to provide a substantial increase for those two States.

Final quotas

[In short tons of sugar, raw-value equivalent]

	1936	1937
Hawaii	1,032,812	984,210	Decrease, 48,602.
Louisiana-Florida	392,016	472,337	Increase, 80,321.

The refiners again made no concessions, but invoked the precedent of 1934 to procure a further reduction in Cuba's refined quota and the reenactment of the restrictions on Hawaii and Puerto Rico. This provision of the bill was strongly opposed by the administration, through the President and several Cabinet heads, and by many Members of both Houses. The fallacy of the refiners' arguments, the importance of the principle involved, were all repeatedly emphasized. The distinguished chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], offered an amendment to the bill to strike out the provisions mentioned. But this amendment failed to carry.

The act represented an advance over previous legislation in one important respect. It was admitted in debate that the limitations on Hawaii and Puerto Rico were wrong in principle and justifiable only as a matter of expediency. The new legislation provided that they should expire 10 months before the act itself expired. Responsible spokesmen for the domestic sugar industry promised the President that such restrictions would not again be made a part of sugar legislation. On these assurances the President finally signed the bill, expressing his hope that the provisions he opposed would be removed from the law even before the time designated, but that, in any case, he sincerely trusted the domestic producers would not again help perpetuate the refining monopoly.

His confidence has yet to be justified. True, the restrictions he condemns expired on February 29, and are not now a part of the Sugar Act. True, the House Committee on Agriculture has reported out a bill that would continue the existing law in its present form, after voting down various proposals that would have amended the law, specifically one to include a revival of the expired manufacturing limitations. The bill reported out by the Committee on Agriculture represents its best collective judgment on what was feasible and necessary legislation for the domestic sugar industry at this time.

But the rule before us, Mr. Speaker, goes beyond the bill. It overrides the judgment of the Committee on Agriculture, and makes in order amendments to the sugar act already rejected by that committee. I do not question the wisdom of the rule. Perhaps it is desirable to submit the question to the House for final action. I take this rule as another evidence of the power of the refining industry, whose threat to sabotage any sugar legislation forced this rule upon us. I understand the domestic sugar industry as a whole, particularly the beet-sugar producers in 17 States, must have the legislation provided by the Cummings bill, H. R. 9654. The rider on that bill contemplated by this rule is an extraneous, a detrimental feature that may endanger the entire sugar program.

It illustrates the rule-or-ruin policy of the eastern refiners in their consistent opposition to the domestic sugar industry, a policy which was frankly expressed by Dr. John E. Dalton, assistant to the president of the National Sugar Refining Co. and executive secretary of the United States Cane Sugar Refiners' Association, at a conference on sugar legislation held in New York on May 3 last. I quote from his statement two revealing paragraphs:

> The first thing that has crippled New York's sugar industry—and, gentlemen, it will continue to cripple it unless legislation stops it—has been the tremendous increase in the production of beet sugar in our Western States. I want to get it into the record, Mr. Pike, without any equivocation, that the refiners are unalterably opposed to an expansion of the production of beet sugar. I repeat, I want to get it into the record that the refiners have no unholy alliance with the beet-sugar industry. At a public hearing 2 weeks ago before the House Agriculture Committee, Mr. Bunker, the chairman of the United States Cane Sugar Refiners' Association, stated that our industry does not want to have an expansion of the production of beet sugar, for the very simple and obvious reason that an expansion of beet sugar means a contraction in the consumption of cane sugar, and the more beet sugar that is produced the less cane sugar is going to be consumed. The beet-sugar industry since 1925—this is interesting—has increased 100 percent, whereas the refined-cane-sugar industry in New York has decreased 30 percent.

And again:

> I want to make one thing perfectly clear, so that we won't have any confusion. The refining industry is not asking for enactment of the Sugar Act of 1937. We say simply this: If a quota system on raw sugar, coupled with processing taxes and subsidies, is going to be continued by Congress, then we will demand limitations on Hawaiian and Puerto Rican refined sugar. If Congress wants to go back to the old tariff system, we don't care about Hawaiian and Puerto Rican refining. But if Congress continues a quota system which subsidizes those islands and limits our volume of business, then we say we will fight to have Hawaii and Puerto Rico limited because we are limited.

Thus Dr. Dalton, speaking for the refining industry. How then can anyone interested in the domestic sugar industry support the amendments that will be offered on behalf of the refiners? I ask, therefore, that after the rule is adopted—and I realize how important it is to have a rule, any rule, that will permit sugar legislation to be brought before Congress—that the refiners' threat be disregarded and the amendments to H. R. 9654 be voted down.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, James Anthony Froude once said, "Where all are selfish the sage is no better than the fool."

I want to appeal to the sense of fair play, to the fine sportsmanship of the membership of the House from these 17 States that are said to be so vitally interested in the bill, the consideration of which this rule intends to make in order. On yesterday these same 17 States were likewise vitally interested in the so-called Leavy amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill. If Members from these 17 States will consult the roll call on that amendment, they will find that they were in that instance saved, as they have been many, many times before, by the Members from those States that are equally as vitally interested in protecting invested capital, in protecting the refineries in this country and the workers in these refineries. There has grown up through the past several years a kind of working arrangement between Members of these 17 States and Members who come from the big industrial centers. Not only in regard to sugar have you worked together, but as regards all other proposals to take care of your agricultural problems, and if you people mean to live up to the combination which has been formed, you will not seek to throw down those who have saved you on many, many occasions. If you do, then I hope that this House will defeat your bill.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Is not the statement made regarding the East and the West just as true to the West taking care of the South?

Mr. COX. Oh, I have not the time to yield for that. Let me quote the gentleman himself, and probably he is the best authority on sugar that there is in the House. He worked with this same group in 1934 and again in 1936, and he championed their cause in 1937. Now, conditions have not so changed as to justify a shift in attitude. When this same sugar bill was before the House in 1937, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS] used this language. He raised the question as to whether these limitations should apply to Puerto Rico and Hawaii, and said:

> This is just as plan as the nose on your face. If you will examine the Government report which I have here and refer to the tables in that report, you will find that the average wage for labor in the sugar industry in Hawaii is $10.80 a week. They want to refine the sugar there in order to make more money. The industry in the two countries is absolutely different. I am going to offer for introduction in the RECORD a graph that shows that six Hawaiian families own and control the sugar industry in Hawaii.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman supported that argument with other statements. He said that the limitation ought to apply because we ought to protect our own workers against having their jobs taken away from them by people who live in Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PETERSON].

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this is practically a closed rule. It allows only one amendment, an amendment which caused the President, when he approved the bill before, to say that he only approved it by virtue of assurances from responsible leaders of the House of Representatives and Senate. The President, in his message in connection with the approval of the Sugar Act of 1937, said:

> I hope that the next session of the Congress will consider repealing or shortening the clause which continues the refining monopoly to March 1, 1940; but even if Congress does not then act, the end of the monopoly is definitely in sight and I sincerely trust that nothing will be done by the domestic growers of beets and cane to perpetuate it. The monopoly costs the American housewife millions of dollars every year, and I am just as concerned for her as I am for the farmers themselves.

While I shall vote for the amendment to protect American labor I shall oppose the resolution as a whole.

The letter of the President to the chairman of the committee, on April 11, 1940, contains the following passage:

> Consequently it seems clear that no sugar legislation is necessarily required at this session of Congress, although it might be advisable to extend the life of the Sugar Act of 1937 for an additional period through a joint resolution of the Congress.

Thus he did not definitely advocate any legislation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. No; I have only 2 minutes. This particular bill, if passed, will prevent the marketing of as much sugar as we marketed last year in the United States, because at the first threat of war they had to suspend the quotas and allow us to market part of the carryover, and it will actually result in a reduction of the acreage of cane- and beet-producing areas in the United States. A recent issue of the Sugar Journal reported a meeting of the Minnesota-Dakota Beet Development Association, which stated that the extension of the 1937 act would be a terrific blow to present beet growers, and the extension can mean a reduction of 20 to 30 percent in 1941. This rule prevents us from proposing an amendment which has the approval of the Secretary, which would prohibit the destruction of cane now growing in Louisiana and Florida. I hope you will vote down the rule. [Applause.]

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SACKS].

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, in my district are located three large refineries. Those refineries employ thousands of men. At the present time they are operating on a 40-percent basis. If this restriction is not kept in the bill it will drop to about 15 percent.

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that in these areas we help pay the taxes that give subsidies to the beet growers. We are willing to help the beet growers, but at the same time we want protection for a good old American industry that is being destroyed by products that come in as a result of cheap labor from Puerto Rico and Hawaii. The McCormack amendment will only continue in the law the quotas that existed under the last law.

The gentleman from Colorado who handled the bill the last time was willing and able and did help put in those quotas. I cannot understand his change now. If he feels the President would veto it and thereby hurt the beet industry, I want to call his attention to the fact that on this floor those who carried the bill then said the President of the United States would veto the bill if it had quotas for refined sugar. Yet, my friends, the bill was signed. I say that the President of the United States is interested in protecting American industry, and he will sign the bill if the McCormack amendment is carried by this House as a part of it. Then the result would be that the beet industry that is subsidized by taxation will be protected and the refined industries which pay for those subsidies will also be protected. American labor standards will be preserved, and American workmen will not be thrown on relief rolls.

The people of Philadelphia and other refining cities will not be discriminated against in sugar. To avoid discrimination it is absolutely essential that the Cummings bill, H. R. 9654, should be amended to restore the quotas on refined sugar from Puerto Rico and Hawaii as provided in the Sugar Act of 1937. Without such an amendment the Cummings bill should be defeated.

Philadelphia is one of the most important sugar-refining centers in the United States, and, in fact, in the whole world.

It has had a refining industry since 1789, and today three large cane-sugar refineries are located there. Thousands of Philadelphia families obtain their livelihood from the handling and refining of sugar. Millions of dollars have been invested in this industry by the people of Pennsylvania and other States.

Since 1925 the Philadelphia refining industry has declined by about 40 percent. This decline was not due to any inefficiency on the part of the industry, but came about largely from the growth after 1925 of refining in the tropical islands. The expansion in the production of beet sugar in the Western States also reduced the normal markets of the Philadelphia refining industry.

Congress in 1934 and in 1936, and again in 1937, provided in the sugar bill that there should be no further expansion of refining in the Tropics for the American market. On three separate occasions Congress decided that it was fair and equitable that there be a limitation upon refined-sugar imports as well as upon raw-sugar imports.

The Philadelphia industry cannot afford to lose any more volume of business. In the last 15 years the industry has experienced a cumulative loss of some 4,000,000 tons of business, which represents some $13,000,000 of direct pay checks and some $14,000,000 in supplies which would have been normally purchased, including municipal water and energy. In the last 15 years about 1,700,000 tons of barge and ocean freight, about 1,100,000 tons of railroad freight, and approximately 700 cargoes of ocean freight were included in the economic loss of the Philadelphia community and surrounding territory.

Jobs are one of the most difficult things in America to find at the present time, and Philadelphia workers should not be deprived of their jobs by an act of Congress. What the Cummings bill, as it is now drafted, would do is to throw men out of work in Philadelphia, because, under the quota system, if more refining is done in the Tropics, there is no possible way for the refiners to obtain an equivalent of raw sugar to fill the gap. The Cummings bill would, by law, give a monopoly to the refiners in the Tropics and would permit them to retain their supply of raw sugar necessary for the refining process in Philadelphia and other States.

Refinery workers in Philadelphia are 100 percent unionized, and they receive wages at least three times as high as those which prevail in Puerto Rico. I see no reason for continuing a sugar system under which the people of Pennsylvania and other States must pay enormous sugar subsidies unless that system gives equitable treatment to Pennsylvania. For this reason I am unalterably opposed to the enactment of the Cummings bill, H. R. 9654, unless the McCormack amendment is adopted to restore quotas upon refined sugar from Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

Congress in 1934 and in 1937 set up a quota plan, which expires this year, for the protection of all elements in the American sugar industry. By means of yearly marketing quotas on both raw and refined sugar, Congress since 1934 has divided the American sugar market among the various sugar producing and refining groups. Marketing quotas for the refining groups were assigned about as follows:

	Tons
1. The beet-sugar industry	1,400,000
2. The tropical refiners (mostly Cuba and Puerto Rico)	600,000
3. The home cane-sugar refining industry	4,300,000
The total refined sugar quota (national consumption) was therefore	6,300,000

The two families which refine sugar on their plantations in Puerto Rico, Serralles, and Roig, now object to the size of their refined sugar quotas, as established in the Sugar Acts of 1934 and 1937. They want the right to refine all of their raw sugar, and claim that any limitation upon their refining is a discrimination.

Organized labor and management in the home-refining industry claim that the shoe is on the other foot—that if there is any discrimination it is against them, not the tropics. They cite the following reasons:

First. An increase in the quota for tropical refining means an automatic decrease in the quota for home refining. The home refiners cannot buy their raw sugar except from those specific sources, and such specific amounts, as determined by Washington. Puerto Rico is one of the most important of these sources. It is obvious that if the tropical plantation refiners retained their raw sugar for refining, the sole source for the home refiners would be cut off.

Second. If the two refining families of Puerto Rico, Serralles and Roig, sincerely believe that quotas on refined sugar discriminate against them, why do they not object to quotas on raw sugar? The answer to this is simple. The two refiners in Puerto Rico are large scale producers of raw sugar. Raw sugar quotas, which are coupled with cash subsidies paid by the American consumer, make them extremely prosperous. On this point, the New York Times said editorially (August 13, 1937):

> You cannot logically approve a system of quotas for (sugar) producers, and denounce the same system of quotas for refiners.

Third. The Puerto Rican refiners want to receive cash handouts from American consumers and the American Treasury on the one hand, and then they want to create more unemployment in the States, on the other. Since 1934 Roig and Serralles (as growers) have received over $2,000,000 cash as sugar bounties, from the Federal Treasury. In addition they have received a protection on their sugar in the form of higher prices paid by American consumers, valued at about $20,000,000. Certainly Congress, under these circumstances, is not discriminating against them.

Fourth. The people of Puerto Rico receive the same treatment under the sugar plan as do the people at home. No one disputes the fact that the Puerto Rican people are citizens of the United States. But this has nothing to do with the point at issue. Labor and capital in the home refining industry is restricted by quotas—labor and capital in the Puerto Rican refining industry is likewise restricted. If Roig and Serralles want to wipe out all such quotas and restrictions, all subsidies, and all tariffs on sugar, then they should say so. The New York Times hit the nail on the head when it said:

> You cannot, as some of these spokesmen seem to imagine, provide for a system of free trade within a tight system of control.

In passing, it should be noted that the Puerto Ricans have said again and again that they want to receive the same treatment as the people in the United States. It is interesting to note that on at least one point, the Puerto Ricans want to be treated differently to wit: They do not want the Wage and Hour Act to apply to their island where, during the fiscal year 1938–39, the average actual earnings per week were reported at $5.92—average earnings per week on a full-time basis were reported at $10.59. See page 206, Report of the Governor of Puerto Rico for 1939. Mr. A. A. Roig, the second largest sugar refiner in the island, is a member of the economic delegation from Puerto Rico which, on May 31, 1939, fervently pleaded before an Interdepartmental Committee in Washington that Puerto Rico be exempted from the Wage and Hour Act—see page 6 of Delegation's "Statement."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. OSMERS].

Mr. OSMERS. Mr. Speaker, the people of my State, New Jersey, are unalterably opposed to the enactment of the Cummings sugar bill, H. R. 9654, because they sincerely believe that in its present form it is a gross discrimination against them.

The bill would continue the Sugar Act of 1937 for 1 year, but it would not restore the quota limitations upon Hawaiian and Puerto Rican refined sugar as provided for in the Sugar Acts of 1934 and 1937. Without such a restoration there will be an immediate reduction in the volume of refining in New Jersey, and with that will come an immediate reduction in employment. Certainly, the people of New Jersey cannot be asked to accept sugar legislation which would create unemployment in their State.

New Jersey has refined raw cane sugar for over 75 years, and today it has one of the largest and most efficient plants in the world, located at Edgewater, on the Hudson River. The industry makes an important contribution to the economic life of the whole community. In the last 13 years, for example, the figures show that it has paid out over $24,000,000 in wages. It has purchased supplies and fuel of approximately $25,000,000. It gives employment directly and indirectly to thousands of persons throughout the State. Its workers are 100 percent unionized, and the wages they receive per hour are the highest of any branch of the American sugar system.

In recent years the New Jersey industry has seen a substantial loss in the volume of its business. Since 1928 it has been on the decline, and both labor and capital have suffered thereby.

The loss of pay roll alone, since 1928, has been over $8,000,000, and this important New Jersey industry cannot afford to lose more business if it is to survive.

If the Cummings sugar bill is not amended, the mainland sugar-refining industry can lose up to as much as one-third of its present business.

New Jersey is primarily an industrial State, and it is proud of the efficiency of its industry, and the skill of its workers. New Jersey wants to expand its industry—it does not want to see it contracted. And it is particularly adamant against any campaign to destroy an existing industry in favor of any area which has substandard labor conditions.

These are the basic reasons why New Jersey is in opposition to the Cummings bill unless it is properly amended. The 4,000,000 people of New Jersey do not ask Congress to enact sugar legislation which gives subsidies to tropical sugar producers. The 4,000,000 people of New Jersey are not asking that Congress place a sugar sales tax upon them. These subsidies and these taxes are requested by the people in sugar-producing States, not refining States. But if Congress is going to aid the sugar-producing States and islands, then Congress should give some protection to the refining States.

New Jersey is not asking aid in the form of cash bounties, nor is New Jersey asking that the Hawaiian and Puerto Rican refiners be prohibited from refining sugar for mainland consumption.

But my interest in sugar legislation transcends the requirements of the people of my State. The Sugar Act of 1937 and the Cummings bill both raise issues which are national in scope and importance. The Sugar Act is an elaborate and complicated scheme for the control and subsidization of the entire American sugar system. That act divides the American market between the various producing and refining groups in accordance with a formula originally adopted by Congress in 1934.

The purpose of the act is not only to protect the interests of American agriculture but to provide a stabilization for the most important industry of our overseas territories and possessions. And, finally, that act is to stabilize the employment and investment of the cane-sugar refining industry.

The interests of American farmers, plantations, and factories are involved. I do not see why Congress in 1940 should make any fundamental shift of the quota formula adopted in 1934 and reaffirmed in 1937. And especially I do not see any reason for a modification of that formula which would be prejudicial to the interests of men and women who work in factories.

A quota system means control for everyone. It does not mean expansion for anyone. And it is no defense for any sugar group to claim that they are being discriminated against if they are prevented from destroying the original quota formula.

Discrimination means one thing under an absolutely free economic system, but it has an entirely different meaning under a system of control. It is for this reason that I sincerely believe that the people in Hawaii and Puerto Rico cannot justly claim that they are being discriminated against through quotas on refined sugar.

New Jersey merely asks that the same refined quotas be applied by Congress to Hawaii and Puerto Rico as were applied in 1934, 1936, and 1937. Unless the quotas of 1937 are restored, it will be necessary for New Jersey to oppose the Cummings bill and its sugar subsidies with all its power. And such opposition will come not only now but will also come in the future. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill (H. R. 9654) to extend for an additional year the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937 if it is amended to provide for restrictions on the importation of sugar from outside continental United States. On the edge of my district in Minnesota we have a sugar-beet factory in the city of Chaska, which gives employment to a large number of people in that community and also makes it possible for many farmers in my district bordering on that city to utilize their very beautiful and fertile land for purposes other than for the raising of grain, which in the last few years seems to have petered out somewhat, when it comes to producing revenue sufficient to keep the farm population from going into bankruptcy.

I am directly interested in this legislation for that reason.

Also in the northern part of our State in the district represented by my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. BUCKLER], sitting here at my right, we have another factory at East Grand Forks.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. I am glad to have an opportunity to make known that I am supporting this legislation. In my district, in my own county, we have the large sugar-beet factory to which the gentleman refers. They have 26,500 acres. We have enough applications for another factory. The farmers have come to the headquarters and even cried because they could not get more acreage. We have a big fertile country up there, which was originally a wheat country, but the farmers who are raising beets are getting along pretty nicely, and they are begging for more acreage. I am sorry we cannot amend this bill to give them more acres, but I am sure it is important and essential to pass the bill to give them again what acreage they now have.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I want to point out that the essence of his statement is to this effect, that we should protect our farmers in the 48 States, and I think in considering this bill we must keep in mind that it is our patriotic duty, just as essential as the building of armaments and national defense and the preparedness program which we are working on, to protect our farmers and keep them from going into bankruptcy as a result of the competition which is being allowed to come in from outside under the present set-up which we have, and will continue to have unless we reenact this Sugar Act of 1937.

UNPATRIOTIC NEW YORKERS

I feel that such statements as were made on May 3, 1940, at the conference in New York by Dr. John E. Dalton, assistant to the president of the National Sugar Refining Co. are very ill advised and unpatriotic. The statement which I have before me, and which I believe all Members of the House received, says that the Sugar Refiners Association, and I quote "without any equivocation, are unalterably opposed to an extension of the production of beet sugar." Now, Mr. Speaker, at a time when we are trying to save our farmers in this Nation from economic ruin, I call your attention to the fact that statements such as that show very little patriotism. Such statements are not conducive to the successful operation and perpetuation of our form of government. I realize that the refiners' official was looking after what he thought to be the interest of his employer, but such a statement indicates selfishness, greed, narrow-mindedness, and a lack of consideration for his fellow men in the rest of the Nation. It is a viewpoint held by all too many of the businessmen of the city of New York; and while I have many ties of blood and relationships here in the eastern section of the United States, I cannot condone or sit idly by and allow such a statement to go unchallenged.

I feel it is high time for the Congressmen and Senators from the great midcontinent area to rise in protest against the theory that we are only entitled to eat the crumbs from the overloaded tables of the eastern money barons and economic royalists.

How much longer do they think the farmers, businessmen, and industry of the Middle West can stand the strain of the constant drain of our resources to replenish the coffers of Wall Street unless we are allowed to produce with less restrictions and unless we are allowed a more fair return on our products?

These narrow-minded, cloudy-visioned Tories like the executive secretary of the Sugar Refiners' Association, who would further restrict, stifle, and destroy our budding sugar-beet industry in the Middle West, apparently are too busily engaged chasing the almighty dollar or attending to the night life on Broadway, or playing the ponies, or something else equally as inconsequential, to realize that their philosophy is entirely un-American and not at all in keeping with the traditional policy, established by our forefathers, of justice and equality for all. These benighted individuals do not seem to realize that their welfare, in the final analysis, is entirely dependent on how well they protect and preserve the rights and interests of every last individual in this Nation, even in the midmost parts thereof.

To do less will only hasten the day when the Wall Street financial grip, daily growing more odious, due to the control over money and credit, will be thrown off by the long-suffering citizenry in the hinterlands. For the protection and salvation of those in positions of power, I suggest a day off for mental introspection and for some searching after a few eternal truths which are involved in this proposition. I hope they will do this, for every day from all over the Nation I am receiving letters, pamphlets, and fervid prayers calling for money reform. In fact, it is quite likely that a popular referendum on the subject even at this time would considerably upset and disturb the blase smugness and cold indifference on the part of certain individuals. It is quite probable that the great popularity of the late Huey P. Long was not the blind following after a colorful personality, but the widespread realization that there is much rottenness in the eastern financial hierarchy, and that America needs a cleaning out, needs reform, and needs a leader to save the Nation and to unshackle the chains of bondage holding a large percentage of her population in as mean and merciless a slavery as the world has ever seen.

Oh, you hypocrites of the effete East, can you not see that our sugar-beet growers, our farmers, our 180,000 people annually engaged in that productive activity in the 17 States of the Nation where sugar beets are refined into sugar, are just as much entitled to develop and expand their little business as you are your great big monopolistic industry? Indeed, the welfare of every one of us is subject to, and dependent on, the welfare of every other person or individual in the Nation. It is much like the system of nerves emanating from the brain. When injury comes to one little nerve thread in some far extremity of the body, such as a smashed finger or toe, the shock is telegraphed to the central station, and from there the pain is transmitted sympathetically to all other parts of the body—you feel sick, or you faint away, your pores exude a cold perspiration, you cannot work, you cannot think, and you are no good for anything as long as the pain at the extremity continues to upset the rest of your nervous system.

In a great Republic such as ours all business, all production, all commercial activity, all life is so interdependent and so closely knit together, much like the nerves and brain of the human body, that we cannot neglect or destroy or injure one little far-removed business activity without having an unfavorable reaction reflected in every other part of the national system, including even the financial center.

We cannot much longer stand the inequalities in the Midwest area which have been forced on us for the past three decades in the form of robbery of our natural resources without a reciprocal return; in the form of discriminatory freight rates; in the form of labor racketeers sent from the East to disrupt our industry and manufactures; in the form of Pittsburgh-plus plans; trade barriers, and other artificial restrictions on the free flow of trade and money, and unless there is more patriotism and idealism in high places and less graft, greed, and grabbing, there can be but one answer. Which do you want—distintegration and destruction, or prosperity and progress? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I believe this bill should be enacted. The fundamental fact underlying this situation is that the American sugar industry cannot survive unless it has a shelter restricting destructive surpluses, especially as to foreign imports, and probably as between production in American territory.

Last September, when the war started in Europe, there was a release from the quota provisions of the bill. Sugar prices immediately shot up, but within a comparatively short time the price slumped, and the industry demanded a renewal of quotas, which were again placed in operation on the 1st of January.

The American sugar industry includes over 900,000 acres of beets. Last year the average amount of money received by the American beet farmer was about $83 per acre. Practically every cent of that $83 per acre on over 900,000 acres of production went for the employment of labor and in support of the other industries of the country.

The point about the whole thing is that, even though this may not be an ideal way of controlling the situation, it must be controlled either through a tariff, through an excise plan, or through the plan before us. Experience shows that this is the best plan available under present circumstances and should be adopted.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CLEVENGER].

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Speaker, somewhere between these two positions lies probably the position nearest the right. In my district in northwestern Ohio and some 24 adjoining counties, and in the district of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILLIE], is an area where the production of beet sugar takes place naturally without any artificial irrigation, and it is a very important crop.

Last year we were asked to yield 9 percent, for instance, of our production of hogs. This year we are asked to yield 10 percent of our production of corn to comply with an agricultural program. We hear it charged on the one hand that there is a threat of low-cost production from Hawaii. I visited Hawaii last summer and I found that is not the fact, because the Wage and Hour Act of the continental United States is in effect in the islands of Hawaii, an integral part of the United States.

I have every sympathy with the refiners of cane sugar on the eastern seaboard of the country. Certainly we do not want Americans to lose jobs to Cubans, for instance, who have no Wage and Hour Act and no standard of labor. We have a feeling on my side of the aisle, those who are really interested in agriculture, that this is not an entirely satisfactory piece of legislation but is the best we can get because we were told it was this or nothing.

We feel that in the interest of the American sugar consumer the ideal is an increased production of American sugar within the United States. With some 900,000 tons transported from the Philippines in the case of war there is nothing at all standing between America and the 25-cent sugar of 25 years ago but just the exigencies of blockade and shipping. The ideal is an increase in the United States to the extent that both cane and beet may profitably produce.

That is a program for the future, but it certainly is the ideal from the standpoint of both the American sugar grower, the American refiner, and the American consumer.

Mr. OSMERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLEVENGER. I yield.

Mr. OSMERS. The gentleman pointed out that the Wage and Hour Act was in effect under the American flag.

Mr. CLEVENGER. I said in Hawaii.

Mr. OSMERS. In Hawaii and also Puerto Rico. I would like to point out that while wages paid to Puerto Rico have been increased to 26 cents an hour under the law, yet in the eastern refineries, particularly in one in my district, they pay 80 cents an hour.

Mr. CLEVENGER. I expressed entire sympathy with the American refiners in the production of refined sugar, and I also expressed some alarm at the importation of Cuban sugar that has no such protection today.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLEVENGER. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Insofar as the production of beet sugar in the gentleman's territory is concerned, has the gentleman any apprehension that the inter-American trade policy which has just recently been proposed may lead to a situation where, in order to support that policy we may be forced to go to Cuba for a considerable increase in our supply of sugar and drift away from the sugar-beet fields of the United States?

Mr. CLEVENGER. I refer my colleague from Michigan to the extension of my remarks which appeared in yesterday's RECORD.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time on this side to myself.

Mr. Speaker, I trust this rule will be promptly adopted. As I understand, there is no objection to the rule, and I believe there will be no opposition to its adoption. When the bill comes up for consideration under the rule, I am confident the same spirit of candor and good nature will prevail in the debate on the bill as has in the debate on the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9654, to extend, for an additional year, the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937 and the taxes with respect to sugar.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9654, with Mr. ZIMMERMAN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may need.

Mr. Chairman, if the Members will follow carefully what I am going to say they will probably see why we have reached a parting of the road so far as the refiners and the producers of sugar in the United States is concerned.

The bill which is now before the House has no other purpose than to continue for an additional year the existing provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937. It proposes no changes whatever in the law which is currently in force. It has the approval of the administrative branches of the Government, including that of the White House. It is wholly consistent with the commitments of the United States under the Cuban trade agreement, the Philippine Independence Act, and the world sugar agreement.

Continuance of the law is not only important to the Western States in which the production of beet sugar is largely centered, but it is likewise important to consumers of this Nation. The war in Europe, particularly the action in Belgium and France, has been fought over the areas on which sugar is normally grown in those countries. The world commerce in sugar has been disrupted and no man can say what will happen in the future. Under these circumstances, and if there were no other reason, a rule should be adopted and a bill should be enacted which will give the people of the United States assurance that the present balance in that part of the sugar industry which supplies the United States will be maintained, and that adequate supplies of sugar will be available to consumers no matter what may occur in foreign countries.

The real question we must answer today is, Will the beet-sugar industry be continued in the United States?

Before answering we should probably ask, How many people would be benefited by its continuance?

I believe it is generally conceded that it cannot continue without some measure of protection and I believe this statement is true regarding any other product grown or manufactured in the United States. No manufacturer, or grower, can pay the wages that are paid in the United States and compete with the cheap labor in Europe and the breech-clout labor in the Tropics. I heard a speaker say recently that in case of war the United States could depend on Cuba for a permanent and cheap supply of sugar. Let us read the record. In 1920 Cuba was in a position to name the price of sugar in the United States. The average price for the 12 months was $19.40 per hundred; in May $25.40; in June $26.70; in July $26.50; in December, when the sugar obtained from beets was on the market, it dropped to $10.50, and in December 1921 it was $6.05. The average price for 1921 was $8. We must judge the future by the past.

There are 94 sugar-beet factories in the United States. There are 70,000 growers of sugar beets. There are 90,000 people employed in field labor. Under the present law the wages paid this labor is determined by the Secretary of Agriculture. They earn from $5 to $9 per day. Every acre of sugar beets pays the railroad $35 for freight.

About the only objection to this bill today comes from the refiners. At a conference on sugar legislation held in New York May 3, 1940, Dr. John E. Dalton, former Chief of the Sugar Division of the Agriculture Department, made the following statement:

> I want to get it into the record, Mr. Pike, without any equivocation, that the refiners are unalterably opposed to an expansion of the production of beet sugar. I repeat: I want to get it into the record that the refiners have no unholy alliance with the beet-sugar industry. At a public hearing 2 weeks ago before the House Agriculture Committee, Mr. Bunker, the chairman of the United States Cane Sugar Refiners' Association, stated that our industry does not want to have an expansion of the production of beet sugar, for the very simple and obvious reason that an expansion of beet sugar means a contraction in the consumption of cane sugar, and the more beet sugar that is produced, the less cane is going to be consumed.

Quoting Mr. Dalton further:

> Hawaii is a part of the United States, and the people in Hawaii are citizens of the United States. Hawaii is just as much a part of the United States as New York is. I want that to go into the record.
> Puerto Rico is a possession of the United States—an incorporated possession. The people of Puerto Rico are American citizens. They were made so, I believe, in 1917.

Quoting Mr. Dalton further:

> I am very happy to announce that the day before yesterday the House Agricultural Committee, by a vote of 13 to 9, voted down the Cummings bill, which was unalterably opposed to our industry, as well as by the Cuban industry. One group which would take business away from New York, then, is temporarily in hand.

On April 12, Mr. Bunker stated that he was chairman of the United States Cane Sugar Refiners' Association, and that his association included 9 companies, operating 14 cane-sugar refineries, which produced 70 percent of the present total continental output of 4,200,000 short tons of refined sugar. Now, please remember that those companies buy what is called raw sugar; that is, sugar of 96-degrees purity; they process, reprocess it, and make standard graded granulated sugar. He stated on page 123 of those hearings they employed 18,000 individuals, with a pay roll of $27,000,000. That would mean the cost of refining a ton of sugar was $6.40. Then this means a cost of 32 cents per 100 pounds for labor. If the labor employed in refining sugar is paid on an average of 60 cents an hour, this would mean one-half hour labor for each 100 pounds of sugar. Each 100 pounds of beet sugar employs 8 hours of labor. This is just sixteen times as much employment as is furnished for a like amount of cane sugar. On page 126 of the hearings before the House Agriculture Committee in reply to a question asked by Mr. HOPE, Mr. Bunker said:

I said since 1925 the amount of sugar refined in the Tropics had gone up from practically zero until they were shipping here the amount of 600,000 tons. This was checked by the quota system, by the Sugar Act of 1934, which fixed the quotas of Puerto Rican and Hawaiian refined sugar at their then maximum figure and established the percentage basis for Cuban refined sugar which was later changed under the 1937 act to a flat figure of 375,000 tons.

Mr. HOPE (interposing). In all probability, then, tropical refining would have increased if we had not had the quota system.

Mr. BUNKER. It would have increased, Mr. HOPE, had there been no protection for the domestic refining industry.

Again quoting Mr. HOPE:

But to the extent that it has imposed a limitation on tropical refining, your group has benefited from the sugar legislation that has been in effect, has it not?

Mr. BUNKER. That is true. The sugar quota has prevented further expansion of the tropical refining of sugar.

On page 127, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE] asked the following question:

Would you not be more seriously threatened in the event we are unable to get any sugar legislation that would provide for some restrictions on refined sugar from the Tropics?

Mr. BUNKER. Well, Mr. COFFEE, I think it is a question in my mind as to whether in the long run the industry would be better off to go back to a freer system. I think it is a question that they ought to examine very carefully. I would say this, so far as the refining industry is concerned, if there were no protection at all on sugar of any kind we could probably get along. At least we would be the last to disappear, I suppose.

Under the present law, which the bill under discussion proposes to extend for 1 year, the importation of refined sugar from Cuba is limited to 375,000 tons. Cuba furnished 642,000 tons in 1936. It also prohibits the importation of liquid sugar, a competitive production of the refiners from all countries in the world except Cuba and Santo Domingo, with restrictive quotas on those two countries. It limits the importation of sugar refined in the Philippines and other foreign countries; the marketing restrictions on all the sugar-beet companies, the principal competitors of the refiners; and the marketing restrictions on all the Louisiana sugar companies making direct-consumption sugar.

Will Hawaii increase their importation of refined sugar? Hawaii's quota for 1940 is 943,967 tons. The producers of Hawaii own a refinery at Crockett, Calif., with a capacity of 700,000 tons annually. They also own a refinery in San Francisco with a capacity of 110,000 tons. They have a small refinery in Hawaii that refines 40,000 tons, more than half of which is consumed in the islands. They are shipping to one of the eastern refineries 300,000 tons annually under contract. Their contract will not expire for 2 years. This is a total of much more than their quota.

There has been no limitation on the shipment of refined sugar from Puerto Rico since February 1929. Seventy percent of all the sugar from Puerto Rico is shipped during the first 5 months of the year. Their increased shipment of refined sugar is about 58,000 tons.

If this bill is not passed, it means there will be no restrictions whatever of either refined or raw sugar. In 1933 a meeting was held in Washington at the invitation of Secretary Wallace to discuss the establishment of quotas. This meeting was attended by representatives of the people who furnish 97 percent of all the sugar consumed in the United States. They agreed on quotas that were practically the same as those now in effect. At that time the world produced 27,241,000 tons. In 1939 it was more than 34,790,000 tons, an increase of about 27 percent. If quota restrictions were needed at that time, they are surely needed now. The truth is this is just a fight to see whether the people who refine sugar mostly produced by people who employ cheap tropical labor will control the markets of the United States, or whether the farmers who own their land, pay American wages, shall be allowed to continue in the business. Please remember that every dollar spent for the purchase of sugar grown in the Tropics stays in the Tropics or in the hands of some New York banker. Every dollar that is spent for growing beets and processing beets in the United States stays in the United States, and most of it among the hundreds of farmers and other laborers employed in the industry.

There is only one way to interpret this statement—that is, the refiners have controlled the Agriculture Committee of the House. Quite a compliment, I must say.

Again, let us refer to the record. At the bottom of page 9 of the bill he refers to is this statement:

Not more than 175,000 short tons, raw value, of the Cuban quota may be filled by direct-consumption sugar.

In 1933 Cuba imported 500,000 tons of refined sugar; and their present quota is 375,000 tons. What this bill proposed to do was to reduce the 375,000 tons to 175,000 tons—a reduction of 200,000 tons. This would have been divided as follows:

	Tons
Hawaii	50,500
Puerto Rico	42,960
Louisiana and Florida cane	2,262
American beet	83,400

This would have provided the refiners with 116,560 tons additional sugar to refine. If they wanted to increase business, why did they object to this?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON].

Mr. BARTON of New York. Mr. Chairman, the port of New York has refined sugar for 250 years, and today the sugar-refining industry there is the largest in the world.

The Cummings bill would continue a system of subsidies for raw-sugar producers, including those of Hawaii and Puerto Rico, costing the American public about $300,000,000 a year. Half of this subsidy would be paid by the 65,000,000 people who live in New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Georgia, Texas, and other important refining States.

Surely the people who are to pay too large a percentage of the subsidy ought not to have their old-established industries closed down and their workers thrown out of work because Secretary Ickes wants to transfer the refining of sugar to Puerto Rico.

About 5,000 New York workers would be directly affected if the McCormack amendment is not adopted. Other thousands engaged in making refining machinery, charcoal, and other materials, and in transportation, loading, and unloading of vessels, and so forth, would suffer total or partial loss of income.

The refining business is completely organized by the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. The wages are high, averaging 70 cents an hour—more than twice as high as the wages in Puerto Rico. Labor conditions in the industry are good and the relations between employers and workers friendly. I have letters from the New York State Federation of Labor and the New Jersey State Federation asking that this fine old-established American industry be not destroyed. I have letters also from the New York State Legislature, the New Jersey State Assembly, the New York City Council, the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, the New Jersey State Chamber of Commerce, the Maritime Association of the Port of New York, the Merchants' Association of New York, the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs, and others.

So much in explanation of my direct interest in the failure to reenact the quotas on refined sugar. I want to speak now for a few minutes on the injustice of the proposal to destroy the sugar-refining industry, and since this is a large subject I will confine my remarks to the argument of Secretary Ickes that the reenactment of the quotas on refined sugar would be, as he says, "an act of imperialism," since it would be a discrimination against American citizens in Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

This argument, to my mind, has no merit whatever. Congress has not prohibited the refining of sugar for local consumption in Puerto Rico and Hawaii. As a matter of fact, the refiners there have a complete monopoly of their local market, and this monopoly in Puerto Rico has been divided by a system of allotments among Puerto Rico refiners. Furthermore, the island refiners are permitted to ship a substantial excess of their output to the mainland of the United States.

The mainland refiners are not asking for the Puerto Rico and Hawaii market. We are not even asking for the entire home market. We are ready to accept the quota in the original bill, by which Puerto Rico and Hawaii have part of the home market. All we ask is that we shall not be discriminated against by losing our whole market to the islands. We claim that the citizens at home also have a right to ask not to be discriminated against. And especially when they are paying the subsidy of which so many million dollars a year goes to the islands.

Have citizens of Puerto Rico and Hawaii the only rights? Has not the resident of the mainland also the right to some protection? Must we who are paying the subsidy and the high wages give over our industry to the islands with their low wages? Must New York workmen be thrown out of work so that more Puerto Ricans can have work?

The refined quotas provided for in the Sugar Act of 1934 were fixed at the maximum quantity of refined sugar ever shipped from those islands to the mainland in any previous year.

On the other hand the mainland refiners received a residual quota about 25 percent less than their previous maximum output. In short, Congress gave the home refiners a volume of business near the all-time low for many years.

Shortly after the 1934 act was signed the Hawaiian sugar industry attacked its constitutionality in its application to Hawaii. In the case of Ewa Plantation Co. and others against Henry A. Wallace, the plaintiffs—the Hawaiian sugar industry—claimed that the entire act was a discrimination against Hawaii, not only with respect to raw-sugar quotas and other matters but also with respect to refined quotas. The charge of discrimination was discussed from every conceivable angle before the court. The Secretary of Agriculture appeared as defendant and presented a brief which, of course, was prepared by the Department of Justice. The Government's brief, in discussing the refined-sugar quotas, stated as follows—page 68:

> All of the refined sugar brought in from Hawaii is processed by the Honolulu Plantation Co. There is no evidence that its plant capacity is being enlarged or that other producers are preparing to refine sugar for export. On the other hand, as revealed by the various reports of the United States Tariff Commission, the continental refining industry has an overcapacity of more than 50 percent, and the excess capacity has been increasing year by year. It is reasonable for Congress to enact legislation maintaining the status quo so as to permit no further immediate inroads upon continental refiners.

The Government's brief went on to state that "due process of law" does not require uniformity of treatment when Congress is legislating under the Territorial powers.

Judge Bailey, of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, wrote a decision adverse in every particular to the Hawaiian sugar industry. The Sugar Act of 1934 was upheld as being constitutional. The quotas, both raw and refined, on Hawaii were found to be not discriminatory in any regard. The court said:

> In my opinion, therefore, Congress has the power to limit the importation of sugar from Hawaii, and that limitation in no way deprives the plaintiffs of property without due process of law.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. OSMERS].

Mr. OSMERS. Mr. Chairman, in recent months spokesmen for the sugar industries of Hawaii and Puerto Rico have appeared before the committees of this House and claimed that these islands do not receive any bounties from consumers because the financing of the sugar program is on a self-liquidating basis. Hawaii and Puerto Rico claim that the $65,000,000 annual sales tax on sugar is "taken out" of the receipts which should have gone to them as sugar producers, and that, in fact, the bounties are not a burden, either upon consumers or upon the Public Treasury. The claim is made that the $17,000,000 cash bounties which go to the sugar industries of Hawaii and Puerto Rico each year are not bounties at all, but are a sort of "rebate" of funds which normally would have gone to them as producers in the absence of the sales tax.

I maintain that these claims are an affront to the intelligence of every Member of this House. Let us look at the basic facts. The sugar producers of continental United States and Hawaii and Puerto Rico have appeared for years before Congress to plead that they must be protected against the producers of raw sugar outside our tariff walls. Pages and pages of testimony given before Congress and the Tariff Commission are available which show that sugar producers under the American flag have always asked for some type of subsidy in order that they might continue to exist.

Before the Sugar Act of 1934 was enacted, the subsidies for sugar producers, which, of course, also went to Hawaii and Puerto Rico, took the form of a tariff on raw sugar. Under the Tariff Act of 1909, that duty was 1.35 cents a pounds; in 1913 it was 1 cent a pound; in 1921 it was 1.60 cents a pound; and in 1922 it was jacked up to 1.77 cents a pound; in 1930 it reached an all-time high up to that time of 2 cents a pound.

Now, unlike other agricultural commodities, the singular thing about these import duties on raw sugar was that they raised the domestic price of sugar over the world price by an amount equal to the duty. For example, in 1909, when the duty on raw sugar was 1.35 cents a pound, the Hawaiians and Puerto Ricans received a price enhancement or subsidy of 1.35 cents a pound. With each tariff schedule after 1909 these sugar subsidies became higher, until in 1930 they reached the ad valorem equivalent of 190 percent.

But in 1934 the sugar producers of Hawaii and Puerto Rico, along with the producers in continental United States, came before Congress and declared that even though they were receiving the highest protection in their history—2 cents a pound, or 190 percent ad valorem—that that protection was not sufficient to give them a fair income. They wanted more assistance. And Congress enacted an entirely new type of sugar legislation in 1934—the quota system—which has raised the subsidization from 2 cents a pound to 2.51 cents a pound, and this has raised the ad valorem equivalent protection from 190 percent to 214 percent.

While it may be well for various groups and industries to come here and speak of their selfish interests, our primary concern is with the consumer of the United States; and I contend that we are now giving the producers of sugar, all of them under the American flag, a subsidy of 2.51 cents a pound under the present regulations. I say to you that we should certainly adopt the McCormack amendment and thereby protect the one industry in the entire sugar system that is completely unionized, paying top wages—that is, paying high taxes—and that is not coming here and asking for your assistance. It is not here asking for your subsidy. It is prepared to carry on its business under a free system if that would be necessary.

Of the many Members of the House who have come before us today to speak on behalf of the sugar-beet growers and sugar-beet refiners of the United States, there has not been one that I have heard who has said one word that would prove that the adoption of the McCormack amendment would work the slightest harm upon the beet-sugar producers or beet-sugar refiners of the United States. The very men who come here today to oppose the continuance of the quotas upon Puerto Rico and Hawaii are those who came before you in 1934, 1936, and 1937, and urged that those quotas be placed in the law.

I should like to read briefly, if I may, what the Secretary of Agriculture has had to say about sugar in response to a protest in 1938 that the subsidies of the sugar producers of the United States and of the American islands were too low. He said:

The sum of these protective devices is the equivalent of a specific tariff duty of $2.65 per 100 pounds of sugar, raw value, the equivalent of an ad valorem tariff rate of 240 percent. This is the equivalent to a tax of approximately $2.70 per capita on a population of 129,000,000 persons.

I repeat that on the average the subsidies given American sugar producers under the Sugar Acts of 1934 and 1937 are the highest that they have ever received and this applies to Hawaii and Puerto Rico. For those tropical producers, some of whom are also refiners, to appear before this House with a claim that their subsidy is self-liquidating is absurd.

Now let us analyze specifically how the Sugar Act has increased sugar subsidies. Subsidization under the Sugar Act appears in two forms—through special quota prices and through cash bounties. The quotas limit the quantities of sugar which can come to the United States each year, and by so limiting those quantities, the domestic price of sugar is pegged well above the world price. Whereas the domestic price since 1934 has averaged 3.19 cents per pound, the world price has averaged 1.17 cents per pound and the subsidization, through quotas, has been the difference or 2.02 cents per pound. In other words, since 1934, the price protection through quotas has been almost exactly the same in amount as the duty protection through the tariff existing under the tariff schedule of 1930.

But this is not all, because the Sugar Act provided that there would be a sales tax of one-half cent a pound—raw value—on sugar and that this tax should create a fund most of which would be paid back to producers. Allowing for the temporary interruption in the sugar plan, which occurred after the Supreme Court's decision relating to processing taxes, we find that since 1934 the direct bounty payments to sugar producers have averaged forty-nine one-hundredths of a cent per pound. Now, we must add the two subsidies; the first is the 2.02 cents per pound which arises because the quotas keep prices up in the United States, and the second is the forty-nine one-hundredths of a cent per pound which arises from the cash subsidies. The total subsidy, therefore, is the figure which I have mentioned above, or 2.51 cents a pound.

Now, let us assume for the moment that the sales tax on sugar has "come out of" the producer's proceeds rather than the consumer's purse. But whether the producers paid it or not has no relevance whatever to the issue involved. The net financial effect of the operations of the two kinds of subsidies under the Sugar Acts since 1934 has been to give the American producers 3.68 cents per pound for their raw sugar at a time when the actual normal value of that sugar in the world markets was 1.17 cents per pound. The difference is a subsidy of 2.51 cents per pound, which is the equivalent on an ad valorem basis of 214 percent, the highest subsidy on record for sugar producers.

Now, if there is anyone in this House who doubts the validity of these computations, I refer him to the United States Tariff Commission Report No. 73, page 36 (1934), and to the public statements repeatedly made by the Secretary of Agriculture who has administered the Sugar Act since 1934.

But let us look specifically at the statements of the Secretary of Agriculture to get the story since 1934. In 1938 the sugar producers of the United States and the American islands complained to the Secretary that their sugar subsidies were too low. These complaints were repeatedly made, and finally the Secretary, in an open letter of March 1, 1938, analyzed them fully. How much was the total subsidy arising under all of the protective features of the Sugar Act, according to the Secretary? He said:

The sum of these * * * protective devices is the equivalent of a specific tariff duty of $2.65 per 100 pounds of sugar, raw value—or on the basis of the current world price of 96° raw sugar—namely, $1.10 per 100 pounds, the equivalent of an ad valorem tariff rate of 240 percent.

The Secretary continued to point out that—

This is equivalent to a tax of approximately $2.70 per capita on a population of 129,000,000 persons.

Multiplying $2.70 by 129,000,000, I find that this places a burden upon consumers of approximately $350,000,000 a year.

Some spokesmen for Hawaii and Puerto Rico say that the quota system is nothing more than a protective device, as was established under the tariff system for sugar. This claim is groundless because, whereas the duties of the last 30 years on raw sugar ranged on an ad valorem basis between 22 and 190 percent, the Sugar Act has afforded a subsidy of some 214 percent. The truth of the matter is that the protection which has been afforded to sugar producers of Hawaii and Puerto Rico since 1934 is the highest ever given them in their history, and the total amount of money taken away from the 129,000,000 American sugar consumers in order to support the American tropics has reached all-time high levels. And still these heavily subsidized American tropical producers clamor for more subsidies, and they have complained bitterly against what they characterize as low prices for sugar in recent years.

The United States Tariff Commission in 1933 threw some light upon this problem of subsidies to sugar producers. It found that—

On the basis of a comparison of the cost of production of cane and beet sugar in continental United States and on cane sugar in Hawaii that the costs of production of cane sugar in Cuba, the principal competing country, * * * the Commission finds that the equalization of costs would require a reduction * * * from 2 to 1.5 cents per pound.

But now we find, under the Sugar Act, that instead of there being a reduction from 2 to 1.5 cents per pound in sugar protection there has been an actual increase from 2 to 2.51 cents per pound.

And I have one more final comment to make upon these enormous subsidies which go to sugar producers in the American tropics. These producers have claimed that the consumer is not burdened by a $35,000,000 a year subsidy because she now purchases her sugar at prices which are about equal to those which prevailed back in 1909–14. This camouflage does not hide the fact that consumers could be purchasing their sugar in this country not at 5½ cents a pound but at 2½ cents or 3 cents a pound. The cost of producing sugar on the plantations in Cuba and other low-cost sugar islands has been reduced greatly since the years before the last World War. There is no reason on earth why the benefits of technological improvements in the production of cane and raw sugar should not be enjoyed by the consumer. A Ford automobile back in 1910 cost $1,800. It now costs $700. A pair of silk stockings back in 1910 cost $2 or $3. They now cost 75 cents. A farm tractor cost $2,500, and it can now be purchased for $500 or $600. An automobile tire which cost $50 in 1914 can now be purchased for about $20.

Why have these reductions in prices come about? Everyone knows the answer. Ingenuity and scientific attainment in the laboratory, forest, field, and factory have cut production costs and hence price.

The American standard of living is the highest in the world because American consumers have had the opportunity to reap the benefits of industrial progress. When sugar producers state that the price of sugar at retail in 1940 is the same as it was in 1914, they are actually, in effect, acknowledging their own inefficiency.

It seems to me that Hawaii and Puerto Rico should be well satisfied with the handsome treatment that they are now receiving from American consumers. They should not be permitted by Congress to use the profits from their sugar subsidies for the purpose of expanding their refining. Congress should restore the quotas on Hawaiian and Puerto Rican refined sugar or defeat the Cummings bill.

This table shows that under the Sugar Acts of 1934 and 1937 the protection per pound for American sugar producers is the highest on record and that the ad valorem equivalent of that protection is also highest. It destroys the claim currently made that the enormous sugar benefits are in some way self-liquidating and are not a burden upon consumers.

Average ad valorem equivalent of duty and other protection for raw-sugar producers under tariffs of 1909, 1913, 1921, 1922, 1930, and under the sugar acts since 1934 [1]

Act of—	Dutiable value of raw sugar	Protection	Rate of protection (ad valorem)

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I realize that the heart of those who have spoken and who will speak and who may vote against the amendment I shall offer is not in the position they take, either by expression or action. I know that in their own minds they would like to be with my amendment, and that they occupy a very trying and embarrassing position today. I have no controversy with them, although I sympathize with their position—one which is absolutely contrary to the positions they have consistently taken in the past. Despite the fact that they have left their loyal friends of the East and the North and the other sections of the country who will support my amendment, I want them to know that, while it is with reluctance we see them do so, it is with a profound appreciation on our part of the expediency which prompts that action, and that this debate, as far as those who favor the amendment I shall offer is concerned, will, I hope and I am confident, be conducted along a line that will not increase the embarrassment that my friend the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS] and those who are with him today suffer in their outward position in opposition to the amendment I shall offer, in view of their inward feeling of support of my amendment.

I could conclude my argument on this occasion by quoting some of the statements made only a few years ago by some of those who will oppose the amendment I will offer today. I do this, not for the purposes of embarrassing them but because I think it is the best argument that could be advanced in favor of my amendment. Certainly, if the other Members of the House are not in the embarrassing position of the gentleman from Colorado and others who are similarly situated, we are justified on this occasion in weighing the utterances the same gentlemen made on other occasions for the purpose of assisting us in making up our minds in connection with the amendment I shall offer.

The gentleman from Colorado only a few years ago said, in part:

I do not want to work a hardship against anyone in the United States or anyone in the sugar business, but when you talk about people being discriminated against you must remember that Hawaii and Puerto Rico are allowed to produce all the sugar they can consume, and they are allowed to produce and sell on the world market as much as they please, but the amount they can ship to the United States is limited and the amount they can ship of refined sugar is limited, and it should be limited.

The gentleman further said, on page 8309 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in August 1937:

I do say that the people that are operating the refining industry of the United States and have been for 150 years are entitled to the same protection that the beet growers are—

That is all we ask, and the gentleman from Colorado said that in 1937. He further stated—and they are entitled to the same protection that we grant Hawaii and Puerto Rico, and we should say to them that they can produce just as many pounds of refined sugar as they have ever produced.

Then in a colloquy with the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Maverick, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS], in reply to an inquiry, said—

It would not be a good bill for the refiners.

If the refiners' provision were stricken out. That is what Mr. Maverick was referring to. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS] said:

It would not be a good bill for the refiners. It would ruin the refiners.

Those are not JOHN McCORMACK'S words, those are the words of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS], who today opposes the amendment I am going to offer to the bill, the very thing he said would ruin the refiners if it were eliminated from the bill. Then he said—but it would take care of the beet growers.

The argument made in 1937 by my friend the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS] is the best argument that could be made in favor of the amendment that I will offer. I will speak later on other aspects of the amendment that I will offer.

There were arguments made by other Members in 1937 who now oppose outwardly my amendment, who, on that occasion strongly supported the very proposition that I will offer in my amendment, but on account of my time expiring, I will have no opportunity to make reference to such remarks.

However, it is a fact that those who oppose my amendment were its strongest supporters in 1937. Such inconsistency is hard to undertsand and appreciate.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING].

Mr. King. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes; I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to ask the gentleman, first, if he carefully listened to the free-trade speech made by our friend the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. OSMERS] a few minutes ago?

Mr. KING. Yes; I did.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And if he detected in that language this deep-rooted philosophy, namely, that the Congress of the United States has been guilty of protecting a domestic sugar industry made up of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Louisiana, and Florida cane and our domestic beet. I wonder if my friend from Hawaii detected the philosophy in the speech made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. OSMERS] to the effect that we must do away with all protection; that we must bring to our country raw sugar from offshore areas, which means Cuba and other foreign countries, in the absence of protection, and put it through the seacoast cane refineries, so our people will be dependent upon offshore, foreign lands for their sugar and pay whatever price may have to be paid, and so there will be no continental sugar industry or domestic sugar industry.

Mr. OSMERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield so I may answer the question?

Mr. KING. I am sorry, but you gentlemen have got me betwixt and between here with only 10 minutes, and you will use all of my time.

I want to answer the gentleman's question by saying that the whole basis of the refiners' argument is that they must have, free of any excessive tariff—I grant you that they are willing to pay a low tariff—all sources of raw supply, and then they will sell it in the American market in competition with American sugar. The tariff is levied to protect all domestic producers, and the lower tariff was offset by an excise tax that was the equivalent of the amount the tariff was reduced.

Mr. OSMERS rose.

Mr. KING. I am sorry I cannot yield to the gentleman from New Jersey, because I want to reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, the very ablest proponent of the refiners' interests here in the Congress, a forceful speaker, and, of course, a man whose sincerity and whose concern about the workers in his district is above any question whatsoever. It happens that the Revere Refining Co. is in his district in Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. No; one of the plants of the American Refinery.

Mr. KING. I accept the correction, but I want to talk about the Revere refinery, which is in an adjacent district.

When this bill came up in 1937 I asked if the gentleman from Massachusetts knew how much sugar they got in that refinery from Hawaii. He did not know, but I did. It was 30,000 tons, and since then there has been a trade arrangement between the Hawaiian sugar industry and the National Sugar Refining Co. to assure them the whole 300,000 tons normally received in the East from Hawaii, and they will use every bit of it. It used to be scattered up and down the coast in 17 refineries. It is now concentrated in the New York area. So the great excitement of my distinguished friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON], about the displacement of labor and the concern of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] about the displacement of labor does not pertain now.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I must refuse to yield any further because, after all, I represent about 15 percent of the total amount of sugar consumed in this country, and that is the only reason the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] has been kind enough to give me 10 minutes time, and I am sure the gentleman will get time to ask me any question under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. Chairman, this question does not involve whether we ship 29,000 tons or whether we employ or do not employ 1,000 or more men. This goes to the basic principle of what is the responsibility of Congress toward an incorporated Territory and an insular possession.

I may also say to the membership of this House that we depend upon Congress to apply the democratic principles on which this Nation was founded, and I want to appeal to the Members that when they vote on this issue not to be so sectional but to bear in mind that they have a greater responsibility toward my constituents than they have for any other part of the United States other than their own district, for the very reason that as a Delegate from the Territory of Hawaii, I stand here without a vote.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] has been attempting to convict the gentleman from Colorado out of his own mouth in a way, and yet he knows perfectly well the practical politics of the situation. I have repeatedly discussed the fact that I was here fighting for an abstract principle and one gentleman I was talking with said, "Did you ever see an abstract principle win over the realities?" Of course, we have seen abstract principles win. If abstract principles did not win there would not be any United States.

I have talked with other Congressmen and they have said to me, "Mr. KING, you are right in principle and we would like to go along with you, but, unfortunately, the people in our districts insist that we support the McCormack amendment." Then we have another angle to the matter and that is if the McCormack amendment does not carry, then the people who supported the McCormack amendment are going to defeat the legislation. They would ruin the domestic-sugar industry in order to gain their point. They demand a little additional protection against Hawaii, Virgin Islands, and Puerto Rico, the three voteless and subordinate parts of the United States, and they would ruin the whole sugar industry in order to get that protection, when they already have protection against every other source of sugar importation and every guarantee to them of a monopoly of the refining business that represents a very substantial part of the entire business they have ever done.

Certainly, there has been shrinkage in the business. There has been a shrinkage in every line of business. They have lost their export trade. There was a time when they exported refined sugar in great quantities; but other nations have gone into the business of subsidizing their own sugar producers.

Now, to get back to the tariff: There is no agricultural product that can be raised in this country, or very few of them, and very specialized products, that does not need some protection against foreign countries where they have different standards of living.

I hope I shall have time to speak under the 5-minute rule, but I do want to stress the point that a principle is involved in this legislation, aside from the material interests involved, insofar as it affects Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

I want to stress another point, and that is that I doubt the legality of this amendment that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] is going to sponsor. I am not an attorney and I cannot speak with authority, but I question whether it is a constitutional act to discriminate against Territories and insular possessions in a matter of this kind, in a limitation of manufacturing.

If it were proposed to make this limitation on refining for the State of Florida, would this House for a minute be willing to do it? Florida refines some sugar and ships the rest to Savannah, Ga., as I understand it. If I offered an amendment to the McCormack amendment saying that—

Provided, however, That no additional sugar shall be refined in the State of Florida than is at present being refined.

This House would not listen to it for a moment.

If the Territory of Hawaii were a contiguous part of the mainland—say we were down there in the subtropical area of Texas, down around Corpus Christi or Brownsville—would you dream for a minute of barring refined sugar from that territory? Would this Congress have passed a bill limiting the industrial development of Oklahoma, New Mexico, or Arizona when they were incorporated Territories? When we came under the American flag and were incorporated as a Territory those three States were still Territories. Twenty-nine of the sovereign States have been incorporated Territories at one time or another. I doubt if any of them ever had a restrictive law passed on their manufactured products or industrial development that singled them out and made it a special rule for the Territory and not equally applicable to the several States of the Union.

The President has expressed in the strongest possible language his disapproval of this provision. He said he only signed the Sugar Act of 1937 because the spokesmen for the domestic sugar industry assured him it never would come up again. We know that the Rules Committee had to accept this special rule in order to get this matter before the House. I am not questioning the wisdom of that. Men who are interested in the welfare of the domestic sugar industry realized that they had to have this legislation and it might be a wise thing to bring it before the House and face the issue. There is not a man speaking for the McCormack amendment who is not speaking for a specific sectional interest. I appeal to those who do not have such sectional interest, who do not have to go along under any pressure, to disregard that sectional appeal.

Unfortunately as time has gone on, because the other 29 Territories have come in as States, today we find there is new language in American history. They are now "insular possessions," "offshore areas," "noncontiguous areas," a tropical country," as if there was any difference between an American whether he lived in Hawaii or Alaska or California or any other part of the United States.

Now, the issue is not very material in my case. As a matter of fact, I am speaking for the rule which has already passed and for the bill which will come up with or without amendment, merely because Hawaii has always attempted to cooperate for the advancement and welfare and benefit of the domestic sugar industry. If the bill fails of passage, we will not suffer, if we suffer at all, as much as the 17 beet-sugar States, but after all sugar is a commodity that we are entitled to raise in Hawaii, where we have been raising it for 100 years. We supplied the American market for 100 years.

Mr. Chairman, through Congress this huge Nation of ours expresses its will and the great American democracy applies its principles of fair play and equal justice to all its citizens. The responsibility lies upon the membership of Congress, despite the urgency of sectional demands, to keep in mind that higher duty to legislate in national matters for the whole of America, and not solely for one's own district or section.

In the matter before us I appeal to this House to take the broader view, to enact legislation that will stand the test of justice and equity. We all know that when the pending bill, H. R. 9654, is read for amendments under the 5-minute rule, an amendment will be offered to replace in section 207 of the Sugar Act of 1937 certain provisions that have now expired, which would by law forbid the Territory of Hawaii, and Puerto Rico, from marketing, in the form of direct consumption sugar, more than a small portion of the sugar those two communities produce.

I may have time to speak against that proposal and to refute the arguments made by its proponents. But I want now to urge upon my colleagues to vote that amendment down, not so much because of any material interest involved or harm done to Hawaii and Puerto Rico, but because it is bad legislation, which would put this House's stamp of approval on an invidious, an un-American discrimination between citizens.

Enacted 6 years ago as an emergency measure, extended 3 years ago as a temporary provision of what is primarily an agricultural control bill, and not a bill to limit manufacturing, it is now desired to give this iniquitous feature the sanction of Congress for a third time, to establish as a precedent that certain parts of the United States are not entitled to the same treatment accorded other parts of the country.

This is a dangerous policy, Mr. Chairman, of doubtful legality, which in this comparatively small matter changes America from a democracy to an empire, and relegates a Territory of the United States to the position of a colony. In a letter on sugar legislation, dated April 11 of this year, which President Roosevelt addressed to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the President said, in part:

> The people of the Territory of Hawaii and the possessions of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands are American citizens who compose some of these minority groups in our population, with local governments that lack the protection of Statehood.
> If this circumstance were not given adequate consideration it would be possible to destroy by legislation the livelihood of our citizens in the insular parts of the United States through the enactment of discriminatory prohibitions against their products; and they would possess no legal power to take counter-measures in self-defense. Such a course of action, as I have pointed out on a previous occasion, would be tantamount to an imperialistic classification of citizens, and a tyrannical abuse of minority rights that is utterly contrary to the American concept of fairness and democracy. Among the cases in point is the proposal to reinstate the former discrimination against the refining of sugar in the insular parts of the United States.

On last Friday the President reaffirmed his stand.

Mr. Chairman, this is my third term in Congress. I value highly the privilege of serving in this body, and I enjoy the companionship with representatives from all parts of this great Nation. But I have been impressed during my 6 years here by two astonishing facts. First, that many Members of this House have largely forgotten what the status of an incorporated Territory of the United States is. It is a handicap that my distinguished and able friend, the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND] shares with me in our efforts to obtain the recognition to which our constituencies are entitled.

Twenty-nine of the forty-eight sovereign States were at one time incorporated Territories. But as the mainland Territories came in as States, until only Alaska and Hawaii remained in the former category, the status of a Territory, fixed by law and precedent since the Northwest Ordinance first created a territorial form of government, has become somewhat vague in many minds. We have become noncontiguous territories, offshore areas, insular possessions, something not quite American. There is a new note in our legislation which distinguishes between continental United States and noncontinental United States.

As a natural result the position of Delegates in Congress is less well understood than formerly, when there were several Delegates here at one time. I am as often as not addressed as "Commissioner," indicating this confusion of ideas. I am under no illusions as to my place here, an honorable position, well established in American history, and graced by many great American statesmen; but nevertheless that of a voteless Member of this body—a Member of Congress but not a Representative. In all sincerity, I ask, does that not make it more incumbent upon those who do vote, especially those whose interests are not involved in the issue, to accept a greater responsibility toward my constituency, and every other community similarly handicapped? Is it not an obligation upon every Representative to lean over backward to do justice to a politically impotent part of the Nation? If this is too much to ask, then is not the natural solution to grant Hawaii a political status which would once and for all put it on an equality with the several States?

It is proposed to limit the refining of sugar in Hawaii to about 3 percent of the amount Hawaii is permitted to produce. Florida, I understand, sends all of its quota as raw sugar to a refinery in Savannah, there to be processed for the market. Would this House accept a proposal to deny Florida the right to refine its own sugar if it desired to do so, and to "freeze" through legislation the present practice? I hardly think so. If Hawaii, as a Territory, were a contiguous part of the North American Continent, would this restriction on its industrial development be tolerated? If not, then does the Pacific Ocean, which separates Hawaii from the mainland, create a barrier between us that makes us less worthy than the citizens of a mainland Territory, if there were one? Would such a law as this have been passed by Congress to restrict the growth of Oklahoma, Arizona, or New Mexico when they were Territories, a position they held when Hawaii came under the American flag and was incorporated as a Territory? If the proposed legislation is impossible for a State, or for a Territory located on the mainland, how can it be justified for Hawaii?

Curiously, even Mr. Dalton, speaking for the cane-sugar refiners, whom I quoted earlier in the day, recognizes our status, but still justifies the restrictions he demands as an offset to the quota system. I quote from his statement of May 3, 1940:

> Hawaii is a part of the United States, and the people in Hawaii are citizens of the United States. Hawaii is just as much a part of the United States as New York is. I want that to get into the record also.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States recently held its annual meeting here in Washington. Among the resolutions it adopted as expressing the policy of American business, under the heading "Territories", is the following:

> In Federal legislation affecting the economic and other interests of the organized territories of the United States there should be no discrimination against the Territories. There should be no special limitations placed upon the utilization of their resources, and Government-directed interferences in their development should be opposed. Citizens of the United States conducting their enterprises in these Territories are entitled to equal treatment and protection in Federal legislation and in executive action with citizens in other portions of the United States.

Shall Congress be less liberal than that reputedly conservative organization? Or is the championship of the weak now a conservative principle, while a new kind of liberalism adopts the slogan of might makes right? I cannot believe this body, almost the last refuge of the democratic principles on which this Nation was founded, can so far forget the great ideals for which America stands.

Mr. Chairman, the second strong impression I shall carry back with me from my service here, when the vissitudes of politics retire me to private life, is the amazing lack of information about Hawaii that exists in Congress. Because it is so difficult to supply the information in casual conversation, or in a few minutes on the floor of the House or in committee, I have urged my colleagues on every possible occasion to visit Hawaii for themselves. I wish it were possible for every Member to become familiar with Hawaii at first hand.

Because that has been impracticable, we are an easy victim of misrepresentation, sometimes inadvertent, sometimes deliberate—the propaganda of ruthless, self-seeking interests. We are attacked from many angles, on our local economy, as though that were different from the typical American community in any essential particular, because of our racial make-up, as though the question of race can properly be raised as between fellow Americans in this Nation dedicated to the proposition that neither race, creed, nor class can be invoked by one citizen against another; on the question of cheap labor, when it has repeatedly been shown that our labor conditions meet the highest American standards.

I have never replied in kind, but have patiently tried to correct such misstatements on the floor and in committee, and occasionally in speeches and addresses later extended in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. But it is difficult for the truth to catch up with a lie. The same old hoary fictions about Hawaii keep bobbing up again and again. It should be noted that no one who has ever been to Hawaii credits such statements, but rather knows they are untruths through personal knowledge.

On the specific question of labor I should like to read from the statement of Mr. Otis E. Mulliken, Chief of the Labor Section of the Sugar Division of the Department of Agriculture, made before the Civil Liberties Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor on May 20, 1940—only a month ago—two brief but authoritative quotations:

> As a result of relatively high earnings, year-round employment opportunities, and valuable perquisites, the standard of living maintained by most Hawaiian sugarcane workers is superior to that maintained in any other sugarcane area of the United States with the possible exception of the resident laborers in Florida.

And again, in his conclusion, he says:

> The sugar workers in Florida and Hawaii constitute in many ways a privileged class of agricultural labor.

Already the propaganda machine of the refiners' lobby, against which the President inveighed in scathing terms, is at work. Members are being solicited to support the proposed amendment, and, if it fails of adoption, to vote against the bill. Organizations are sending in resolutions and petitions, often passed without consideration or understanding of the problems involved. Wires and letters from sources in their respective districts attempt to influence individual Members. Against this avalanche, what power have I, except only to beg this House to vote on the merits of the legislation, regardless of this inspired pressure, often coupled as it is with veiled threats of political retribution?

Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I have not the time nor perhaps the oratorical ability to present the facts about Hawaii to this House as they should be presented. But I would ask the Members to accept as a starting point the simple truth that we are, after all, just another community under the American flag; not an exotic, foreign South Sea island country, but a good, solid American community. We are an integral part of the American scene, of the American economy; we share all the burdens and responsibilities of our common citizenship and, in the main, enjoy all the blessings and privileges of that status.

If the Members of this body will use as their guide in arriving at a decision on the pending legislation the same considerations which they would apply if it affected their own districts or adjacent communities, I will be satisfied and will feel that Hawaii's cause has received just treatment at their hands.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the Delegate from Hawaii has expired.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE].

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the resolution now before us to continue the present sugar law for 1 year was the best compromise that could be reached in our Committee on Agriculture to protect the domestic sugar industry until further legislation could be agreed upon by the various elements in the industry.

I regret that our efforts to secure badly needed amendments to the 1937 Sugar Act for price stabilization and increased domestic quotas were unsuccessful. This was due largely to the powerful influence of the cane refiners on the eastern seaboard, who are naturally interested in refining raw sugar from Cuba and other offshore areas. Sugar legislation always has been, and probably always will be, controversial. Briefly, this is the situation.

We consume approximately six and one-half million tons of sugar annually—about 100 pounds per capita. In order to protect the domestic sugar-beet and cane growers it has been necessary to supplement the tariff with a quota system. Sugar quotas are allocated as follows: Approximately 30 percent of our domestic consumption of sugar is allocated to the continental producers of sugar beets and sugarcane; 42 percent to Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Philippines, and the Virgin Islands; and 28 percent to Cuba, including a negligible amount to other foreign countries. The tariff affects only these imports from Cuba and other foreign countries. Consequently, in order to prevent demoralization of the domestic market from a flood of sugar from offshore areas, these quotas have been established. Naturally, in order to impose quotas on Hawaii, which is an integral part of the United States, and on our other possessions, it is necessary to provide marketing quotas for continental production.

The 17 Western States producing sugar beets have for the last 2 years produced in excess of their quota. Florida and Louisiana production also exceeds the quota. The same situation prevails in reference to Puerto Rico, Hawaii, the Virgin Islands, and the Philippines. In fact, there is a large world surplus of sugar. These marketing quotas, inadequate as they may be, are the only safeguards at present against dumping and a demoralized domestic market. All areas are demanding increased quotas for this market that can consume only so much sugar. The Philippines are guaranteed a duty-free quota in this market under the Philippine Independence Act. Therefore, if we increase domestic quotas, we must reduce the quota correspondingly from some other source. The only quotas that we could possibly reduce in order to aid domestic producers are those of Cuba and the small quota assigned to other foreign countries. Cuba has a quota of approximately 1,900,000 tons, of which 375,000 tons may be refined or direct consumption sugar. This limitation on refined is in the Sugar Act of 1937. I have been, and still am, in favor of reducing this refined quota by 200,000 tons and allocating it to the domestic growers. Suffice it to say that our efforts along this line have been stymied.

Now let me point out the conflict of interest between the sugarcane refiners and the domestic sugar-beet and sugarcane growers. The sugarcane refiners, engaged almost exclusively in refining raw sugar from the offshore areas, supply 70 percent of the sugar consumed in continental United States. They are opposed to the development of the sugar-beet industry in the United States for the simple reason that when more beet sugar is produced and sold in the United States, it tends to reduce their market for Cuban sugar, 80 percent of which they refine. The United States Cane Sugar Refining Association has enlisted the aid of their labor organizations and certain consumer groups to oppose any further sugar legislation that will be beneficial to continental sugar growers. You are all familiar with the propaganda and the methods being pursued to kill this resolution.

There are less than 18,000 employees in these cane-sugar refining plants, whereas in the beet-sugar industry alone there are 70,000 sugar-beet growers, 100,000 field workers, and more than 10,000 men employed in the beet-sugar factories who would be directly affected if this continuing resolution failed of enactment. We cannot afford to permit these quotas to lapse and allow the continental United States to become the dumping ground of the world for sugar during this critical period. Sugar is now selling within one-tenth of a cent per pound of the all-time low price. We must maintain our internal economy as an essential element in our national-defense program.

Let me remind those of you who are particularly concerned about the cane-sugar refiners that if this continuing resolution is not enacted, Cuba, which is now restricted to 375,000 tons of refined sugar, will be able to ship in unlimited quantities of refined sugar as well as raw sugar. All other foreign countries are restricted to 26,000 tons of refined sugar under the Sugar Act, but if this resolution fails to pass, they will be able to ship in unlimited quantities.

Importations of liquid sugar are prohibited under our present Sugar Act from all countries except Cuba and Santo Domingo and they are limited to the equivalent of approximately 40,000 tons of raw sugar. If this resolution fails to pass, they and all other countries will be able to ship into this country unlimited quantities of liquid sugar, and it has been estimated that without these restrictions importations of liquid sugar would soon reach the equivalent of 200,000 tons raw value.

The seaboard refiners and their employees will also sacrifice a great deal if this resolution is not continued. Of course, if the domestic sugar-beet industry is destroyed, the cane refiners might increase their volume and regain a monopoly on the domestic market. The consumers are fully protected under the present law. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST].

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, Cuba ships into this country great quantities of blackstrap molasses every day. Blackstrap is refuse from the sugar-refining industry. At one time it was a menace and a hindrance and an expense to that industry and the refiners spent much time and money to get rid of it. It was like garbage that had to be dumped into the sea. Then chemistry stepped in and showed the world how to make alcohol out of this refuse matter, and the result is that today it takes the place of corn and grain and vegetables in the distillation of spirits. It is introduced into this country with scarcely any tariff and thus the market for American grain, corn, and other vegetable products in this industry is ruined.

I hold and have ever held that the American market should be preserved for the American farmer just as is done in manufacturing and industrial life. For example, if you will go to Peoria, Ill., you will find great distilling interests that manufacture and distill great quantities of alcohol, spirits, and whiskies. Peoria is only one of many places where this is done. But there come from Cuba every day into this one distilling center solid trainloads of blackstrap molasses which is converted into commercial alcohol by the distilleries. At one time this same city used every day about 35,000 bushels of corn for distillation. But now this corn has been displaced and the old blackstrap garbage is used instead; 35,000 bushels of corn a day are displaced and scarcely any tariff or duty is laid upon the blackstrap, and American agriculture in every section of the land is injured by such importations. The farmers in this country should have this market instead of the peon laborers of the West Indies.

Moreover, great banking interests in New York City are interested in the refineries in Cuba and these great banking institutions are not entitled, and the refining industry down there is not entitled, to take away the market from vegetable and grain producers and farmers of continental United States without paying custom duties. There should be adequate tariff protection given to these American growers and farmers against this importation. Commercial alcohol in the United States should be made from the products grown here.

I recognize that we have a duty to perform to Cuba, because in 1898, by our War with Spain, we liberated it from the terrible conditions which Spain had imposed there. We cannot allow Cuba to go back into the barbarous, disgraceful conditions that then existed. She was our ward and is now our ward to a certain extent. This obligation to Cuba is placed upon us by every consideration of Christianity and philanthropy, and we should always discharge that obligation faithfully and manfully. But I contend that this task should not be placed alone upon the back of farmers, as is now done. This is simply another instance of the unfair way in which agriculture is put down at the foot of the class, and how other interests, especially large financial interests, are given advantages at the expense of folks who till the soil and raise vegetables and grains for our people. We should have adequate tariffs for the introduction of blackstrap, and this tariff should be high enough to put our own grain and vegetable products on equal terms. The American market belongs to the American farmer.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I think more preference should be given to our domestically produced sugar. It is my understanding our sugar is refined to a higher degree than imported sugar. Not enough consideration is being given to the great difference in labor costs in our country and those in the places from which we are importing sugar.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of the time on this side to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, the Members of the House probably have their minds made up on this proposition and I am not very much inclined to take any of their time. I wish to make two or three observations, however; one is that the domestic sugar industry is made up of five families—Hawaii, Puerto Rico, continental beet, Louisiana and Florida cane, and the Virgin Islands. Insofar as my position is concerned, whether as a private citizen or as a public official, I stand for the domestic sugar industry when it comes to sugar, and when I say domestic sugar industry I mean exactly the domestic sugar industry which operates on the land and through factories owned by American citizens, under the American flag.

I have said to the people of my district, who represent part of the domestic sugar industry, that I do not propose to become entangled in the bulrushes of the seacoast refiners' game which has, since its inception, stood fundamentally and absolutely for the importation of sugar into this country free of duty. I hold no grudge against the seacoast refiners for taking such a position and I hope that they will be big enough and broad enough to hold no grudge against me for taking my position in the interest of the domestic sugar industry.

We are sending to Puerto Rico millions of dollars every year for the purpose of sustaining relief among American citizens under the American flag. Puerto Rico and Hawaii are not in position to supply us with our total requirements of sugar. We must depend on those two areas plus the continental beet and the continental cane, or else go to foreign lands, such as Cuba and elsewhere.

When you start breaking down the families of the domestic sugar industry and singling them out, Puerto Rico today, Hawaii tomorrow, and when you have gone, say, two-fifths of the way, the balance of the distance will be simple, because you know and I know that the continental areas, beet and cane cannot maintain protection with Puerto Rico and Hawaii out of the picture. So I am not today or at any other time going to be moved or engineered into a position where I will turn against my own nest. There is no kind of a political threat that can scare me into that proposition.

May I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] that I am not one of those from the beet areas who wants to go along with his amendment. If the Members from the other beet areas want to support it, that is their proposition. If they think they can harmonize the interests of the seacoast, free-trade refiners, who will always plead for the right to bring in raw sugar from the offshore areas free of duty, who know that Hawaii and Puerto Rico cannot supply our sugar and thus say, "We will take it from Cuba and other foreign countries," I repeat, if my beet friends want to go along with that philosophy, well and good. I shall not travel that road today nor at any other time, and when I get home I will try to get my beet sugar growers to see the position I have taken. If they choose not to see my position and want to go along with the idea that they can harmonize the continental production with these seacoast, free-trade philosophers, then that is the choice they take.

Mr. OSMERS rose.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have had some opportunity to observe the operations of the seacoast refiners as against the continental beet and cane producers, and as the gentleman from New Jersey, who now asks me to yield, set the fundamental philosophy before us a few minutes ago. Of course, his refining interests want free trade, and they can make more money under free trade. They can operate with less capital invested, and, of course, they want to travel the free-trade road. Under no circumstances will they now or any other time ever support a philosophy which expands the domestic, the continental sugar industry, because in doing so they would take refining tonnage from their mills; and why, in their own interest, should they support it? Of course, they will not; and of course I will not support them, on the same grounds, because I will take care of my own crowd first, if I can, and if I cannot, I will do the best I can under the circumstances. [Applause.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MALONEY].

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. Chairman, the bill which is being considered to extend the Sugar Act of 1937, which expires this year, for another year is opposed by the sugar industry of Louisiana. After 3 years under the act, they find much dissatisfaction and would prefer no law at all, than the present act. This act does not give adequate consideration to the industry in Louisiana in either the production of cane or in another phase of the industry and that is the process of refining of raw sugar. It grants too many privileges to the offshore lands at the expense of our domestic producers.

So, on behalf of the Louisiana sugar industry, with its 17,000 farmers and the 100,000 laborers for whom the industry provides employment in the State, I wish to express a great regret and a deep disappointment that the rule to consider the extension of the Sugar Act permits no opportunity to the Members of Congress from Louisiana to propose amendments which we consider essential to the proper functioning of the Sugar Act. Without some improvement in quotas, without a more reasonable price level, and without more definiteness in the broad discretionary powers granted to the Secretary of Agriculture, the sugarcane growers of Louisiana are unable to secure and enjoy the fair and deserved participation in the benefits which Congress very evidently intended for them under the provisions of the law.

The amendments contained in H. R. 8893, which I introduced early in this session, were proposed as a result of the experience of 6 years under the Jones-Costigan Act of 1934 and the Sugar Act of 1937. We have always understood that the reason for limiting the term of the Sugar Act to 3 years has been to apply the test of experience, or trial and error, so that Congress could proceed to adopt perfecting amendments to correct inequities in the sugar program and to improve the administration of the law.

The foundation and chief causes of difficulty in the application of the Sugar Act to the Louisiana sugar industry has been an inadequate quota. The growers who were established in the business of producing sugar in Louisiana in 1934 and even in 1937 have become the victims of the policies applied and the adjustments required under an inadequate quota. The desire of the Louisiana sugar industry is unanimously that all farm lands suitable to sugarcane should have a place in the program and that the industry should be encouraged in gradual normal expansion. But new growers have been permitted in large numbers to enter the program almost entirely at the expense of established growers, who have been reduced in their acreage in order that acreage might be provided for new growers on a scale much greater than was anticipated originally by anyone.

But that is not all; the price of sugar has been depressed in the last 3 years by creating an oversupply of sugar and, as a result, the margin of profit is so limited that the highest efficiency is required to achieve the needed low-unit cost of production. Contradictorily, the cost of labor and supplies have been increased as a result of Federal laws and regulations. The overhead cost of operating sugar farms has been greatly enhanced. It is true that new varieties of sugarcane have increased the production of sugar per acre but, with diminishing returns from the sale of the product of the farm and greater costs, a successful operation of the farm depends upon the farmer's being permitted a volume of production through which he can secure a higher efficiency and thereby reduce the unit cost of production.

Consequently, the Louisiana growers who, according to the expert advice of scientists of the Department of Agriculture, should maintain a rotation of two-thirds in sugarcane acreage to one-third in legume acreage, find themselves confronted with proportionate shares under the sugar program which has reduced most of them from 66 percent of their crop land in sugarcane to between 35 percent and 50 percent. The intense cultivation required for sugarcane beginning 2 years in advance of harvest and the extremely heavy costs of sugarcane-farming operations make it impossible for the grower to suffer restrictions and reductions in acreage which completely unbalance the rotation and unnecessarily add to the cost of production. What the Louisiana sugar industry wants is to be allowed to attain and maintain the efficiency which the Secretary of Agriculture has told us we should have for the economic justification of our existence, but which the Sugar Act and its administration make impossible, unless an adequate quota is provided.

Under the circumstances, it would be preferable and to the advantage of the Louisiana sugar industry that the Sugar Act be allowed to expire according to its terms, unless essential amendments are adopted at this session of Congress so that in the next session of Congress a complete reconsideration of all sugar problems may be had on the basis of experience and primarily for the benefit of the domestic sugar industry. [Applause.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, there should be no opposition to the bill that is now before us because it is simply continuing the law that is now in existence for an additional year. The States where sugar beets are grown do not feel that this law completely solves the problem with reference to the growing and marketing of sugar beets. In many ways it is very unsatisfactory. However, unless this bill is passed the sugar-beet industry of the United States will become demoralized and practically all sugar-beet processors will be forced to go out of business, and thousands of farmers whose very life blood depends upon the growing of sugar beets will be deprived of a livelihood and will thereby automatically be forced onto the relief rolls.

We had thought that during this session we would be able to secure the passage of a bill that would solve the sugar problem. However, due to misunderstandings, divergent ideas, and many other causes, we have been unable to report to the House a bill that would adequately solve the sugar problem. This bill is a mere stop-gap and will save the sugar industry until Congress meets again when it can take up the problem with more facts and figures before it—more experience, and an entirely better understanding of the whole sugar situation. At that time we feel sure that a satisfactory bill will be enacted.

Some 17 or 18 States are very vitally and directly interested in sugar-beet legislation. Every person in the United States is indirectly interested in this legislation because everyone uses sugar. It is one of our necessary and vital commodities. The disruption of the sugar-beet industry would have the effect of immediately raising the price of sugar because the large refiners who own and operate most of the sugarcane plantations in offshore areas would have a monopoly on this product and the result would unquestionably be an increase in the price of sugar. Therefore, even from a selfish standpoint, every person in the United States should welcome, and, in fact, insist that the sugar-beet industry be maintained.

From a local standpoint, this is the most important crop in my State. Sugar beets are raised by nearly every farmer throughout the thickly populated farming areas in the State of Utah. Each farmer raises from 5 to 25 acres of sugar beets. They are largely cultivated and handled by his own family. The proceeds from this crop is his cash crop. This crop furnishes employment to more people per acre than most any other crop that is raised to any great extent in the State of Utah.

It was thought for some time that the sugar-beet industry could be protected by imposing a tariff on imported sugar, and for years a high tariff on imported sugar was levied. The tariff for a number of years was 2 cents per pound on refined sugar. This seemed to solve the problem for some years, but the industry grew in our offshore possessions, such as Hawaii, Philippine Islands, and Puerto Rico, with the result that a large part of our sugar was produced by these possessions of ours, and, of course, we could not impose any tariff against our own possessions, therefore, the tariff applied largely only to Cuba. Instead of increasing and stabilizing our continental production of sugar, we increased the sugar production in our offshore possessions, and thereby found ourselves where this group of States that produce sugar beets was competing with offshore producers where labor conditions were not comparable. The result was that for a number of years the sugar-beet industry declined so that in 1934 we passed the Jones-Costigan Act which fixed quotas for sugar of all producers, the theory being that there was only so much sugar used in the United States, and if this amount were allotted to the various producers under a quota system the sugar industry in the United States could become stabilized.

In my own State there are two sugar-beet processors—the Amalgamated Sugar Co. and the Utah-Idaho Sugar Co. To show just how these companies operated during the past 10 years I submit the following table:

Net income after all charges and percent return on average net equity, Amalgamated and Utah-Idaho Sugar Co.'s fiscal periods ended in 1929 to 1939

[1] Fiscal year in 1929 ended on Feb. 28. Fiscal years ended from 1930 to 1936 on Mar. 31; fiscal year changed effective 1937 to end Sept. 30; fiscal period ended in 1937 therefore covers 18 months from Apr. 1, 1936, through Sept. 30, 1937. In 1929 company reported combined daily slicing capacity for 8 plants as 8,300 tons; in 1939, 9,500 tons for 6 plants.

[2] Fiscal year ends Feb. 28. In 1929 company reported combined daily slicing capacity for 16 plants, including Raymond, Alberta, as 16,875 tons; in 1939, 20,400 tons for 16 plants, 4 plants of which were idle and which represented a combined daily capacity of 3,800 tons.

[3] Covers 18-month period from Apr. 1, 1936, through Sept. 30, 1937; net income for the year ended Mar. 31, 1936, was $713,816.

Source: Moody's Manual of Industrials, vols. 1929 to 1939.

You will observe by this table that in the year 1929 the Amalgamated Sugar Co. made a net income of $23,168, and that the Utah-Idaho Sugar Co. during that year lost $143,463. You will observe that during the 5 years from 1929 to 1933 the Amalgamated Sugar Co. had an average loss of $437,115, and that the Utah-Idaho Sugar Co. during the same period lost annually an average of $672,039. You will also observe that during the 5-year period during the operation of the law that is now in existence as amended the Amalgamated Sugar Co. made a net average per year of $709,927, and that the Utah-Idaho Sugar Co. during the same period made a net annual average of $1,118,966. You will thus see that the sugar industry in 1934 was completely demoralized. Both companies in my home State had been losing money for 5 years, and you will also see that under the present act during the past 5 years these companies have made a small profit. You should also understand that these companies are owned by hundreds of small investors.

To look at the problem in my own State from another angle, it will be interesting to observe the price paid to the farmers for the production of sugar beets during this same term of 10 years:

	Per ton
1929	$7.50
1930	7.00
1931	5.82
1932	4.77
1933	4.80
5-year average	5.89
1934	6.15
1935	6.21
1936	6.20
1937	6.76
1938	6.25

Five-year average, $6.39 per ton during the time that the Jones-Costigan law has been enforced.

The foregoing figures, it seems to me, will show conclusively that the sugar-beet industry, so far as the State of Utah is concerned, and, of course, this is typical of all other sugar-producing States, in 1933 was in such a condition that it was necessary that some legislation be enacted that would increase the price of sugar sufficiently to give the processors a fair return on the money invested and to give the farmer some return on his money and labor invested, or the whole industry would collapse.

Now, unless this bill is passed this great industry will be in the same condition that it was in in 1933. I therefore urge you men who desire to see each section of the country treated fairly to vote for this bill. In doing this we are not imposing any undue obligations on the public. We are not asking the public to pay more for the product than is reasonable and fair.

Measured by any reasonable standards, the average retail prices of sugar which have prevailed under the Jones-Costigan Act and the Sugar Act of 1937 have been decidedly low. The annual average prices since 1934, as reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, are as follows:

	Cents a pound
1934	5.5
1935	5.7
1936	5.6
1937	5.3
1938	5.4
5-year average	5.51

Average retail prices during the base period 1909–14, upon which agricultural parity is usually calculated, were as follows:

	Cents a pound
1909	5.9
1910	6.0
1911	6.1
1912	6.3
1913	5.5
1914	5.9
6-year average	5.95

From the foregoing, it is clear that the average retail price of sugar during the base period was nearly half a cent higher than during the recent year of sugar control, even if no allowance be made for the processing tax. Taking account of the tax, which amounts to 0.535 cent a pound, the net difference in price was nearly a cent a pound.

In the period 1923–25, which the Bureau of Labor Statistics uses as a basis in computing the relative prices of food, the annual average retail prices of sugar were as follows:

	Cents a pound
1923	9.9
1924	9.0
1925	7.0
3-year average	8.63

In the six years immediately preceding the approval of the Jones-Costigan Act, the average retail prices of sugar were:

	Cents a pound
1928	6.9
1929	6.4
1930	6.1
1931	5.6
1932	5.0
6-year average	5.9

When, in February of 1934, the President recommended sugar-control legislation, he stated that the price and marketing situation then existing was "prejudicial to virtually everyone interested." Yet in February of 1934 the retail price of sugar was 5.4 cents a pound, and no tax was effective. If a price of 5.4 cents was prejudicial in 1934, what possible defense can be offered for prices which have prevailed within the past 2 years? From August of 1938 through August of 1939, the range of prices was as follows:

	Cents a pound
1938:
August	5.2
September	5.1
October	5.1
November	5.2
December	5.2
1939:
January	5.2
February	5.1
March	5.1
April	5.1
May	5.1
June	5.2
August	5.2

In each of these months, of course, the tax was effective and paid by the industry at the rate of 0.535 cent on every pound of sugar produced. Giving weight to the tax, the net retail price of sugar during the period mentioned ranged between 4.565 and 4.665 cents a pound. This is substantially less than the all-time low of 4.8 cents a pound which was touched in June of 1932 during the depths of the depression. The beet-sugar industry as a whole—growers and processors alike—now finds itself forced to operate on a price basis for which there is no precedent and in the face of materially increased taxes of all kinds, wage rates, and other elements entering into the costs of production.

Not only is the price of sugar extremely low in comparison with prices which have prevailed in other periods, but it is low in relationship with other food commodities. Relative food prices, as already mentioned, are measured by the Bureau of Labor Statistics on the basis of prices which prevailed during the period 1923–25, such prices being considered as 100. But since 1925 the index of retail sugar prices has never been higher than 85.1, and it has never equaled the index of all other foods. The latest bulletin of the Bureau of Labor Statistics—that for December 1939—gave sugar an index of 67.5 whereas the index of all foods was 76.9. The range of retail indexes for sugar and all foods is shown in the attached table.

Again, consumers in the United States buy sugar at prices lower than those in any first-class nation in the world; certainly at prices lower than any which prevail in nations which have living standards even remotely comparable to our own. The following table, prepared by the foodstuffs division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, shows the retail prices in 38 countries of the world in May 1939:

It is often argued that the beet-sugar industry in the United States must be limited in size because any expansion means a loss of the Cuban market for the corn and hog farmers of the Mississippi Valley. If more sugar is grown in the United States, so the argument runs, less will be needed from Cuba, and if Cuba's income from sugar is reduced she cannot buy Iowa's pork and lard. Thus, one is expected to visualize an economic conflict between the type of farming common to the Middle West and the agriculture of the principal beet-producing areas of the Mountain States.

No such conflict exists, for the beet-producing States are themselves large importers of Iowa's corn and hogs and lard. Cuba's total of such imports looks impressive, but Cuba benefits by what might be called an optical illusion of bookkeeping. The volume and value of all commodities which a nation exports or imports are carefully noted by customs officers, and breath-taking totals result. No such record is made of transactions among the States, and as a consequence many phases of domestic commerce must suffer by statistical comparison with foreign commerce. Nevertheless, there is evidence to support the belief that the demand for Iowa's products in the beet-producing areas is equally as important as the demands of Cuba.

The case for domestic commerce was briefly and forcefully stated in a recent report on Federal reclamation projects submitted to the Secretary of the Interior by two non-Government experts appointed to make a survey of these projects—Report on Federal Reclamation to the Secretary of the Interior by John W. Haw and F. E. Schmitt, December 1, 1934. The farm production on reclamation projects, the report said—

> Develops a substantial agricultural exchange trade between the Grain Belt and the West, which enlarges the market for the humid farm regions. Beet sugar exhibits this relation instructively. The United States is a large importer of sugar, and it is frequently said that as we replace Cuban sugar imports with our own production, we destroy the trade balance which permits Cuba to buy our pork. The fact is that irrigation projects engaged in sugar-beet production, with their supporting communities, are heavier and more certain importers of hogs and pork products. Central California and southern Idaho, heavy beet-growing sections, are large pork importers. Reduced to simple language, the Corn and Hog Belt has a choice between a pork customer in Cuba or one in the Western States. This is but part of the story, however, for sugar-beet growing in this country brings a cycle of industrial, commercial, and transportation activities that produce wide domestic benefits and add to buying power.

Wheeler McMillen, editor in chief of the Farm Journal and Farmer's Wife and president of the National Farm Chemurgic Council, analyzed the problem in an address before the National Grange, in Peoria, November 17, 1939. Said Mr. McMillen on that occasion:

Farmers of the United States, if enabled to obtain the earning power, will buy far more goods from our manufacturers, and from each other, than the farmers of any other part of the world. Therefore, to build up the income of our own agriculture would seem to be the simplest of plain common sense.

Sugar, incidentally, contributes an illustration in this question. Despite the thousands of acres that might profitably be growing cane and beets, our continental farmers are restricted to growing less than 30 percent of the sugar Americans consume. There is a theory that Cuba, for instance, must be allowed to sell us sugar so that she may buy our products. The proponents of that theory do not bring out the fact that one good American beet-growing county spends 10 times as much for automobiles per ton of sugar produced, and owns more than 30 times as many motor cars per thousand population as is the case in Cuba.

Moreover, those who pay for foreign-trade propaganda because they are interested in exporting, in shipping, or international banking appear to overlook the fundamental fact that foreign trade flourishes best in periods of domestic prosperity. Then is when we import the largest quantities of necessities, such as manganese and rubber, and spend most freely for the foreign luxuries. The most intelligent way for these interests to stimulate foreign business would be for them first to join with the forces that want to create a sound domestic prosperity. None of us objects to a sound foreign trade; indeed, we look forward to its development. But foreign trade cannot and should not be built at the sacrifice of opportunity for America's farmers.

The demand for a larger beet-sugar quota is not a demand for expansion, for the production of beet sugar in each of the last 2 years has been substantially in excess of the quotas established under the Sugar Act of 1937. In 1938, when the beet-sugar quota was 1,584,083 short tons, raw value, the actual production was more than 1,803,000 short tons, raw value, an excess of production over quota of 219,000 tons. In 1939, before the suspension of the quotas by the President, the quota for the beet-sugar industry was 1,566,719 short tons of sugar, raw value. Production from that crop, however, was more than 1,750,000 short tons, raw value, an excess of production over quota of 183,000 tons.

Production of beet sugar even from restricted acreage thus has outgrown the present basic quota established under the Sugar Act, and unless that quota be revised to fit existing conditions there must necessarily be a further sharp limitation of acreage. This restriction must be made in the face of insistent demands of beet farmers of their right to participate in the American sugar market. In many areas of the West, particularly on reclamation projects, sugar beets are the only cash crop and its importance to farmers can scarcely be overemphasized. Moreover, the production of the crop is in harmony with sound farm economy, and it promotes and encourages the highest type of soil conservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired; all time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 513 of the Sugar Act of 1937 (relating to termination of powers of the Secretary of Agriculture under the Sugar Act) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 513. The powers vested in the Secretary under this act shall terminate on December 31, 1941, except that the Secretary shall have power to make payments under title III under programs applicable to the crop year 1941 and previous crop years."

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CELLER moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer this motion more or less in a formal way because I endeavored to get time while the rule was being considered and again during general debate on the bill, but was unable to do so.

I wish to point out to the gentlemen of the committee that this bill will most disastrously affect the port of New York, whence I come. The port of New York is one of the largest refinery centers in the world. New Yorkers have been refining sugar for centuries. Up to 1925 sugar was the second most important commodity handled in New York City.

Away back in 1797, if I may give just a bit of history, Mrs. John Adams, the wife of the President, wrote her husband that sugar cost $4 per pound and even then it was not pure. It was not the same sparkling product that we make in New York today. It could be purchased only in chunks or loaves, and had to be chipped off sparingly.

During Lincoln's administration sugar cost 31 cents per pound. Today we can buy sugar as low as 5 pounds for 24 cents, thanks to the ingenuity, the artistry, and the business acumen of New York refiners. This creates tremendous advantages to the consuming public throughout the length and breadth of the Union. This drop has been due primarily to the ingenuity, the inventive genius, and the skill and experience of those who have borne and still bear the very famous names in New York City, Havemeyer, Mollenauer, Arbuckle, and many other New Yorkers equally as famous. The accomplishments of the sugar entrepreneurs go back to the time when a public notice appeared in the New York Gazette of August 17, 1730, to the effect that—

Public notice is hereby given that Nicholas Bayard, of the city of New York, has erected a refinery house for the manufacturing of sugar and sugar candy and has secured from Europe an experienced artist in that industry.

Indeed, that was the beginning of the sugar-manufacturing industry not only in New York City, but in this country.

Now we seek to repay all that New York has done with reference to sugar by stabbing that great industry in New York in the back by this bill, a bill which should not see the light of day unless you continue the refined-sugar quotas from Hawaii and Puerto Rico, because without those quotas the New York refineries must close, with the consequent dislocation of vast business interests and the utter destruction of thousands of jobs.

During the World War the Government controlled the sugar industry. This was necessary and sugar refiners and producers rendered patriotic service under this control, including those who were responsible for the manufacture of sugar in New York City particularly. The production of sugar was greatly expanded in order to supply the needs of the Allied nations. Unfortunately, no arrangements were made by our Government after the war to hold that huge sugar trade through agreements with foreign nations. Naturally, after the war the demand for sugar, our sugar, particularly in New York, decreased. Nations, by tariffs, bounties, and other devices, actually precluded the exportation of sugar. The doors were closed practically against American refined sugar. Bounties and boosts and subsidies given by foreign nations have practically dislodged and displaced American refined sugar in all world markets.

I now want to make this statement. The members of the New York Democratic delegation and I have always stood steadfastly and faithfully on all legislation affecting the farm interests of this country. We ask those interested in the farms now to come to our rescue and help. [Applause.]

THERE IS NO DISCRIMINATION IN REFINED-SUGAR QUOTAS

The Cummings bill, H. R. 9654, proposes to continue the Sugar Act of 1937 for another year, but it does not provide for a restoration of the refined-sugar quotas on Hawaii and Puerto Rico. To the 20,000,000 people who live in and around the great port of New York, this omission is a fatal defect. They believe the Cummings bill should be defeated unless these Hawaiian and Puerto Rican quotas are reinstated.

The only reason ever brought forth for the expansion of refining in the American tropics under a quota system is that quota limitations are a discrimination against American citizens on those islands. I think that the charge of discrimination is absolutely groundless, and melts away before an inspection of the facts.

Certainly, the sugar industries of Hawaii and Puerto Rico can not claim that they have been unfairly treated under the Sugar Acts of 1934 and 1937. The fact is that the consumers of this country, through the quota system, have given the two islands a sugar protection worth $522,000,000 since 1934, and of this enormous amount $78,000,000 was in the form of direct cash bounties paid out of the Federal Treasury. And I call to your attention that these bounties were financed by a sales tax on sugar. The State of New York alone has paid a sugar sales tax since 1934 of about $40,000,000.

The truth of the matter is that Hawaii and Puerto Rico have each received more benefits out of the Sugar Act than any one State in the Union. The 2,000,000 people in those islands certainly have enjoyed better treatment than have the 20,000,000 people who live in or around the great port of New York.

I claim that the passage of the Cummings sugar bill without a restoration of the quotas on Hawaiian and Puerto Rican refined sugar would be a gross discrimination against the people of New York. The Cummings bill, as it is now written, would ask New Yorkers to continue to pay sugar bounties and, at the same time, it would create unemployment for New York workers.

It is inconceivable that the people of New York would willingly pay a tax which would afford bounties to the very tropical refiners who wish to expand their production at the expense of the New York industry.

But the Cummings sugar bill, as it is now written, not only discriminates against New York in the matter of bounties. The greatest discrimination lies in the fact that Hawaii and Puerto Rico would be given the power to exercise a monopoly over a raw material which is absolutely essential to the continuation of the New York refining industry. Let us see how this comes about.

At the present time, Puerto Rico and Hawaii supply the United States refiners with about 1,700,000 tons of raw sugar. This raw sugar, as I have stated, is absolutely essential to the continuation of the refining industry in the United States because without raw sugar, a refinery is as useless as a flour mill would be without wheat. This being the case, there must be a steady flow of raw sugar to the refiners of this country.

Under the quota system, the refiners are permitted to purchase raw sugar from Cuba and the Philippine Islands, as well as from Puerto Rico and Hawaii, with a relatively small supply coming from the cane plantations of Louisiana and Florida. With a few unimportant exceptions, the refiners are prohibited by the quota law from purchasing their raw sugar from any areas except those which I have mentioned. For example, they cannot get their sugar from Java, Santo Domingo, Mexico, or Peru because those countries do not have a quota under the Sugar Act.

Of course, this is not strictly true because the refiners can buy a few tons of sugar from these foreign countries. But of the 4,600,000 tons of raw sugar which the refiners are permitted to purchase, only some 25,000 tons are from sources other than Hawaii, Puerto Rico, Cuba, the Philippines, and our Southern States.

Now, it is clear to me that if Hawaii and Puerto Rico are permitted to retain 1,700,000 tons of raw sugar for refining, the mainland refiners will be deprived of 1,700,000 tons of raw sugar because they are prohibited under the quota system from filling the gap from any other source of supply.

I know of no other American industry which is prohibited by law from buying its raw material anywhere except where the Government specifies, and I know of no other American industry which is prohibited by law from purchasing any raw material in excess of what the Government permits.

The New York coffee industry, for example, is not limited in its purchases of coffee beans. Congress does not dictate where it can buy its coffee. The New York rubber industry can buy its rubber from any source in the world and in as large quantities as it desires. But in sugar Congress does so dictate. About 40 percent of all the raw sugar now used by the mainland refiners is obtained from the plantations of Hawaii and Puerto Rico. Is it fair, is it equitable, is it sound for Congress to permit the plantation owners of Hawaii and Puerto Rico to monopolize that 40 percent? I do not think so, and the millions of people in New York do not think so.

If Congress gives subsidies to Hawaiian and Puerto Rican refiners, who are also growers, and then permits those same refiners to withhold their raw sugar, I think the death knell of the mainland cane-sugar refining industry will be sounded.

Now, there are a few more aspects of this discrimination charge. I have looked into the record and I have found that the Hawaiian and Puerto Rican sugar industries in 1933 were very happy to go along on a sugar program which limited their refining.

At that time their raw-sugar industry was seriously depressed, and their one concern was an improvement in their raw-sugar business, which is their major industry. Refining was then, and is now, merely an adjunct of the production of raw sugar.

And I also found out that in 1934 the Hawaiian sugar industry brought suit against Henry Wallace, the Secretary of Agriculture, to enjoin him from carrying out the provisions of the Sugar Act. The Hawaiians claimed that this Congress and the Department of Agriculture had grossly discriminated against them in the enactment and administration of the Sugar Act. After a lengthy case, the Court declared—Ewa Plantation against Wallace—that there was not one iota of evidence to show any discrimination in any regard against Hawaii.

Everyone in this House wants to be fair to the people of Hawaii and Puerto Rico. They are citizens of the United States and they should be treated as such. But everyone in this House also knows that from time to time Congress has had to recognize that there are special problems in Puerto Rico and Hawaii which call for special consideration when legislation is enacted.

This is noticeably true in the case of Puerto Rico. Puerto Ricans pay no income tax to the United States—in fact, Puerto Rico has an entirely separate tax structure. The Wagner Act does not apply to Puerto Rico; nor does the social-security tax; and, although the Wage and Hour Act does apply to Puerto Rico, nevertheless, every kind of pressure was brought to bear to exempt the island.

An abstract discussion of discrimination and citizenship has no relevance whatever to the question before us. Congress clearly has the power to limit the shipment of refined sugar from Puerto Rico and Hawaii. The courts have specifically ruled that this is the case. The only question before Congress is how that power should be exercised. The only relevant question is how much quota should go to the tropical refiners and how much quota should go to the mainland refiners.

And, looking at this issue, I think that the Hawaiian and Puerto Rican refiners have been treated very well. Congress set refined sugar quotas in 1934 which equaled their maximum previous shipments. They were not forced to curtail their refining. They were merely limited as to expansion. And, of course, they were given the right to supply the very substantial refined-sugar requirements of their own islands. With their local consumption business and their generous quotas for shipment to the mainland, the refiners in the American Tropics have not had to work under any hardship. But the mainland cane refiners received a quota about 25 percent less than their previous maximum production, and since 1934 the industry has not had a quota large enough to give much-needed employment to the men and women working in the refining plants.

This country has never been imperialistic toward Hawaii and Puerto Rico. The charge of imperialism is an extremely serious one, and I think that there are many Members of this House who resent it. After all, the quotas on refined sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico were in effect from June 1934 until March 1940, and Congress in 1934, 1936, and again in 1937 gave very careful scrutiny to the problem.

If the Hawaiian and Puerto Rican refiners want to send all of their raw sugar to mainland United States in a refined form, then they should come before Congress and agree, first, that they will not take bounties from the Federal Government, and, second, that they will be willing to have the mainland cane refiners purchase their raw sugar from any source in the world.

As long as bounties to the refiners in the Tropics continue, and as long as the Sugar Act prohibits a free purchase of raw sugar by the mainland refiners, there can be no grounds to support a charge of discrimination. Every group in the sugar business is controlled by the Sugar Act—farms, beet factories, cane mills, refineries, and importers. The very heart of the Sugar Act is control. In fact, the act is often referred to as the Quota Control Act.

I see no reason, and the people of New York see no reason, why that control should not be exercised for the advantage of refinery workmen as well as mainland sugar farmers and plantation owners. The great industrial States and our refineries should not be discriminated against, and the quotas on Hawaiian and Puerto Rican refined sugar should be restored.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, but unless this measure is amended so as to provide for a restoration of the restrictions on refined sugar from the offshore areas, I intend to vote against the bill.

The sugar industries of Hawaii and Puerto Rico cannot claim that they have been unfairly treated under the Sugar Acts of 1934–37. Since 1934 they have received the enormous amount of $78,000,000 in the form of direct cash bounties paid out of the Federal Treasury.

The true situation is that the home-refining industry is the only branch of the American sugar system which meets its competitors without benefit of tariff protection or other subsidies. It receives no cash subsidies, and it asks for no special favors.

If Congress today decides to wipe out all quotas, all tariffs, and all subsidies in the sugar industry, I am sure that the home-refining industry will be able to stand on its own feet.

If the status quo of the artificial set-up of the 1937 quota bill is changed it will unquestionably have a severe adverse effect on the continental refineries, and refining is an essential part of the sugar industry.

Since Congress has decided to abitrarily set up a quota system, the continental refineries are entitled to protection.

It is my understanding that in the offshore areas the plantation and refinery are owned by the same people, and therefore the subsidies indirectly benefit the refineries.

The cry of discrimination against our possessions is not a sound one. We all recognize that there are a number of differences between a Territory and a State, and in some ways the Territory is the beneficiary, and in other ways the State.

I request you to pay attention to this. Recently the House Labor Committee recognized that the rules of the wage and hour law were injuring Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, and stated—

It is believed that the application to the islands of the inflexible minimum-wage rates prescribed by the act will cause serious dislocation in some insular industries and curtail employment opportunities.

And the Labor Committee recommended that the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act be relaxed. So that as far as our insular possessions are concerned it is not a one-way street.

Just as the Labor Committee recognized that the Wage and Hour Act caused serious dislocation in some industries in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, so Puerto Rico and Hawaii should recognize that the abandonment of the quotas on the importation of refined sugar into the United States would cause a serious dislocation in the continental refining industry.

I therefore urge this House to support the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], which will restore to this bill the offshore-area restriction on the importation of refined sugar from the offshore areas.

It is a just amendment, and not in a broad sense discriminatory at all. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] to strike out the enacting clause.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCORMACK: Mr. McCORMACK moves to amend by adding two new sections, reading as follows:

"SEC. 4. Subsection (b) of section 207 of the Sugar Act of 1937 (relating to direct-consumption sugar from Puerto Rico) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: 'This subsection is hereby extended so that not more than 126,033 short tons, raw value, of the quota for Puerto Rico for any calendar year may be filled by direct-consumption sugar: Provided, however, That the amount of said quota which may be filled by direct-consumption sugar for the calendar year 1940 shall not be less than the quantity of direct-consumption sugar from Puerto Rico actually brought into the continental United States, for consumption therein, after December 31, 1939, and up to and including the date of the enactment of this amendatory sentence.'

"SEC. 5. Subsection (a) of section 207 of the Sugar Act of 1937 (relating to direct-consumption sugar from Hawaii) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: 'This subsection is hereby extended so that not more than 29,616 short tons, raw value, of the quota for Hawaii for any calendar year may be filled by direct-consumption sugar: Provided, however, That the amount of said quota which may be filled by direct-consumption sugar for the calendar year 1940 shall not be less than the quantity of direct-consumption sugar from Hawaii actually brought into the continental United States, for consumption therein, after December 31, 1939, and up to and including the date of the enactment of this amendatory sentence.'"

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment I served notice yesterday I intended to offer. This amendment simply puts into this continuing resolution what has been the law in relation to all sugar-quota legislation since 1934. Under the law at the present time Puerto Rico can bring into the United States about 800,000 short tons of sugar. This is the over-all quota, refined and raw. Up until February 29 of this year, and since 1934, of that approximately 800,000 short tons over-all from Puerto Rico, 126,033 short tons could be brought into the United States in a refined state. That gave some protection to the American sugar-refining industry. Under the continuing resolution, unless this amendment is adopted, Puerto Rico can refine all of its 800,000 tons of sugar of the quota allocated to it, and that means that the refineries of the United States will be deprived of obtaining raw sugar in order to continue their business and to keep their employees working. Since the first of the year and for the first 5 months of this year there has been imported into the United States from Puerto Rico 139,000 short tons. That gives you an idea of what the situation is. By the end of the year, unless this amendment is adopted, it is estimated there will be about 400,000 of the 800,000-ton quota brought into the United States in a refined state, and in about a year Puerto Rico will be able to refine all of its quota. Hawaii has a base quota of 938,000 tons, of which 29,616 tons can be brought in in a refined state. We are not taking anything away from them. We are simply giving to them the same consideration that was given from 1934 to 1940, and we are asking that in addition to protecting the beet and sugarcane producers that the American refiner be considered a part of the picture, and that the employees of these refineries be given opportunity to continue their employment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman feel, if his amendment is adopted, that it will go a long way toward uniting labor and the farmers of this country in this time of peril?

Mr. McCORMACK. There is no question about that, and I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Will the gentleman give us any assurance that the President will not veto this bill if his amendment is agreed to?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at my friend asking that question. This is one of the bodies of a branch of our Government. It is our duty, and our responsibility to legislate. I do not know why the mysterious impression is created here of a veto. I am sorry that my friend, whom we have given valuable support to in the past, is taking the position in opposition because of some word or some rumor. Two years ago we heard the same thing, and there was no veto.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. We had a Barry bill, and the Barry bill provided for the continuation of quotas of refined sugar from Puerto Rico and Hawaii, and the President was in favor of that quota.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not think this House, because of some innuendo or intimation of that kind, will let that govern its action, and I am confident the House will not.

I know my friends in the beet areas are in a disturbed state of mind. Two years ago they made arguments much stronger in favor of this amendment than I can make today. My friend the gentleman from Colorado, and my friend the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE] both argued strongly in favor of this particular provision of the bill. All we ask is that in the picture that the refiners and their employees be given consideration. We are not trying to hurt the producers. We are friendly to the producers. All we are asking is that the employees of the American refineries, and the American refineries with their capital investment, be given the protection that they are entitled to receive in legislation of this kind.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. It is also a fact that the cooperage interests and the lumber interests are vitally affected by the fact that they use sacks in the shipments from the islands, whereas barrels are used in shipments from the refineries in this country.

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly, and there is the little story that is dependent on the refineries for the money to pay salaries.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. What effect would this amendment have on the consuming public?

Mr. McCORMACK. No more than it had in 1933 to 1940, because this is putting into this bill what was in existence in those years.

I hope my amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended to 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. There is going to be no move to cut off debate later?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Colorado is agreed to.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Puerto Rico is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. PAGÁN. Mr. Chairman, I arise to oppose the amendment and to discuss briefly before the House the sugar situation of Puerto Rico. First, I should recall that the sugar industry is practically our only important industry; it yields the greater part of the total income of our island, and gives opportunity for livelihood to thousands of our nearly 2,000,000 American citizens in Puerto Rico.

I take this opportunity to set forth the facts as regards the refined-sugar situation in Puerto Rico.

Puerto Rico has always fought for equal treatment with all other areas under the American flag in the matter of sugar, as well as in all other matters pertaining to the island. Ever since the island has been under the American flag it has tried to live up to all the traditions and requirements of the Federal Government. The island has assumed all responsibilities and obligations imposed upon it and is proud of the record its people have made as citizens under the American flag. It asks for nothing to which any other area under the flag is not entitled, and seeks no discrimination against any other area or any business enterprise in any other area. At the same time, we oppose any discrimination against the American citizens in Puerto Rico, and feel that it is fair that in the sugar-refining industry no legislation is approved by Congress that would raise a wall dividing continental American industry from offshore American industry, making an undesirable discrimination, as if the American citizens of Puerto Rico were a different or inferior class of American citizens and that our industry in Puerto Rico would be considered as foreign, at the other side of said wall.

From an economic point of view the island has grown rapidly in the 42 years under the American flag. While it has its problems, just as all other areas, some of which are acute, nevertheless, the island has risen to a position in the economic life of the Nation where it ranks as one of the best customers of continental farmers and continental manufacturers. In the last few years the rank of the island has ranged as high as sixth, in comparison with all the countries of the world, as a market for the products of continental farmers and factories. As a market, it last year ranked ahead of any country in South or Central America, and is a rapidly growing market. It purchases practically everything it buys from the mainland. In fact, it buys proportionately less foreign goods on the average than does the mainland itself.

In the case of refined sugar, the island simply wants the same right as that accorded to any other area under the American flag, namely, that of selling the products of its farms and factories in whatever form is for the best interests of the island, which, at the same time, affording more purchasing power to Puerto Rico, benefits the farmers and manufacturers in the mainland to whom Puerto Rico buys yearly near $100,000,000.

The island has four refineries and two or three raw producing units which make a small amount of washed or direct-consumption sugar. The combined maximum capacity of these mills, as established by the United States Department of Agriculture, based on a 300-day run, is 445,000 tons. However, only one refinery in the island has ever operated for as much as 7 months, and if all the refineries on the island operated for the full 7 months their maximum capacity would be 265,000 tons. However, in view of the fact that the refining season must coincide with the raw-sugar producing season, which averages 4½ to 5 months, the actual capacity is somewhere between 175,000 to 265,000 tons. Of this total, 30,000 tons is used for local consumption, leaving a probable refined output of 145,000 to 235,000 tons. This is an increase of somewhere between 19,000 and 109,000 tons more than the output during the last few years.

The refining of raw sugar, as everyone knows, is largely performed by machinery. The 1937 United States Census of Manufacturers shows that there were only 14,024 people engaged in the entire refining industry on the continent in 1937. This number refined 4,500,000 tons of sugar. Accordingly, it is not likely that unlimited refining of sugar in Puerto Rico would displace any labor in continental refineries.

While the refining industry in Puerto Rico will never be important as compared with the refining industry on the continent, nevertheless the island is extremely concerned about having its rights to refine its sugar discriminated against. Once one group on the continent or elsewhere is able to set up restrictions against the way in which the island sells its farm products, other competing groups will attempt to do likewise, with the result that the island will find its economic life severely crippled by those seeking competitive advantages. The island will ever regret such unjust treatment. It is undemocratic, and, in view of the island's record under the American flag, would result in a discrimination which its self-respecting citizens could not afford to accept.

Some of the eastern seaboard refiners, in an effort to enforce discrimination against the island, have sought to convey the impression that the refiners in Puerto Rico received special consideration from the Government under the sugar program, because it so happens that some of the refiners may grow sugarcane and obtain Government refund payments under the Sugar Act. Since the refund payment to sugar producers is made through the Government, this payment is sometimes considered similar to Government subsidy payments which have been made on other agricultural products and the subsidies obtained through tariff protection. The payment made to sugar producers is simply a refund of the taxes collected on the sugar they produce, and refunded to the grower on condition that they limit production, pay wage rates as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, eliminate child labor, and follow certain practices designed to maintain soil fertility. If the grower carries out these regulations, all of which add to his cost, he gets back the tax that he pays to sell his sugar, except that if he is a large grower he does not get back the full amount of the tax.

In the case of Puerto Rico, the island as a whole, and especially the larger growers, has not gotten back the full amount of the tax, while costs have been greatly increased, because some of the sugarcane there, as in all sugarcane-producing areas, is produced in large units. These are all ascertainable facts and are known to the sugar trade generally. No one can be confused about them except persons who may not be familiar with the sugar-control system.

These eastern seaboard refiners know that refund payments on sugar are a refund of taxes which have been paid by the producers, and they should not seek to confuse this issue by combining these payments with tariff protection which may be considered in the first instance as a subsidy.

Puerto Rico benefits by the tariff system, as do all other domestic sugar-producing areas. The island has never sought to deny this, but does want it definitely understood that the refund payment in no way is connected with the tariff.

Moreover, whatever the benefits from the tariff are, the eastern seaboard refining industry has received proportionately as much subsidy as any branch of the sugar industry. For example, in the sugar hearings in 1937, Dr. Joshua Bernhardt, Chief of the Sugar Section, in testifying before the Senate Committee on Finance, points out clearly that the refiners received a subsidy on an average of $36,934,980 per year for the 3 years 1934, 1935, and 1936. On this basis the refiners have received a subsidy from the tariff since the sugar-control program went into effect—1934 to 1939, inclusive—of $221,609,000, while all refund payments made to the entire island of Puerto Rico under the Sugar Act totaled only $32,831,227. Thus, to claim or insinuate that the 14 continental refiners have not received a subsidy under the tariff is simply sidestepping the facts.

Moreover, an average subsidy of $36,934,000 per year is equal to a subsidy of about $2,500 for each person employed by the refiners, as against an average annual wage per employee of only $1,005, according to the last census. But, never satisfied, the refiners are seeking to obtain further protection in the form of a trade barrier against Hawaii and Puerto Rico. In a period, when with our Territories and island possessions as outposts in our great national-defense program, nothing should be done to impair national unity.

Not only do the eastern seaboard refiners enjoy a full measure of subsidies, but the quota system also protects the seaboard refiners in the extraordinary form of an embargo upon shipments of refined sugar to the United States, in excess of a stated quantity, from the principal competing foreign country, which is limited under present legislation to a quota for direct-consumption sugars of 22 percent of the sugar quota. And the refiners also have protection from importations of direct consumption sugars from the Philippines under the provisions of the Philippine Independence Act. They have been given protection by quotas against increased importation of liquid sugars, which in some areas and in some industries has tended to replace ordinary commercial refiners' sugar.

Apparently what the eastern seaboard refiners want to do is to say who shall and who shall not refine sugar, and in this connection they are simply being consistent with the past record of the refiners. In a letter dated August 7, 1937, addressed to Hon. PAT HARRISON, United States Senate, Secretary of State Hon. Cordell Hull said:

> It is believed to be against the public interests for the Government to grant any further measure of protection to a group whose record repeatedly indicates it would resort to monopolistic practices and conspire to restrain trade in violation of the antitrust law. Only a little over a year ago the United States Supreme Court upheld a lower-court ruling and found the Sugar Institute guilty on 40 separate counts of engaging in a combination and conspiracy to restrain trade in sugar.

The eastern seaboard refiners have insinuated that Puerto Rico's claim for unrestricted refining is in order that the island may increase its refining output rather than upon the principle of nondiscrimination. While discrimination against American citizens in Puerto Rico may not mean anything to the eastern seaboard refiners, it is very important and dear to the hearts of every Puerto Rican. Puerto Rico tries in every way possible to live up to the rights of citizens and its people cannot understand why any other group of American citizens should seek to have Congress discriminate against the island in any connection. It is not a matter of business or economic gain but a matter of equal opportunity and justice in the Democratic process that Puerto Rico bases its claim against discrimination.

Moreover, it should be understood, as previously pointed out, that fair and equal treatment of Puerto Rico, in the matter of refined sugar, does not mean any material change in the employment situation on the continent. This is indicated by further reference to the letter previously quoted from the Secretary of State, Hon. Cordell Hull, to Senator HARRISON, which, while referring specifically to Cuba, applies equally as well to the refined situation in Puerto Rico:

> In view of the highly mechanized nature of the sugar-refining business and the small amount of labor engaged therein (around 14,000 in the whole United States), no appreciable increase in employment could be expected to take place in this country if Cuban refined sugar were cut down.

It should be further understood that Puerto Rico has no quarrel with continental cane-sugar refiners. The island has supplied continental refiners with sugar for 40 years and has taken whatever price the refiners offered, and expects to continue this relationship. The continental refiners should be Puerto Rico's best friend. But, regardless of their attitude toward Puerto Rico, the island will fight to the last ditch, as would any self-respecting area under the American flag, against the injustice that would result from allowing a few refiners to establish discrimination against the island.

I hope the House will defeat the amendment proposed. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas, a member of the committee, Mr. KLEBERG.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, it so happens that as a member of the House Committee on Agriculture and as one of those who has heretofore spoken on this matter, I have neither one single refinery in my district nor one single stalk of sugarcane nor one single sugar beet in the district which I represent. In addressing myself to this subject this afternoon, I do so with much more in mind concerning this legislation than it would be possible for me to express in the brief time given in this debate.

Of course, if this is to be a continuing resolution, Mr. Chairman, it should carry with it the entire set of restrictions, quotas, and everything affecting the entire sugar industry, as affected by the Sugar Act repeatedly adopted from 1934 on down through 1937, and a part of which came to an end in 1940—the part which came to an end in March of this year, the part that is sought to be put back into this measure to make it a real continuing act, by the amendment offered by my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Sugar legislation and the difficulties which attend it can only be understood by those who strive and work with it. I had hoped personally, with the experience I have had in working on this matter, never to be brought again into this vexatious question. I recall my beloved friend the gentleman from Colorado, FRED CUMMINGS, once a cowboy like I was, and the way he worked on the Sugar Act of 1937, trying to bring about an agreement between the discordant elements that entered into this picture. Of course, to consider only the producing end of the sugar industry leaves out that part of the industry which makes it useful to the consumer, the finished product for consumption. Now, were this bill to provide such restrictions and such effects upon the beet-sugar mills as that which affects the cane-sugar refiners, you would find my friend the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS] and my friend the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE] tearing their hair and gnashing their teeth over the prospects. Of course, my friends will recall the fights that have occurred heretofore between the producers and processors in different lines, but just like the United States of America and its enterprises, all of our allied industries depend one upon the other, and in the final analysis upon the consumer, for productive returns. So in considering this picture which we have before us today, let us be fair and face the limited facts upon which this argument is based.

In the last act the question of discrimination was raised during the discussion of this question. The gentlemen who are now arguing against replacing the restrictions which existed heretofore in all the acts up to this time under the quota aimed their ideas of discrimination at Hawaii and Puerto Rico as raw-sugar producers, not as refined-sugar producers, and referred to cheap labor engaged in the production of sugar.

Today we find the question of discrimination presented from a different angle. That is one of the points, but that is not the crux of this question. It has been noised abroad, conferences have been held even like those held in 1937 when the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Interior even went to the White House and presented a picture which reflected as they claimed a discrimination against American citizens—the citizenship of Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

As a matter of fact, however, every country, State or section of the country which produces sugar had to accept a certain compromise which could be shown to be discriminatory. This, because it is impossible to make a set of restrictions or quotas which would affect all with absolute equality. Everyone, every section, and every part of the industry under the legislative plan had to give and take, yes and expect, certain inequalities in the application and effect of the law.

My position, Mr. Chairman, is taken, however, for the benefit of all concerned and to prevent destruction of one of the vital branches of the industry.

Congress should amend the Cummings bill, H. R. 9654, to restore the quotas on refined sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico. In doing this, Congress will, for the fourth time, decide that under a sugar-quota system, there should be protection for home labor and industry as well as protection for tropical labor and industry.

The only argument that has ever been made for eliminating the refined quotas on Hawaii and Puerto Rico is that they are, in some way, a discrimination against these islands. Congress has heard that point argued, back and forth, for 6 years, and it has never found any merit in it.

In 1934, when the first Sugar Act was written, the charge of discrimination was raised on this floor. But it was not given serious consideration at that time by anyone, because the sugar-producing industry—including Hawaii and Puerto Rico—was anxious to have legislation drafted which would stabilize their raw-sugar production. We all know, of course, that it is raw sugar and not refined sugar which is of real importance to the people of the Tropics.

Congress passed the sugar bill in 1934 with quota limitations on refined sugar, the bill was sent to the President, and it was duly signed. And when the President signed the bill in 1934, he emphasized the importance of raw sugar but he did not even mention the quotas on refining.

In June 1936 Congress passed a joint resolution to modify and extend the Sugar Act. I stress that the joint resolution was "to modify" as well as to "extend" the act. But at that time there was no discussion or consideration regarding the quotas on tropical refined sugar. Congress simply extended the Sugar Act, and it extended that act with all of its complements, raw-sugar quotas, refined-sugar quotas, processing taxes, bounties, and so on.

In 1937 Congress, both in the House and the Senate, had a long-drawn-out discussion of this sugar issue. Congress started to consider sugar in January 1937, and it did not finish the job until September of that year. For 8 months the Members of Congress heard the arguments pro and con.

The heart of the sugar debate in 1937 was the very same issue which is before the House today; that is, whether or not there should be quota limitations on refined sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico. At that time the charge of discrimination was made by the Secretaries of Agriculture and the Interior. Discrimination was analyzed and discussed in great detail from every conceivable angle, not only in the committees of the House and the Senate, but on the floor of Congress.

We all recall what happened in the Committee on Agriculture when it wrote the Sugar Act of 1937. It used the Sugar Act of 1934 as a basis. When the committee came to the refined-sugar quotas it continued them as an integral part of the quota system. After the bill was reported to the House with the refined quotas included, the committee was criticized by the Departments for doing so. The committee, in order to be sure of the fairness of its position, reanalyzed the whole problem, and again voted decisively to maintain the refined quotas in the bill.

When the bill came on the floor for vote, my colleague and good friend, the gentleman from Texas, MARVIN JONES, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, offered an amendment to eliminate the quotas on refined sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico. But those of us who recall his remarks at that time remember that he was doing the job of a soldier. He did not seriously question the wisdom or propriety of his own committee's decision to keep limits on tropical refining. He even went so far as to admit that the sugar problem was an extremely complicated one and that there was a great deal to be said on both sides of the question. The only real reason that my colleague from Texas gave for eliminating the refined-sugar quotas in 1937 was that, if not eliminated, the bill might not become law. The House, by a substantial vote, decided to maintain the quotas on tropical refining in order to protect American workmen.

And when the bill went to the Senate, there were more charges of discrimination. But when the bill came up for vote, the Senate did the same thing it did in 1934 and 1936; it continued the refined-sugar quotas. And I want to quote from the RECORD what Senator HARRISON, of Mississippi, said when the bill was on the floor:

> When we write into this proposed legislation for the third time a similar provision, putting a limitation on direct-consumption sugar from Puerto Rico and Hawaii, how can it be said that the measure will be vetoed? (p. 9341).

Senator HARRISON was right. The bill, including the refined-sugar quotas, was sent to the President and it was signed.

Now, there are a lot of people who have spoken about a restoration of the refined-sugar quotas in this sugar bill. To me there is no restoration at all. What this House is going to do today is to continue the refined-sugar quotas as they were provided for in 1934, in 1936, and in 1937. It makes no difference to say that the quotas on Puerto Rican and Hawaiian refined sugar terminated on March 1, 1940, and, consequently, we are now restoring them. Actually what we are doing is continuing the Sugar Act of 1937 and, as a part of that continuation, we are continuing the refined-sugar quotas.

Senator HARRISON has explained why the quotas on refined sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico terminated as of March 1, 1940. He said on the floor of the Senate in 1937:

> We fixed the date March 1, 1940, in the hope that when Congress meets in 1940 we will have at least 2 months during the session of Congress which will begin in January to pass legislation that will take care of this situation (p. 9341, Aug. 19, 1937).

And he gave this further warning to the sugar industries of Hawaii and Puerto Rico:

> I do not want them (the American tropics) to make any investment (in sugar refineries) on the basis that I am going to vote a continuation of any bill without a restriction on refined sugars from those possessions or anywhere else coming into this country. They may make that argument, but they will not get anywhere with it.

Unfortunately, Congress did not have the time to enact sugar legislation before March 1, 1940, and this has brought a hardship upon the men working in our home refineries, because refined sugar from Puerto Rico and Hawaii is not now restricted.

I firmly believe that the amendment to restore the quotas on Puerto Rican and Hawaiian refined sugar should be enacted. The only possible argument against these quotas is the fact that the Department of Interior and the Department of Agriculture have claimed that they are "discriminatory" against what we know to be a highly subsidized industry.

I cannot help but feel that the Members of this House who have joined with the Departments of Agriculture and Interior in taking this position are much more concerned about the fear of a possible veto rather than really convinced that the amendment would involve any discrimination against Puerto Rico or Hawaii. And I want to point out at this time that the original 1940 Cummings bill (H. R. 8746), which was rejected by the House Committee on Agriculture, was characterized by the administration as being discriminatory because it proposed to expand the production of beet sugar without providing for a corresponding expansion of cane sugar in Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

I repeat that it is a fear of a veto rather than an abstract principle which is behind the shift that has taken place in certain quarters regarding the propriety of imposing refined-sugar quotas on Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

My friends and colleagues on the House Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE], thought in 1937 that the charge of discrimination was a smoke screen thrown out in an attempt to expand refining by cheap tropical labor at the expense of well-paid American workmen. A review of the RECORD shows that they gave vigorous support to the 1937 Sugar Act which included the refining quotas.

If the possibility of a veto is the crux of this matter, let us face it. The President did not veto the Sugar Act in 1934 or 1936 or 1937 when Congress provided refined quotas as well as raw quotas. Certainly, if Congress decides four times in a row that there is no discrimination involved in refined-sugar quotas, this may carry some weight.

The Constitution provides that the Congress of the United States shall write the laws of this country. If fear of the veto power dominated congressional action, the legislative process would be frozen solid. No piece of legislation would ever be enacted if the President or the departments hinted that it was unacceptable. The Congress of the United States represents the people of the 48 States, and it is charged with the responsibility of considering and enacting the laws for those people. To shirk this responsibility would be a violation of the trust which the people have reposed in the Members of this House.

The approval by Congress of the refined-sugar quotas on the tropical islands for the fourth consecutive time will be evidence that Congress is determined not to discriminate against the people of continental United States or any citizen or group to a destructive degree; but, on the contrary, to be as fair and impartial as possible to all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER], a member of the committee.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, you have only had a very small taste of sugar this afternoon, but during the present session before the Committee on Agriculture we have had extensive hearings on various sugar bills; in fact, we heard so much about sugar it reminded me somewhat of my trip to California last November investigating the forest problem. Everywhere I went all I heard was "ham and eggs," known as the California old-age pension plan, in fact so much so that it kept me hungry during my whole stay in that wonderful State. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD], a very distinguished Congressman, and a good friend of mine, stated that if you put the McCormack refining sugar quota amendment in we would have additional imports and it would interfere with the producers of sugar beets and sugarcane in this country. Mr. Chairman, whether this amendment is placed in the bill or left out of it will not have anything to do with increasing imports. Listen to the real purpose of this bill and you will see that the gentleman is mistaken.

The bill extends for an additional year the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937, that is, permits the Secretary of Agriculture to make accrued payments for the crop years of 1941 and previous years. This bill also extends the quota provisions and the conditional benefit payment provisions which will expire December 31, 1940, unless the Cummings bill is passed. In other words, the McCormack amendment does not have anything to do with imports.

By means of yearly marketing quotas on both raw and refined sugar, Congress since 1934 has divided the American sugar market among the various sugar producing and refining groups. The Cummings bill leaves out refining quotas which the McCormack amendment proposes to place in the bill as follows:

	Tons
1. The beet-sugar refinery	1,400,000
2. The tropical refiners (mostly Cuba and Puerto Rico)	600,000
3. The home cane sugar refining industry	4,300,000

It is my understanding that prior to the passage of legislation in the interest of the sugar groups the beet refining people refined only about 700,000 tons, but under the refining quota program as just stated the beet-sugar refiners receive a quota of 1,400,000 tons. I cannot understand for a minute how this amendment will interfere with the beet-sugar interests of the country, either the growers or the refiners. But the passage of this bill without the inclusion of the McCormack amendment could play havoc with the refiners in the United States in that it would permit Puerto Rico and especially Hawaii to increase their refining of sugar perhaps 800,000 tons or more. This would be as stated at the expense of the refiners and the laborers who work in the refineries of the United States.

The reason the committee did not report a real sugar bill to the House was because we had before our committee about five or six different sugar groups, all of them having different views and interested in different bills. We could not, therefore, get them together, and we could not get the committee together on a real comprehensive bill.

You have heard in the discussion all about this legislation, and I need not take more of your time. I hope that the McCormack amendment will be voted in and that the bill will be passed, for the reason that it is very necessary that we pass this extension of the 1937 act.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is it not a fact that without the McCormack amendment the quota from Puerto Rico and Hawaii will actually be increased, for the reason that they will bring it in in the refined state, whereas if it is imported in the raw state 3 percent is lost in refining?

Mr. FULMER. I so understand.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That gives them 3 percent over what they have at the present time.

Mr. FULMER. I thank the gentleman for his observation, and I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], a member of the committee.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the McCormack amendment because I am opposed to putting any quotas or limitations upon the manufacture of anything in any part of the United States. That is what the McCormack amendment does, it puts a limitation upon the manufacture of sugar in certain parts of the United States. If that amendment should impose a limitation upon the manufacture of sugar in Massachusetts, or New York, or New Jersey, I would be just as quick to oppose it. There is nothing in the present Sugar Act that puts any limitation upon the manufacture of sugar anywhere, and I do not believe this Congress should put itself on record as saying that there ought to be a limitation or a quota in any State or any part of the country upon the manufacture of any legitimate product.

Mr. OSMERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I am sorry, I do not have time to yield.

If we recognize such a doctrine, then some day somebody will come along and put a limitation upon the amount of flour we can manufacture in Kansas. I do not believe there is a Member of this House who would want to recognize the doctrine that Congress has the right to say that any part of this country must have its right to manufacture limited.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I am sorry, I cannot yield. I have but 5 minutes.

There has been a great deal of camouflage in connection with the debate upon this measure. This amendment is spoken of as something designed to benefit labor. As a matter of fact, there are about 14,000 people employed in the refining of cane sugar in the United States; 14,000 people out of some 30,000,000 people gainfully employed in this country.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I cannot yield. I will anticipate the gentleman's question by saying there are other people who are indirectly dependent upon the sugar-refining industry in the United States. There are just as many and more who are dependent, however, upon the domestic sugar industry in this country, because there are employed in the domestic sugar industry in the United States, including Hawaii and Puerto Rico, some 300,000 people, and in the continental United States there are employed something like 90,000 field workers and something like 10,000 factory workers in the manufacture of beet sugar. Beet sugar in this country offers us our greatest opportunity perhaps to use surplus agricultural acres. It is a deficit crop; and I may say to my friends from Florida and Louisiana, as well as those coming from other beet-producing sections, that I am in favor of producing in the United States all of the sugar we can, and I think if properly encouraged we can produce in the United States all of the sugar that we require. To do that, however, we must have protection.

The cane-refining industry of this country is opposed to protection. It is opposed to the beet-sugar industry—and I am not criticizing them for that attitude, because they are not served by protection, they are served by free trade—and for this reason, and because of the fact that their interests are diametrically opposite, we have ever a conflict there. I hope that none of my friends from the beet-producing sections of the country will be misled today into thinking that they should support this amendment, because fundamentally we have two different groups here who are fighting. It is too bad, but it cannot be helped. There is no interest, so far as the refiners are concerned, which is not in conflict with an increase in the production of beet sugar in this country. That conflict has always existed. It is unfortunate. I hope those of us who are interested in the beet-sugar industry will, in order to protect that industry, support the bill unamended, because it is necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

PROTECTION

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, I was very gratified to hear my friend the gentleman from Kansas stand up for the policy of protection. I recognize that this issue is very vitally involved, but any implication that those of us supporting the McCormack amendment hold any antagonism to the domestic-sugar industry is unwarranted on the record being written here today. We stand for the same protection for the domestic-sugar industry and for the refining industry as well, and most of the advocates of that policy have stood together in accomplishing the legislation which has hitherto prevailed—until it lapsed a few short months ago.

The refining industry has existed for years. As a member of the Committee on Agriculture, representing neither a refinery, a beet-sugar, or a sugarcane section, I have listened to the arguments of the various Members. I have not heard one word suggested by my friend the gentleman from Colorado as to why there is any warrant for a change in the position which he himself has hitherto held except the subtle and apparently sufficient suggestion that he feared the President would not approve.

I submit that if our legislation is to be tailor-made at the White House, then we might as well close up shop and go home. I say that as a legislative and deliberative body, it is our duty to determine our legislation in accordance with what we believe to be the best interest of the people and the constituents we represent.

If the President shall hold different views, that is his right under the Constitution, but until that measure comes back here with good and sufficient reasons why our attitude should be changed, and before we jettison the cargo, before our sugar-beet friends throw overboard the refining industry with which they have been for a long time associated, it would be well for them to stand firmly for the protection of all those concerned here in the United States.

I share the sympathies expressed by my friend from Puerto Rico. I realize the problem they have; but I submit the solution of their problem is not to be found in throwing overboard the 14,000 workers and all the others dependent upon a great industry that is here represented. We are confronted with a condition and not a theory. No fine-spun argument of American territorial rights can blind us to the fact that without the McCormack amendment we are destroying the sugar-refining industry in the United States and turning it over to the peon labor of Puerto Rico. As a Member on this side of the aisle—I will not undertake to speak for the other side—since we have taken over William Green and John L. Lewis in the past week, I hope my friends on this side will show that this newfound alliance with labor will represent something in the action of this Congress and that we will record ourselves as being in favor of protection for American labor, and do that without delay. [Applause.]

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. May I say that there are 18,000 workers directly employed in this industry, not 14,000.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am glad to be corrected.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I was interested in what Members on the majority side had to say if the McCormack amendment went in that the President might veto it; but it did not prevent their voting for a bill the other day condoning child labor. Surely he ought to veto that if he lives up to pronouncements against child labor. I hope that the President will veto it. He has protested so much against employing child labor. I do not see how he can sign a bill that condones it. It is vital to the fourteen to eighteen thousand sugar refiners that the McCormack amendment be adopted—and to the sugar industry as a whole in this country. I do not believe the President will veto the bill with the McCormack amendment in it.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. There seems to be some question whether there are 14,000 or 18,000 refiners involved. I may say to the gentleman, if he is talking about protection, that there are 70,000 beet growers involved in addition to the dozens of beet-sugar factories employing thousands and thousands of individuals, plus the fact that this sugar for the factories is produced in America.

Mr. BREWSTER. As I tried to make clear, the advocates of the McCormack amendment are ready to accord the same consideration to beet and cane sugar domestically grown that was agreed to in 1937 and 1934. We feel there is no reason for now going back upon an arrangement that was equitable then and is equitable now.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes a member of the committee, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all arguments thereto close in 1 hour and 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, when we came here in 1933 the sugar-beet industry, like all agriculture, was prostrate. It was a losing game everywhere. We enacted the first law in 1934, and recovery commenced to take hold. The factories opened. Farmers commenced to raise sugar beets at a profit. The Congress reenacted that law in 1937, and business went forward. The law expires this year. We on the Committee on Agriculture found it impossible to agree on the terms of a permanent law, as we should have done, taking care of the various interests, so we come with this bill today simply extending the present act for 1 year.

Just think of what will happen if we adopt the McCormack amendment and the bill is vetoed. The sugar-beet industry would be ruined and our raw-sugar markets open to the world. Cuba can produce all the sugar we use in the United States, and the few sugar factories in New York and Philadelphia may prosper, but is the rest of the country to have no consideration?

There are almost a million acres of land in sugar beets. Much of that land cannot be planted to another crop which can be grown profitably. Almost a million people are directly interested. I am counting the sugar workers and the farmers and their dependents and I am counting the refineries out in the sugar-beet districts. If you adopt this amendment and the bill is vetoed you are destroying an industry that is today producing almost one-third of all the sugar of our country.

I recognize that our brilliant colleague from Massachusetts with his ability can almost make black look white. No man on this floor can present a proposition so plausibly. He presents his case just as if it were an ordinary question of protection for an industry. It is, in fact, to protect certain refineries which fear there will be an increased production in refined sugar in certain parts of the United States, namely, Puerto Rico, and Hawaii.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEALEY. How many gentlemen have requested time, and how much time will be allotted to each Member speaking on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has listed 32 names and, under the unanimous-consent agreement, debate is limited to 1 hour and 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I happen to come from one of the largest beet-growing States in the Union. I have been informed that those representing the beet growers in the State of Michigan and the eastern beet area are in favor of the McCormack amendment. They do not oppose that amendment. I hear talk about its restricting beet production. I cannot understand the arguments along that line, because we have not used up the quota that was allotted to the beet growers in Michigan and I understand that is true nationally, so why worry about it?

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. How can this continuing resolution possibly affect the production of beet sugar?

Mr. HOOK. It cannot.

Mr. HEALEY. It keeps it as it has been since 1934.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it not a fact that if we pass this bill it freezes the production of beets at present levels?

Mr. HOOK. No; it does not.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In what way does it not? You are not allowed any increase in quota for production.

Mr. HOOK. You have not even used up your quota yet.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I understand, but I am talking about the future.

Mr. HOOK. This bill continues the act only 1 year.

Mr. O'CONNOR. What I am talking about is that this bill does not provide for an increase in production in the future.

Mr. HOOK. Yes; but this is only for 1 year. This is not a permanent thing.

It is claimed that any limitation upon the refining of sugar in the American Tropics is a discrimination against American citizens down there.

Who are the Puerto Rican refiners who say that they are being discriminated against? The facts show that there are only two important refiners in Puerto Rico and that they have got 82 percent of the business down there. One is known as the Puerto Rican-American Sugar Refining Co., which is owned 100 percent by the richest family in Puerto Rico—the Serralles. The other refinery, located a few miles away, is owned by the Roig family.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. Does either of these families pay an income tax?

Mr. HOOK. Neither one of these families pays an income tax, although they have incomes ranging from $2,000,000 to $4,000,000.

The discussion of this sugar problem, which has taken up so much time of the House, centers around these two Puerto Rican families, and whether or not they are being fairly treated.

Let us look at the Serralles family, of which the present head is one Juan Eugenio Serralles. This family owns two sugar mills with thousands of acres of sugar land. It operates a rum distillery and owns the biggest refinery on the island. The value of all of these properties is estimated at $10,000,000, and this great wealth is concentrated in one family living on an island which is one of the most wretchedly poor in the world.

What is the Roig family? They own two raw-sugar mills and thousands of acres of cane land, and they have made plenty of money on their refinery at the expense of the workmen in the refineries in the United States.

Now, both of these Puerto Rican families, Roig and Serralles, have been made rich by the sugar consumers of the United States. For many years, these families have received direct and indirect subsidies on their production of raw sugar and this, and this alone, has enabled them to build refineries to unfairly compete with the home industry. Since 1934 these two families alone, as raw-sugar producers, have received over $2,000,000 from the Federal Treasury, and about $20,000,000 more as subsidies from consumers here.

Now, no one knows how much money these two families make each year out of the sugar hand-outs. These so-called American families do not pay American income taxes, and they make no statement of their financial condition to the United States Government. However, on the basis of the earnings of other sugar companies in Puerto Rico, it can be estimated that they make a combined net income of somewhere between one and one-half and two million dollars a year.

Now the Roig and Serralles families have their sugar plantations and refineries but a few miles from the Lafayette plantation which was purchased by the United States Government in 1936 through the Puerto Rican Reconstruction Administration which operates under the Department of the Interior. When the plantation was purchased a study was made by the Government of the labor and social conditions there.

And what did this Federal agency find on this typical sugar plantation? It reports that "most of the workers' houses consist of one and two rooms and a kitchen." Rents paid run around 30 cents to 50 cents a week, and the report further shows that 87 percent of these poor workers' houses have no bathing conveniences of any kind, and none of the towns in which these sugar workers lived is equipped with any system of sewerage.

What kind of food do these workers have? The Government reports that "the staple food, of the Puerto Rican sugar peasants, consists of vegetables, mainly tubers, and codfish for lunch, and rice and beans for dinner." Thirty-five percent of the families reported that they had only black coffee for breakfast and 40 percent reported that they did not use milk in their daily diet.

And, finally, the Government reports that " the result—of the diet—is a case of general debility and malnutrition and great susceptibility to disease."

Now, I cannot understand any reason why this House should adopt sugar legislation to enlarge the profits of the Roig and Serralles families. Such an increase in profits would come about if Puerto Rico is permitted to expand its refining of sugar. Certainly, the extension of refining in Puerto Rico could not raise the Puerto Rican worker out of the terrible poverty in which he finds himself under the plantation system on that island.

I trust the McCormack amendment is adopted.

This is the amendment I offered in committee, which was defeated by a small margin, but since that time some of the members, who voted against it in committee, after further study, now favor it.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, as a New York City farmer, I would like to appeal to the Representatives from the 17 Western States who were here yesterday crying on our shoulders asking for our votes. It seems to me that from the time I came to Congress I have been hearing of the farmers' plight and their distressed condition and the importance of helping them. We have been giving that help throughout the years, and today we find the Representatives of the farmers that we have always helped ready to throw the sugar refiners in our part of the country to the wolves.

Those of us who come from New York City feel that unless this bill is amended, by the adoption of the McCormack amendment, that it will be an unfair bill not only to the refiners but to our city and our community. Our plight in New York City is probably worse than that of the farmers. Our mayor, about 2 weeks ago, found it necessary to appoint a committee to attract business to our city. It seems that many of our buildings are empty, factories idle, and we have to get some financial help. I hope my farmer friends will not let us down by taking this business away from our city refiners.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Would it be possible for the Western States, sparsely settled as they are, to get any bill through this House for reclamation purposes if we did not get the support of the industrial East?

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. The gentleman is absolutely right, and I am very glad to have his statement as he is one of few Members here who has always been mindful and appreciative of the cooperation of the East.

The American Federation of Labor adopted the following resolution in support of the McCormack amendment:

Whereas the refining of raw cane sugar in continental United States gives employment to thousands of workers affiliated with the American Federation of Labor; and

Whereas the jobs and pay rolls of the sugar-refinery workers have been reduced since 1925 by the flood of refined sugar which has been imported into this country from Cuba, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Philippines, and other tropical islands; and

Whereas a further loss in jobs and pay rolls will occur after 1940 unless these workers receive an adequate protection in the Sugar Act to be written in that year: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this convention, the fifty-ninth of the American Federation of Labor, go on record as recommending that an adequate protection (through tariffs, quotas, or otherwise) be provided for the sugar-refinery workers in any sugar legislation which may be developed by Congress in 1940, and under no circumstances should there be any further expansion in the importation of refined sugar made in the tropical islands for our market; and be it further

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor does endorse and advocate protective legislation for these workers.

Your committee recommends approval of the purpose of this resolution and would refer it to the executive council for study and action.

The report of the committee was unanimously adopted.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this House should not adopt the Cummings proposal without first adopting the McCormack amendment.

We have located in my State, at Savannah, a refinery that is possibly in closer proximity to the refineries of Puerto Rico than any other refinery in continental United States. Our refinery buys its raw sugar in the raw-sugar markets of this Nation and of the world. The refineries in Puerto Rico are owned by the same group who own the raw-sugar-producing plantations of Puerto Rico. The figures from the Department of Agriculture show that two refinery groups alone receive annually under the provisions of the Cummings resolution approximately $600,000 in the form of subsidies and bounties. Now, Mr. Chairman, this means that before those two refineries in Puerto Rico have refined 1 pound of raw sugar, they have already received bounties and subsidies in the sum of $600,000 annually. Against that, our refinery has not received 1 penny. Now, you are proposing under this Cummings resolution to make our refinery go into competition with those refineries that, with $600,000 of annual subsidies, can easily undersell and put out of business our continental refineries, not only in Savannah, but those along the entire Atlantic seaboard. Now, is that fair or is that just? I believe in equality with respect to all groups, but you are not giving it under this Cummings resolution unless you modify it by protecting your refineries and those engaged in the refining industry of this country with the McCormack amendment.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. The gentleman realizes, does he not, that in the event this Sugar Act should expire, the tariff goes back to $1.50 and the processing tax comes off?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Probably so, but then you are treating your refineries in all parts of the United States on an absolutely fair and equal basis, which you are not doing under the Cummings resolution unless the McCormack amendment is adopted.

The people of Georgia are opposed to the enactment of the Cummings bill, H. R. 9654, unless that bill is amended to restore the quota limitations on refined sugar shipped here from the American tropics, Puerto Rico and Hawaii. The Cummings bill is unacceptable because it would continue the Sugar Act of 1937 for 1 year without guarding the interests of American labor and capital in the sugar-refining industry.

Georgia does not have any production of sugar beets or sugarcane (for sugar) but it does have a large and important refining industry at Savannah. Savannah is one of the oldest and most important seaports in the South. What happens to Savannah and Savannah industry is of interest to everyone in Georgia. The refining of cane sugar is one of the most important industries in Savannah, and if the Cummings bill is enacted in its present form, this Savannah industry will receive a heavy blow. The people of my State do not want to see a flood of refined sugar from the tropics coming into Georgia and other States.

Down in Savannah there is one of the most modern cane-sugar refineries in the world. It has the capacity to produce over 2,500.000 pounds of refined sugar a day. Georgia's cane-sugar refinery is big enough to make five times as much sugar as is consumed in Georgia each year. At the present time the Georgia cane-sugar-refining industry has annual sales of over $20,000,000. A good part of this sum goes to pay the producers of raw sugar, and a large part of it goes to the Federal Government as taxes on that sugar. A substantial part of this $20,000,000 stays right in Georgia and creates purchasing power for local labor and local industry, which is of tremendous importance to the State. The Savannah refining industry purchases equipment, cartons, sugar bags, chemicals, and other supplies from every State in the South.

I do not see any reason why Congress should enact legislation in 1940 which will increase refining in Hawaii and Puerto Rico and decrease refining in my State. Who are the Puerto Rican refiners? The Government's records show that there are only two refineries of any size in Puerto Rico. These refineries are owned by the Roig and Serralles families. According to the reports of the Department of Agriculture, these refining families have received about $2,000,000 from the Federal Treasury since 1934 as bounties upon their production of raw sugar. At the same time these families pay, according to the Governor of Puerto Rico, some $7 or $8 a week to the refinery worker.

The Cummings bill (H. R. 9654) does not give any subsidies to the Georgia refining industry. It does not help Georgia labor. The bill does not provide any assistance to my State. On the contrary, by permitting the expansion of tropical refining, it would reduce the output of one of the most important industries in Georgia.

It is obvious under these circumstances that the people of Georgia must ask for the defeat of the Cummings bill unless it is amended to provide for the restoration of the quotas on Hawaiian and Puerto Rican refined sugar as were provided in the Sugar Acts of 1934 and 1937.

Mr. OSMERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. OSMERS. Mr. Chairman, the statement has been made here, probably more in facetiousness than in any other way, that in my previous remarks I advocated free trade. I made the statement that the only unit in the American sugar system that could maintain itself without protection and without subsidies is the American cane-sugar refining industry. Those of you who remember my vote on the reciprocal-trade agreements, those of you who know of the plants in my district that have been closed by the free trade we have today in many lines, know full well that I would certainly be the last Member of this House to speak in behalf of free trade. I think it would be better to say that I came here to speak and speak to you again to urge the adoption of the McCormack amendment because I want to protect an American industry that has demonstrated itself as efficient over a long period of years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, the people in my State, Pennsylvania, vigorously oppose the enactment of the Cummings bill (H. R. 9654), unless that bill is amended to restore quota limitations upon the amount of refined sugar to be imported each year from Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

Pennsylvania has, at Philadelphia, the largest cane-sugar refining industry in the world. Three refining plants give employment to thousands of persons, and create a purchasing power for Pennsylvania commodities which is felt all over the State. It is one of those Pennsylvania commodities—coal—in which I am particularly interested.

There are millions of employees in such coal States as Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Virginia, Illinois, Ohio, and Tennessee, who want to see quotas maintained against tropical refining, because an increase in tropical refining means a decrease in their sales of coal. In this regard, thousands of men in the United Mine Workers of America have voiced their objections this year against any further expansion of tropical refining.

The home cane-sugar refining industry is a very large user of coal. Last year it paid about $2,500,000 for coal and coke, and its indirect consumption of coal, through its purchases of gas, electricity, and steam, brought the total close to $3,000,000. This enormous consumption of coal arises from the fact that the refining plants must not only have power with which to operate their elaborate refining equipment—mixers, centrifugals, granulators, packaging machinery, and so on—but they also must heat great quantities of water for the purpose of washing and purifying the raw sugar.

To the noncoal States the consumption of $3,000,000 worth of coal a year may appear to be a small quantity. But the purchases of $3,000,000 of coal mean the creation of $1,500,000 of wages in the coal mines. And it must be recognized that the coal industry in Pennsylvania has suffered severe losses of business in recent years. This decrease in the output of Pennsylvania coal has meant an increase in unemployment and a drying up of purchasing power for the industry of the State generally.

The coal industry has made every conceivable attempt to win back some of its lost markets and to stop any further shrinkage of those markets. And every worker and every coal operator recognizes that if there is an expansion of tropical refining, there will be a contraction in the volume of coal which is marketed. This follows automatically because the refineries in the Tropics do not consume coal as do the refineries at home.

I repeat that the refining of raw cane sugar in the tropical islands does not utilize coal as fuel. Practically all the refining done in Cuba, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines is done on plantations as an adjunct of the growing of sugarcane and the production of raw cane sugar. The fuel which is used in the production of raw sugar and in the refining of that raw sugar is bagasse. Bagasse is the dried pulp which remains after the cane juice is crushed out of the cane stalk. The burning of bagasse, rather than coal, means that with the development of tropical refining, there is an immediate loss in the market for American coal. And as I have stated before, the depressed coal industry in Pennsylvania and other important coal States cannot afford to lose any more markets.

Let us look at the facts about the losses which the coal industry has suffered from the development of tropical refining. Before 1925 there was no refining done in the Tropics for the American market. After 1925 the industry had a rapid growth, largely because there was no protection afforded American refining workers. In the last 15 years—since 1925—6,841,000 tons of refined sugar have been imported from Cuba, Puerto Rico, and other islands. This is equivalent to the output of the home cane-sugar refining industry for about 1½ years. The refining industry now uses about 600,000 tons of coal and coke a year. Therefore, since 1925 there has been a displacement, due to tropical refining, of about 900,000 tons of American coal, worth about $4,500,000.

Unless properly amended, the Cummings bill, H. R. 9654, will further reduce the output of the refining industry by a maximum of 1,500,000 tons a year, or by about 35 percent. In the next 15 years, therefore, if Hawaii and Puerto Rico refined all of their raw sugar, it would mean, as a maximum, a loss of some 22,500,000 tons, which is worth well over $100,000,000.

These figures on possible losses are maximum. But they are sizeable enough, even if reduced by one-half or two-thirds, to make every "coal-minded" person in the United States opposed to an increase in refining on the subsidized plantations of Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

And even if tropical refining did not displace a ton of Pennsylvania coal, the people in my State and district would be 100 percent against tropical refining. Workers in the coal industry have suffered from heavy losses of employment. But they remain closely knit and well organized—organized to help one another and their Pennsylvania fellow workers. Unionized coal workers do not want to see unionized sugar-refinery workers thrown out of jobs by unorganized cheap labor in the Tropics. Pennsylvania coal workers and Pennsylvania refinery workers are 100 percent together on this proposition.

The Cummings bill, H. R. 9654, should be amended to restore quota limitations upon refining in Hawaii and Puerto Rico. Unless this safeguard for Pennsylvania industry and labor is provided, the bill should be defeated.

Mr. LEONARD W. HALL. Mr. Chairman, for the protection of the great sugar-refining industry and its thousands of employees, I hope that the committee will adopt the McCormack amendment.

There are numerous reasons why the amendment should be adopted and the quota limitations of the 1937 law continued in force.

The positions of many thousands of employees in domestic sugar refineries are in danger. With these plants now working at only 60 percent of capacity, it is not difficult to foresee what will happen if our domestic industry is put further in competition with the refineries of our offshore islands. No one objects to competition on a fair and equal basis, but when you consider that the rate of wages in our domestic refineries is 70 cents per hour and upward, and the rate of wages in our offshore islands is $10 per week, you can readily see the dire results to our domestic refineries if these quota limitations on refined sugar are not placed in the law.

Furthermore, the offshore producers and refiners are one and the same people. As producers they have received subsidies from the Government. Our domestic refiners receive no subsidy. I ask you, is this competition on a fair and equal basis?

Another question might be asked: Is there any leading industry in the United States whose source of supply is limited to particular areas, as in the case of the refining industry, so that any reduction in the available supply of raw material from these areas by processing them means just that much reduction in volume in the industry here? The answer must be "no," and yet the Cummings bill proposes to do just that to the domestic sugar refining industry.

New York is the oldest and largest cane-sugar refining State in the Union. New Yorkers are proud of that industry. It is modern, efficient, and it employs well-paid American workmen who are 100 percent unionized. Certainly, New York does not want the Cummings sugar bill enacted unless it is amended to protect the interests of the New York industry and its employees by restoring the quotas on refined sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, this has resolved itself into something of a sham battle over what is really a nonessential. Whether this amendment is agreed to or not makes no particular difference. It is just a battle whether you continue one more parasite on the body politic. The important thing however is what this bill actually does, and I shall point out a few of those phases of the bill that actually stand out.

What is this bill we have under consideration? What does it do?

In the first place it is a bill which restricts the production of an absolutely essential nonsurplus commodity—sugar. We produce in this country less than one-third the amount of sugar we consume.

In the next place it is a bill of destruction; its passage will require the destruction of thousands of acres of growing sugarcane in this country. The attention of those on the Republican side of the aisle who wept so copiously over the slain little pigs is directed to this angle.

In the next place it is a bill which denies to American labor, American agriculture, and American citizens generally the right to produce an agricultural crop which we do not now have, but which we must secure from other shores.

In the next place it is a bill which penalizes the American consumer for the benefit of the New York owned, Cuban, and other off-shore producers.

In the next place it is a bill one of the main purposes of which is to continue the payment of enormous subsidies to corporations engaged in the production of sugar. Some of those subsidies exceed one-half million dollars to individual corporations.

In the next place it is a blow at national defense. It is in connection with this phase of the question that I want to speak briefly.

Both the Army and the Navy insist that sugar is a prime essential. It is doubtless one of those essentials about which the report on a recent naval bill had the following to say:

> We should acquire stock-piles of essential raw materials, not only for our military establishments, but also for our industrial establishments, for a period of at least 2 years, and develop the necessary facilities to use the essential raw materials available on this continent and prepare for the possible use of substitutes.

Instead of restricting—subsidize what is necessary.

It is just as important for our "defenders"—whether they be soldiers or sailors—to have adequate food supplies, as it is to have guns, tanks, planes, and ammunition. If the soldier is too weak from hunger and exhaustion to pull the trigger, what use is the gun?

Sugar is the cheapest and at the same time one of the quickest sources of energy known to man. Athletes about to enter some severe test of strength and endurance are frequently given sugar to increase their strength and prolong their endurance. The same method could and should be applied to soldiers. It is said by military experts that the German troops continued their relentless drive day after day without rest, because they were supplied with a form of concentrated energy which took the place of food and sleep, and it is the consensus of those military experts that the base from which this concentrated energy is made, is sugar.

Under the present sugar law, which certain special interests are trying so hard to continue for another year, continental United States is permitted to produce only 30 percent of continental consumption of sugar. The other 70 percent is imported from offshore areas and foreign countries.

Of those offshore areas supplying the United States' market, in round numbers, a million tons comes from the Philippines and a million tons from Hawaii. Of necessity all this sugar must be transported in ships. Unfortunately for our national economy, the ships which have heretofore engaged in such transportation are owned and controlled 40 percent by Japan, 40 percent Scandinavian (now German), 10 percent Dutch (now German), and 10 percent American (United States and Canadian).

Japanese vessels have already been ordered to stay in Asiatic waters for the time being. You know without my telling you what has happened to the Scandinavian and Dutch ships. Consequently there is a serious problem now to find bottoms to bring us the sugar we have so foolishly allocated under the quota system to those far-flung outposts. The Philippines and Hawaii may be able to bring to the United States their full quotas this year, but I am reliably informed that they will in all probability fail because of inadequate shipping facilities to supply their quotas by more than 300,000 tons.

But what about next year? We may be at war—God forbid! But even if we were not actually engaged in military or naval campaigns, we will be in the midst of a most brutal and relentless economic war with the totalitarian powers. In spite of our wonderful, growing Navy, Japan or Russia could and would in the twinkling of an eye cut us off from our 2,000,000 tons of "essential" raw material—sugar—from the Philippines and Hawaii.

Other offshore areas upon which the United States depends for this essential raw material—sugar—are Puerto Rico, which in round numbers sends us a million tons, and Cuba, 2,000,000 tons. Transportation facilities from Puerto Rico and Cuba are in very nearly the same predicament as those from Hawaii and the Philippines. A large portion of the ships engaged in transporting from Cuba and Puerto Rico are Scandinavian.

The problem of transportation is serious now. What will it be this time next year, or next month? The only routes available to ships plying between Puerto Rico, Cuba, and United States ports are those which are most vulnerable to attack and which most likely would be attacked first by an enemy of the United States. Thus 4,000,000 tons of essential raw material, essential food, if you please, may easily be lost to us.

The questions to be decided are clear-cut and easily understood.

If you are against the restrictions of an essential nonsurplus crop, vote against the bill.

If you are against the destruction of growing crops, vote against the bill.

If you are for the American farmer and the American laborer and in favor of his right to work and to produce, vote against the bill. If you are for the American consumer, vote against the bill.

If you are against the payment of tremendous subsidies to paunchy corporations already gorged with taxpayers' money, vote against the bill.

If you are for national defense in its primary and fundamental form—the supply of food for American people—vote against this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, there are two fundamental principles involved in what is before the House this afternoon. The first is whether or not we are going to give as much as we can of the American market to the American producer. It appears to me from this bill that the Committee on Agriculture is not only trying to give away the American market to foreign nations for sugar but likewise the American market for labor to our offshore possessions. I want to call the attention of this Agricultural Committee of the House to the fact that the standard of living is much lower in our offshore possessions than it is in the United States. Both the Democratic and Republican Parties pledge themselves in platforms to give to the American producer the American market which has been definitely violated in regard to the American farmers.

The second is whether or not we are going to give our American market for labor to our offshore possessions. I deeply sympathize with the people in Puerto Rico and in Hawaii in regard to unemployment, but I also sympathize more deeply with about nine or ten million unemployed people in this country, and if it comes to a question of taking care of somebody in Puerto Rico or Hawaii or taking care of somebody in Utah or Montana or Colorado, I am in favor of giving the work to the American laborer, and taking care of the unemployed in our offshore possessions, because it won't cost so much. I am going to support the McCormack amendment because I think the American market for labor should be reserved for the American laborer.

Mr. Chairman, every day—perhaps every hour—whole new chapters are being added to the history of civilization. Things of such terrific consequences to the world and to the United States are happening so swiftly it is difficult to grasp and to evaluate them.

It is clear to us here in Congress and to the American people that these are times of dire peril—these are times when there must be sincere unity of purpose and of action if we are to preserve for future generations all the ideals of America—all the cherished institutions of the American form of democracy which we hold so dear.

So great are the problems that confront Congress that I do not feel I have a right to consume much time in discussing the sugar bill that is now before the House. I do feel I should make a brief statement, however, because I was a member of the special, unofficial committee of Representatives and Senators who sought to write a new sugar bill.

In Montana—in the second district, which I represent—there are old-established sugar-beet factories. Montana has hundreds, yes, thousands, of farmers, sugar-factory workmen, railroad employees, coal-mining workers, livestock men, and others who depend for their daily living on the profitable production and sale of sugar beets. I owe to all these Montana people a clarification of my views in regard to this pending sugar bill.

When our unofficial joint committee set out to draft a sugar bill, I made it clear that, in my opinion, I felt the legislation should give the American sugar producer more of the American sugar market. This view was entirely consistent with my belief that, as far as possible, the American agricultural market belongs to the American farmer, and not to the farmers of any other country. We must not forget that our farmers pay the taxes. They are the ones who have property the assessor can find. In addition, on every other agricultural product our farmers enjoy practically 90 percent of the American market. Why discriminate against them in regard to sugar? We raise 29 percent of our consumption.

I tried to have written into the new sugar bill the proposition that the American producers of sugar, and all those thousands indirectly allied with the sugar farmers, should have the benefits that come from supplying the American market. I supported a plan that would have given the farmers of Montana and other States a larger share of the domestic market.

The bill we are considering now does not contain the provisions that I tried to get in it and which the Montana sugar farmers are insisting should be in it. Furthermore, under the parliamentary rule governing the consideration of the bill, we are not permitted to amend it so as to get such provisions in the legislation.

I had hoped that there would be an opportunity for me to offer, from the floor, the amendments that would have given the Montana sugar farmers what they are asking—and that is simply for the chance to supply a greater amount of the American market with the sugar the American people consume.

That opportunity is being denied.

I just want to continue for a few minutes to amplify my thoughts on this subject.

I feel that this is a time when the United States can ill afford to curtail any agricultural production. This is no time to freeze production of foods at the present level. It is being freely stated that the United States may quickly become the world's bread basket—that we may have to supply the refugees from war-battered Europe with whatever food they are going to have. This war is not over in Europe. I have a hunch that France is not dead yet. You know dead things crawl sometimes.

I say, and I believe it to be entirely logical, that if we are likely to become the world's bread basket then we are just as likely to become the world's sugar bowl. Sugar is an essential food. We all know that. Sugar may be stored indefinitely without any loss. It might be the part of wisdom for the Government to buy up the surplus sugar for just such an emergency as we are talking about.

If there is anything to the premise that the United States is in danger of becoming entangled in a war, then it becomes even more necessary that we do nothing here in Congress that would endanger our national supply of essential foodstuffs.

It is perfectly easy to imagine a time in the future when all the sea power this Nation has or can muster will have to be put into use for sea warfare. Such a situation would eliminate our opportunity to bring sugar from island producing areas and would leave our people entirely dependent on the sugar that could be produced right here in continental United States.

It would not be possible for us to grow enough sugar under the limiting restrictions of the quota system as it exists now and as it would operate under this proposed extension of the sugar law.

Of course, I realize the quotas could be suspended by Executive order, as has been done in the past, but that would not help much in a time of emergency. It would only produce more confusion in the sugar industry, as it has done already when such a procedure has been invoked.

When a nation is involved with an enemy in the horrors of armed conflict, that is no time to propose that the Army and the Navy and those who support them in the field and on the seas should live on Executive orders in lieu of food. You cannot grow sugar beets and you cannot raise sugarcane on a hit-or-miss basis. Like any other branch of agriculture, the production of sugar must be an orderly and systematized process to be successful.

Gentlemen, it seems to me that it is obvious that this is a time when we should urge that our agricultural resources of all kinds, particularly essential foodstuffs, be built up to the maximum. No one can say what our needs are going to be, but we know that it takes a lot of food to keep a nation of 130,000,000 people at full fighting strength.

And if our Nation has to fight again—and God knows I pray that it will not—this time it will not be any war according to the rules of international law, or according to some such regulations as a Spalding's Official Guide for War. It will be a long, cruel, and bitter conflict, with economic and agricultural resources counting as heavily as resources of armaments.

We all know that war brings higher prices for everything. The cost of living will rise, and rise rapidly. Does it seem logical, in such a circumstance, for us to deliberately enact a law that will add still more to the cost of living—a law that will prevent the maximum production and use of an essential food as sugar when we have the land, the seed, and the manpower and machinery to produce and process the crop?

Montanans, Mr. Chairman, have additional reasons for not liking the kind of sugar bill that is before us today.

They have favored, and have benefited by the resettlement program that has been worked out and put into operation in recent years. Montana farmers have geared themselves to meet the requirements of this program. They have, as far as they have been able, put their farm establishments in order so they could meet every requirement, comply with every regulation.

Think how it disrupts all this careful planning—all this effort to cooperate with the Federal Government in making the resettlement program succeed when the Government upsets the apple cart by imposing restrictions on the growing of one of the crops—sugar beets—that these farmers had been counting on heavily to meet all these requirements and regulations.

Then there is the broad-scale water-conservation program, involving many irrigation and reclamation dams and reservoirs in Montana. This highly desirable program has been worked out over a long period. Throughout the time I have been in Congress I have given my full support to this water-conservation program. I have done all I could to help foster and develop it.

The program, as the Federal Government projected it, calls for 100-percent repayment in virtually all cases of the money the Government advances for the dams and reservoirs. To meet the repayment schedules the farmers of Montana must grow cash crops. The Government demands cash, not sugar beets or any other crops, when the payments come due.

So the farmers of Montana and other Western States make plans and preparations to pay in cash and on time. And to do this means it is necessary that they be permitted to plant the crops for which they can get cash—the nonsurplus crops, such as sugar beets.

The fair thing, in my opinion, gentlemen, would have been for those in charge of the sugar program to say to the American farmer something like this:

"World affairs are in a critical stage. The picture is confused. But one thing is certain: America is going to need food. Whether we get into war or whether we do not, the American people will have to have sugar.

"As it stands now, the American beet and cane sugar growers produce only a small fraction of the sugar the American people require.

"You go ahead and produce all the sugar you can in Montana and all the other States. It will take a lot for our own people and a whole lot more for the starving millions of war refugees in other lands.

"An then, if we find that you American farmers cannot produce enough sugar for our own needs and for those who will look to us for help, then we will buy sugar from the islands that can produce it.

"But right now the American sugar market goes as far as possible to the American sugar farmer."

That is what I think should happen.

That is what I hoped to accomplish when it came time for considering the sugar law in this Congress.

Under the restrictions imposed in this body and in the bill before us, for the time being, such an accomplishment is absolutely barred.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I represent a district that has a sugar refinery in it, which refines approximately 250,000 tons a year. The major portion of that sugar comes in a raw state from Hawaii and Puerto Rico. The producers of that raw sugar get all the benefits that the law allows in the way of subsidies. The refinery gets nothing under the present law; neither are they asking for any subsidy. They are simply asking that if this law is to be continued the same quota protection shall be given to the refiner that is given to other branches of the sugar industry.

It does not injure the beet-sugar industry to the extent of one-thousandth part of one cent. It does not injure the cane-sugar industry of Louisiana or of Florida. It does not affect them. It only provides that the larger proportion of the sugar brought in shall be in the raw state rather than in a refined state, as will be the case if this bill goes through without the McCormack amendment.

It will be one of the greatest disasters to a large industry that the Congress has ever passed in its history if this quota is not sustained as it has been in former years.

TEXAS AND REFINED SUGAR—1940

The people of Texas do not want to see the Cummings bill (H. R. 9654) enacted unless it gives their sugar-refining industry an adequate protection. This means that the Cummings bill must be amended to restore the quotas on tropical refining in Puerto Rico and Hawaii as provided in the Sugar Acts of 1934 and 1937. If not so amended, the Cummings bill should be defeated as being discriminatory not only against a great Texas industry, but against all the people of my State. In days gone by, Texas did raise sugarcane, but now her sugar industry is entirely devoted to refining.

The modern industry, located at Sugar Land, near three or four great Texas ports, unloads some 250,000 tons of overseas tropical raw sugar each year for refining and distribution. The Texas refining industry has annual sales of some $20,000,000 a year, and this creates a purchasing power in my State which benefits thousands of businessmen and workmen.

Sugar is refined in Texas and other States by well-paid American workmen, living under American standards. I do not expect that Congress will wish to harm these American workingmen.

Now, I have nothing but the highest regard for the people of Hawaii and Puerto Rico, and I know that they have many problems to solve just as we do. Their major industry is the production of sugarcane and its conversion into raw sugar. They have always sold that raw sugar in the highly profitable American markets. Each year since 1934 these islands have received on the average a protection, through their raw-sugar quotas and bounties, of some $100,000,000 a year. This protection, of course, was afforded by consumers in Texas and other States.

Hawaii and Puerto Rico did not refine raw sugar for the mainland market before 1925, and no one can contend that the expansion of refined sugar in Hawaii and Puerto Rico is going to bring any noticeable increase in the income and general welfare of the people of those islands. Their livelihood is primarily dependent on raw sugar, not on refined.

The only objection that I have ever heard to the restoration of the refined-sugar quotas on Hawaii and Puerto Rico has been that such quotas would be a discrimination against American citizens living in those islands.

I do not understand the problem that way. It seems to me that the Sugar Act limits the activities of everyone in the sugar business, whether producers, processors, or refiners. The essence of the quota system is limitation, not expansion.

The home refiners are limited because they are prohibited by law from purchasing sugar except in those quantities and from those sources specified in the act. Hawaii and Puerto Rico are two of the most important sources of the supply of raw sugar. It is obvious to me that if the tropical sugar industry is permitted to withhold its raw sugar for refining, then the home refiners will be deprived of an essential source of their raw material.

Under these circumstances, it is reasonable and fair for Congress, if it is to continue the quota system, to restore the limitations upon Puerto Rican and Hawaiian refining. [Applause.]

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, it seems that just at this time no speech is made on the floor of this House unless some reference is made to its relation to and bearing on the national defense. It seems that no legislation debated in the House today, regardless of its character, is not in some way beneficial to our national defense. Battleships, airplanes, motorized equipment, rifles, and all other munitions of war are, of course, absolutely indispensable in our national defense. But they are not the most important element, for after all they have to be manned by soldiers, and soldiers cannot man ships, planes, tanks, and artillery without an adequate supply of good food.

When it comes to food, there is nothing in our diet more important and more essential than sugar. This country, in my opinion, should not be dependent on any foreign nation for any part of its food supply which it can supply for itself. In speaking of foreign countries, I even include Cuba and the Philippine Islands. Cuba is a foreign country, and the Philippine Islands soon will be. I do not want, at this time, to do anything that will interfere with or injure the Philippine Islands or Cuba unless it becomes necessary in adequately taking care of Americans.

One of our big problems now, and which has been facing us for a quarter of a century, is our surplus farm crops. We have done much during the last 8 years to ameliorate and correct this difficult problem. We have made some progress, but there is still much to be done. There are some crops in the United States which may be described as deficit crops. One of those crops is sugar. Why should there be any restriction on the production of sugar, either from beets or cane, within the United States? We have proved our efficiency in the production and in the processing of sugar beets and sugarcane. It can no longer be classed as an inefficient industry. Of course, we cannot compete with tropical and breechclout labor. We do not want to—we do not have to. Seventy-five thousand farmers in the United States today are engaged in the raising of sugar beets. More than a million acres of land are planted to sugar beets. Thousands and thousands of laborers are employed in the beet fields. Other thousands and thousands of American laborers are engaged in the beet and cane refineries. Their economic security is a liability of this Government. Their social welfare is a liability of this Government. We must and we will provide for their welfare and livelihood. Why, when we have a deficit crop like sugar, would not it be good, common horse sense and sound economy to plant every acre we can in sugar beets and sugarcane, taking this acreage out of the production of wheat, corn, cotton, and other surplus crops?

As a matter of sound economy today, as a matter of national defense, as a matter of fairness and equity among all Americans, I take the position that we should raise every pound of sugar and refine every pound of sugar that we possibly can within the United States. American farmers and American labor are our first problems. Charity should begin at home. When we take care of American labor and American farmers, and not until then, should we be looking elsewhere to bestow our bounty and generosity.

Give a Utah farmer 10 acres of sugar beets and he becomes independent. It is Utah's best agricultural cash crop. We cannot exist in that State unless we raise sugar beets. We have learned to depend on this crop. It would be unfair and unjust to refuse to protect Utah farmers and Utah beet-sugar factories.

At the last meeting of the sugar bloc in Congress, Representatives and Senators from sugar-beet States were demanding an expansion of sugar-beet acreage. We did not want to hurt or injure any refinery in the United States. We did propose to decrease the Cuban quota 200,000 tons, and to allocate that quota so as to expand cane and sugar-beet production in the United States. But we were very careful and cautious in considering the matter not to injure the eastern refineries. Our recommendation was that in whatever amount the Cuban quota was decreased it should apply exclusively to refined sugar. How different our attitude was to the attitude expressed by Mr. Bunker before the Agriculture Committee, and Mr. Dalton, spokesman for the eastern refineries. Mr. Bunker was questioned by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE] at the hearings before the Agriculture Committee. He admitted that the eastern refineries could not be hurt by decreasing the Cuban refined quota and permitting some expansion of continental beet and cane. But he took the "dog in the manger" attitude and said in substance, "while that would not injure us at all, we will refuse to go along with you on it, unless we get part of the expansion." I know this is not the attitude of the distinguished gentlemen from Massachusetts in this House, particularly JOHN MCCORMACK and ARTHUR HEALEY, nor is it the attitude of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY], and other Representatives from refinery States, but it was the expressed attitude of the people for whom they now speak and ask this amendment.

Representatives from beet-sugar States today find themselves in a precarious position. By the grapevine route and by innuendo, we have been advised that a veto is indicated if the McCormack amendment is adopted. I know it is the wish of every man from the West that he could join our good friend, JOHN MCCORMACK, in his amendment. He and his colleagues from the big industrial States have been very helpful to us in the West; in fact, they have been generous. I know that if votes from the West are cast against the McCormack amendment today, he and his colleagues from the East will understand our position. We were given to understand that the administration would not go along with us on an expansion of beet acreage at this time. We deplored this fact, and it was not until after many weeks of consideration and negotiation that we finally came to the conclusion that the best we could do at this session of Congress was to get an extension of the present Sugar Act.

Before closing, I want to devote a little time to the questions of whether there is a world market for sugar, and whether so much talk about the great subsidy to the sugar industry of the United States, by some people, is really justified.

It is my understanding, and I have given considerable study to the question and contacted many economists who are expert in this field, that there is no such thing as a world market for sugar. The great quantity of sugar produced in the world is sold in protected markets, very similar to the market in the continental United States for the sugar produced in Cuba. What Dr. Ayres referred to as "the world market" is simply the market that exists for dumping sugar, or sugar that is dumped onto the open market, particularly London, after the producer has sold nine-tenths of his product in a protected market. Not to exceed 10 percent of the world production is sold in this dump market. How can it be said that a market for such dump sugar could in any way or by any stretch of the imagination be set up or described as a world market? But Dr. Ayres and some people very prominent in the present administration, in figuring out to the public what a great subsidy the sugar industry of America is getting, use this dump market as their criterion in comparing prices paid in America by the housewife for sugar, and what she might pay were it not for what they call this huge subsidy.

Let us analyze just what would happen if the United States had to depend upon the so-called world market for its supply of sugar. To begin with, the 10 percent of the world production which is dumped into this market amounts to about 3,000,000 tons—less than one-half enough to supply the annual consumption within the United States. So, in order to even supply the United States, it would be necessary, would it not, to increase this 3,000,000 tons by the 6,500,000 tons consumed in the United States, or making the total tonnage of sugar available in this so-called world market 10,000,000 tons? Will it be contended by anybody, if the United States had to go into this market and purchase its entire supply, that it would not immediately cause a very abrupt rise in the price of sugar on this fancied world market? Is there any reason to believe that the price under such conditions would be one cent cheaper than we are getting our sugar for under the present system?

It is necessary to turn back a decade to find a period in which the demand for sugar in the world market approached 10,000,000 tons. The demand approximated that volume in each of the years 1928 and 1929, but the average price for those years was twice the average price for 1938. To make available a supply of 10,000,000 tons in the world market would require a tremendous expansion of production in some sugar-producing areas, and it is folly to imagine that the production would be undertaken at recent or current price levels, which would guarantee the producers nothing but losses.

The false assumption that the current so-called world price would be the determining factor in domestic price is the basis on which the Secretary of Agriculture has accused the domestic industry of receiving a hand-out of $350,000,000 annually to the injury of the domestic consumers.

At current consumption levels of approximately 6,608,000 short tons, raw value, or 123,514,500 bags, refined, the $350,000,000 represents about $2.83 per hundred pounds of refined. As of March 20, 1940, the net cash price of refined cane sugar in the New York market was $4.41 per hundred pounds, including the processing tax. It is to be noted that beet sugar, constituting approximately a quarter of the total supply, is offered at 10 to 20 cents per hundred pounds refined under cane. If we deduct the asserted protection of $2.83, we have left $1.58 per hundred pounds refined. No one familiar with the sugar industry can sincerely argue that in the absence of protection the American consumer would buy sugar on a basis of $1.58 per hundred pounds. Out of this $1.58 it would be necessary to provide production costs of the raw sugar, transportation and insurance to the continent, refining costs, and loss in converting from the raw to the refined state. It is interesting to note, in connection with the imputed figure of $1.58, that the price of refined sugar in Cuba on May 1, 1939, was $3.84 per hundred pounds. Cuba is an exporting country with an unmarketable surplus, while the United States imports a substantial part of its supply.

In addition to the beet growers who will benefit by the proposed legislation are all those who are dependent on the sugar industry in Louisiana, Florida, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, Philippines, Cuba, and other foreign countries. In addition to our people who are directly dependent upon sugar are those in other industries and producers of other commodities, such as coal, transportation, cotton, and so forth, who will receive substantial increase in purchasing power.

As to corn, wheat, rice, tobacco, and other crops, the Department of Agriculture asserts and reasserts the necessity of increasing prices to restore farm purchasing power. Consistency requires the same attitude toward efforts in behalf of farmers who produce sugar beets. Small wonder that a farmer who grows both grain and sugar beets should be much puzzled by the attitude of the Secretary, who strongly favors parity prices for his grain and at the same time successfully obstructs his opportunities for parity prices for sugar beets.

Along the same line may I insert here a paragraph taken from a report submitted in 1935 by a special committee appointed by the British Parliament to study the sugar industry. This paragraph refers particularly to the character of the world market, or free market. It follows:

> The surpluses which at present form so large a part of the free market supplies are "dumped" sugar and, since in some cases they represent only a small proportion of the total production of the country concerned, the price which is obtained on the free market may be a matter of comparative indifference. In these conditions the price ruling on the free market has no necessary relation to the true economic price of sugar in the sense of the price which would prevail in conditions of free trade. Nevertheless it is this dumped sugar in the contracted free market which determines the world price.

It seems to me that what I have said quite completely refutes the theory of some people that if we would do away entirely with any protection to our domestic sugar industry and rely exclusively on the world market that we would save money for the American housewife in her purchase of sugar.

May I also say just a word, Mr. Chairman, on what appears to me to be rather an inconsistency in our agricultural program? As a Member of Congress for 8 years now, I have been voting for an agricultural program which subsidizes corn, wheat, rice, tobacco, and other agricultural crops. The purpose of our farm program has been to restore purchasing power to the American farmer. Is the American sugar-beet farmer, or the American sugarcane farmer any less entitled to protection than any other farmer? Is he not just as important in our economic and in our social set-up as the cotton farmer, the corn farmer, or any other farmer? In my opinion, we cannot make any distinction between American farmers on the basis of what they grow. Sugar is one commodity of which the United States is the No. 1 consumer. We consume annually more than six and one-half million tons. We produce about one-fourth of this amount. Is it little wonder, then, that the American farmer engaged in the production of sugar beets or sugarcane is unable to understand why he should be restricted in his production of a commodity of which we produce only one-fourth of our consumption so that some farmer in the Philippines or in Cuba, or some other foreign country can have the benefit of the American market? Give a farmer out in my State 10 acres of sugar beets at parity price and you immediately create an independent American citizen, who becomes, by reason of his independence and his economic security, one of the best spenders in the world. Take away this 10 acres of sugar beets and you put him on the relief roll.

Now, let us consider for just a moment the question of relief. If we must make a choice between putting American farmers on relief instead of allowing them to raise sugar beets or sugarcane, or a farmer in Cuba on relief, which is the best thing to do, from the standpoint of economy? It is my opinion that it would take about one-tenth as much to supply the Cuban farmer and his family on a relief status as it does to support the American farmer on a relief status. Why, then, if we must make this choice, do we not let the American farmer raise sugar beets and sugarcane and put the Cuban farmer on relief, if it is necessary for someone to be on relief? This may seem farfetched to even some members of this committee, but I still maintain that it is a point worth your consideration.

In my opinion, the most important thing in the Cummings bill is not the little expansion that it might provide for American farmers, either in cane or beets, but it is the provision of that bill which provides for a price for sugar beets, which are grown on American farms, sufficiently high to pay the cost of production with at least a little profit in it for the farmer. This, to me, is the most important aspect of this legislation. I know of no farmer in my State who wants to raise sugar beets at a loss. I know of no farmer in Utah who would rather raise 40 acres of beets at a loss than 10 acres of beets at a profit. Under the present quota system, and the other provisions of the 1937 act, we still find that the sugar-beet farmer is barely, if at all, getting out of his beets the cost of production. On this question, the Cummings bill does not go so far as to guarantee absolute parity for sugar beets, but it does provide what is considered by all of us who favor this legislation an equitable percentage of parity. And when I say equitable, I have in mind the consumer as well as the producer of sugar beets.

It seems to be fairly well agreed today among all interested that the quota system has proved satisfactory; that it is better than the old system of a high tariff, both for the consumer and the producer. But it is also agreed by all concerned that, in addition to the quota provisions, the producers of cane and beets must be guaranteed at least a price for their produce sufficient to afford them a living and a livelihood. It is my opinion that the provision of the Cummings bill, providing for a price on a flexible percentage of parity basis, will achieve this result.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I again call the attention of the Committee to the importance of the passage of this legislation to the 17 sugar-beet States. As a matter of national unity, I ask you to join us in passing this legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Delegate from Hawaii seek recognition?

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, this particular bill will result in a decrease in the marketing of domestic sugar this year as compared with last year, because last year there was an amount which was allowed to be sold by reason of the suspension of the quotas when the war came about in Europe.

In a recent article in the Sugar Journal we find that this affects not only cane sugar but beet sugar as well, because we find at a meeting of the Minnesota-Dakota Sugar Beet Development Association they said:

> The extension of the 1937 act may be a terrific blow to the present beet growers. With the heavy carry-over of sugar from 1938 and 1939 and the almost certainty of carry-over from the 1940 crop, an extension of the act would mean a reduction in the beet acreage from 20 to 30 percent in 1941.

But most of you do not come from producing areas. All of you represent consuming areas. The President in his message called attention to the fact that we should think in terms of the interest of the housewife. The Secretary of Agriculture in a copy of a letter which he released to the press stated that it was costing the consumer in the United States more than $350,000,000 a year over and above the world market to subsidize the industry.

He broke down that figure by saying this:

> This is equivalent to a tax of approximately $2.70 per capita on a population of 129,000,000 persons. It means a levy of more than $10 per family, including the one-third of the Nation which is ill nourished, and it represents an amount of purchasing power equal to more than 50 quarts of milk or 50 loaves of bread for each family in the United States.

Every one of us represents consumers. The situation is acute and tense in the world. If you vote a sugar quota, interfere with the production of sugar, and there is a sugar shortage in this country you will be responsible and must answer to the people of the country. I know you do not want that to happen. At a time like this we should raise every bit of the necessary foodstuffs we can. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CANNON] for 2½ minutes.

Mr. CANNON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, my good friends from the beet-producing States have had things their own way during the several years we have been under the quota system of sugar control. In 1937 they drafted and persuaded Congress to enact sugar legislation which, according to Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, amounts to a tax of $2.70 per year on every man, woman, and child in the United States. Legislation which costs the American consumer, to again quote Secretary Wallace and Secretary of State Hull, $350,000,000 a year more than the sugar is worth in any other country in the world. My well-meaning but misguided friends from the beet States sired this "un-American" legislation—legislation which provides for the domestic sugar industry protection in the form of huge subsidies, in some cases amounting to as much as $600,000 to a single producer; a high tariff on sugar imports and last, but by far the most insidious and iniquitous of all, a quota system under which efficient, low-cost cane and beet-sugar producers who maintain the highest labor and wage standards, are heavily penalized and their production restricted to a mere fraction of their ability to produce—see Wallace's Annual Report, 1939. Some of those same efficient producers who neither need nor desire a Government subsidy have from time to time appeared before the Agriculture Committee of the House and protested against what they term "a raid on the National Treasury even though they are, according to law, entitled to membership in the raiding party." As self-respecting American businessmen they object, and rightfully so, to being in the same class as the beggar on the corner who holds out his tin cup and whines to the public for alms. It is a way of doing business which, thank God, has not yet been adopted by other American industries.

In my opinion the Sugar Act of 1937 is un-American; its continuation, particularly at this time, is indefensible. As a patriotic American, I shall vote against the rule and the Cummings bill.

Mr. Chairman, when a farmer makes a mistake he adds it to your bill. When a doctor makes a mistake he buries the patient. When Congress makes a mistake it is enacted into law. That, in my opinion, is the 1937 Sugar Act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. FERNANDEZ] for 2½ minutes.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I shall support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

LOUISIANA AND THE REFINED-SUGAR PROBLEM

Mr. Chairman, the people of my State, Louisiana, have a vital interest in the refined-sugar problem. They do not want to see any increase in refining in the tropical islands. The Cummings bill (H. R. 9654) should be amended to restore the quotas on refined sugar from Puerto Rico and Hawaii as those quotas existed in the Sugar Acts of 1934 and 1937.

Louisiana is an old sugar State. It has produced cane and raw sugar for well over 100 years, and it has refined sugar for almost as long.

New Orleans, on the Mississippi River, is one of the greatest ports in this country, and the great sugar-refining industry in Louisiana is located there. The 7 refineries in Louisiana import some 350,000 tons of raw sugar each year for subsequent refining and distribution. The remainder of their raw supply, another 350,000 tons, is purchased from the Louisiana plantations.

The annual sales of the Louisiana refiners run around $75,000,000, and, excluding the cost of raw sugar, this creates a purchasing power in my State of around $15,000,000 a year. About $3,000,000 annually goes to pay the men who work in this local industry, an industry which gives all-year-round employment at high wage rates.

Louisiana is proud of her sugar-refining industry, and she wants to keep it intact.

In recent years the Louisiana refiners have had to buck the competition of refined sugar by cheap labor in the Tropics—Cuba, the Philippine Islands, Puerto Rico, and Hawaii. In 1939 over 200,000 tons of tropical refined sugar came into the southern ports to displace Louisiana refined sugar. Congress rightly stopped any further growth of this tropical refining in 1934, when quotas were put on refined sugar, just as quotas were put on tropical raw sugar. Congress gave a hand to American refining labor, just as it gave a hand to the American sugar farmer.

In in 1940 Congress does not restore the quota limitations on Puerto Rico and Hawaii refined sugar it is going to hurt the citizens of my State. There are some 20,000 people in Louisiana whose livelihood is dependent upon a continuation of the pay checks from the refineries.

More Puerto Rican refined sugar coming into the South will mean less refined sugar made in Louisiana and other Southern States. Less refining means less work, less pay, and more unemployment.

There is no sound reason why refiners in Louisiana should be forced to close their doors in order to give more profit to the refinery owners on the sugar plantations in the Tropics.

The Cummings bill (H. R. 9654) should be amended to restore the quota limitations on refined sugar in Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. PFEIFER] for 2½ minutes.

Mr. PFEIFER. Mr. Chairman, the question of fear of a Presidential veto is a false issue. It was not considered in 1937 when the bill was before the House, and the bill was not vetoed. Very recently in the press the President stated that he favored the extension of the present act for another year. So, the fear of a Presidential veto is out the window.

As to harm being done to the beet-sugar industry, that is also false, for here on the floor the Members from the State of Michigan, the largest beet-sugar producing State in the Union, claimed that they are 375,000 tons still under the quota. So, forget all about the beet-sugar producers at this time and let us give at least some consideration to our home cane-sugar refineries.

I arise to inform the Committee that I am opposed to the Cummings bill which deals with the Federal regulation of the sugar industry. Because it is a discriminatory measure in that it does not yield justice to our home cane-sugar refineries who very willingly cooperated with the Federal Government in 1934 and again in 1937 by accepting the quota limit which forbade the industry to bring in sugar—needed for raw material—beyond amounts fixed by the Department of Agriculture. Due to this volume regulation the home sugarcane refineries had to curtail their operations almost to 50 percent of their normal capacity, inflicting great hardships, not only on the operators, but the employees as well. During the time the Sugar Act was in force and our home refineries were hampered in the refining of sugar, the so-called off-shore or tropical plantations not only received protective prices for their raw cane sugar, but also direct cash subsidies. Limits, however, were placed by Congress on the marketing of tropical refined sugar, about 600,000 tons.

Our home cane-sugar refineries, particularly in New York City, were operating before the Civil War. Faithful to the traditions of American policy, employing at one time thousands of employees, and paying at all times a good living wage. Many of their employees know no other occupation, having spent their whole life at the refinery.

The sugar bill of 1934 and 1937, curtailing the activity of the refineries, necessitated reduction in employment to almost one-half of the working force. Even those that are now remaining are working only a few days a week.

Consider this, gentlemen, when considering this bill. Should this bill pass as is, lifting the quota from the tropical plantations, giving them free and unlimited refining, with their cheap labor, then our home industries might just as well close their doors and force many thousands more on the relief rolls. Surely this is not what this Congress wishes to do in these crucial times when contentment and unity in action at home is an absolute necessity to overcome fear that now exists. Let us therefore reenact at least the Sugar Act of 1937 and rely on the status quo and not the Cummings bill which will undoubtedly strangle our home cane-sugar refineries.

Gentlemen, I will have to vote against the Cummings bill unless the quotas are restored on Puerto Rican and Hawaiian refined sugar, by the adoption of the McCormack amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SASSCER] for 2½ minutes.

Mr. SASSCER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a petition from approximately 1,000 employees of the sugar refineries in Baltimore.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair advises the gentleman that permission to include the petition will have to be secured in the House.

Mr. SASSCER. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago, during the discussion of the pending bill, the statement was made that the so-called McCormack amendment was unfair to Hawaii and Puerto Rico. To my mind the converse of that situation is true, that this legislation, in its present form, is unfair to the sections of the country in which there are cane-sugar refineries.

BALTIMORE AND REFINED SUGAR—1940

I rise to protest the continuation of the subsidy system for sugar producers in mainland United States, and in the American Tropics, unless that subsidy system protects the interests of all the factors involved. It is grossly unfair to enact legislation which would sacrifice the industries of Baltimore, one of the most thriving industrial cities in this country, to other areas of the United States. This is especially true in regard to sugar. Not one penny of the enormous subsidies in sugar goes to benefit Baltimore. Why should the citizens of a city such as Baltimore subsidize the expansion of refining in the Tropics, and at the same time see people in their own neighborhood thrown out of work, people who, due to their special training in this particular work, would have difficulty adjusting themselves into other industry even though they might find employment?

Baltimore has refined sugar since 1784. Today it has one of the largest sugar refineries in the world. The huge modern local refinery gives employment directly and indirectly to hundreds of American workers. Since 1922 when it was established, the refinery has distributed over $50,000,000 for pay roll and supplies. It has had 290,000 cars of incoming and outgoing freight, and has paid city and State taxes of over $2,000,000. The beneficial effect of the industry is felt throughout the entire State.

The Baltimore refining industry, like those in other American cities, has suffered a decline in output in recent years. One of the chief reasons for this decrease has been the expansion of refining in the tropical islands, including Hawaii and Puerto Rico, for mainland consumption. What the Cummings bill virtually proposes is to further reduce the output of the Baltimore refinery by permitting unlimited refining in Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

The people of Baltimore and Maryland do not ask for a preferred position in sugar legislation. They do not want to discriminate against any group of American citizens. Neither do they want to receive treatment different from that which Congress gives to any other sugar area or group. All they want is fair play.

Let us see what this means from a practical point of view. The limitations on refined sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico expired March 1. If Baltimore refinery workers are to have any assurance at all of retaining their jobs, those quotas must be restored in any new sugar legislation. That is why Baltimore and the State of Maryland feel that the Cummings bill must be amended to include these restrictions. That the Baltimore and Maryland people take this position is easily understood when we realize that Maryland consumers alone have made a contribution since 1934 of over $20,000,000 toward sugar subsidies. Of course the plantation corporations of Hawaii and Puerto Rico have received a large part of this amount in cash.

I believe, and I speak for the people of my State, that there is no justification for a sugar system which calls on the people of Maryland to make a heavy contribution toward sugar subsidies and at the same time puts their own industry out of business. Every ton of sugar that comes into our ports from the tropical refineries displaces a ton of sugar refined at home and throws men out of work.

We in Maryland do not ask to share in the sugar subsidies. All we ask is that those subsidies not be used to cripple our industrial life. That is what I mean by a fair deal.

Congress has established a long line of precedents for tropical refining quotas under a quota system. I think Congress understands and sympathizes with the problem Maryland and other States face. Therefore I feel sure that Congress will not permit the Cummings bill to pass unless it restores refined sugar quotas.

I hold in my hand a petition, which I shall present, signed by nearly 1,000 employees of the plant within my district, in which they protest against the bill unless the amendment restricting importation of cane sugar is adopted. I trust that Congress will not at this time wish to set a precedent for expanding subsidized tropical industry at the expense of nonsubsidized home industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY] for 2½ minutes.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, along with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY], I attended the discussions which were held over a period of several months by Members of the House and Senate under the chairmanship of the distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS], and we represented the point of view of workers and management in the refineries in the eastern section of the country. It was my hope—and I will say I had reason, I felt, to believe—that the gentleman from Colorado would support the restrictions that had existed on the refined quotas from Puerto Rico and from Hawaii.

May I say to my friend the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK], with regard to the proposal to restrict refined quotas from Cuba by approximately 223,000 tons, that our point of view was that an unfair distribution was being made in favor of the beet producers. We felt a much more equitable distribution should have been made and the production should have been increased more in Florida and Louisiana so that there might be greater production of domestic cane sugar. I do not think there is any discrimination regarding Puerto Rico and Hawaii in this bill. After all, there are only 420,000 tons of cane sugar produced in the United States, and we are taking from Hawaii 900,000 tons and from Puerto Rico approximately 800,000 tons of raw and refined cane sugar. They are bringing into this country their entire supply which they could not dispose of in the world markets. We have the right to protect these industries of ours which have been in existence since the early days of this Republic. The refiners, the workers, and those who have invested their savings in the refineries of the East are entitled to a restriction being placed upon Puerto Rico and Hawaii refined sugar in return for the fact that this country—the continental United States—is absorbing their raw sugar that they could not dispose of elsewhere in the world.

I hope the Committee will support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] to restrict these refined imports so that we will be able to support the bill; otherwise I am fearful that we will have to oppose the legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, as my distinguished colleague from Maryland stated a moment ago, the city of Baltimore has enjoyed for a number of years one of the largest refineries in the world. I am very glad to take my stand today with the employees of that plant and the people who have invested their capital in it, the employees being one of the happiest groups of laboring men that I know of anywhere. I have listened to this debate all day, hoping that some reason might be assigned for this legislation. Not long ago I heard an expression from another forum about the dagger in the hands of those who could wield it stabbing a neighbor in the back. I am not so sure that that metaphor is not entitled to a very dignified place in the debate on this legislation.

It is admitted that without the McCormack amendment our big refineries, such as we have in Baltimore and other places, are going to practically close down. There is no denial of that. I do not believe the common sense of this House is going to stand for such treatment at this time. I wish, Mr. Chairman, that many Members not familiar with the large establishments we have in the industrial sections of this country, especially these refineries, might appreciate, as we do, the situation that exists today.

In my city the employees look upon this legislation as most drastic. I agree with them. I would like to see the sugar industry of this country stabilized. It has been my privilege to visit the Florida fields, also the beet-sugar section, and the fields of Louisiana. I hope that something eventually may be done to meet the problem they admittedly have, but this is not the way to do it.

Mr. Chairman, I was very much impressed today with the position taken by the distinguished gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR]. It has been my pleasure to know fairly intimately the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] not only during his service in the House but to observe the fairness and bigness which he consistently displays toward the country as a whole and especially the great industrial and taxpaying section of the Nation he represents.

His position in favor of the McCormack amendment is one that I think other Representatives from the beet-sugar section of the country should read and reread. There is much wholesome logic in what he says, and it would make statesmen of many of them, as I am glad to classify my friend from Montana. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. D'ALESANDRO].

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the Cummings bill and will vote for the McCormack amendment.

The people of my State, Maryland, do not want to see the Cummings bill enacted unless it is amended to restore the limitations upon Hawaiian and Puerto Rican refined sugar. Maryland obviously does not want to see any sugar legislation in 1940 which would be harmful to its local refining industry.

Some of my colleagues in the House who represent the sugar-beet States cannot understand the position of Maryland on this point. They cannot understand why the refining industry in Maryland and other States would oppose the enactment of the Cummings bill in its present form. They argue that unless the Cummings bill is enacted, there will be no limitation upon the Cuban refined sugar, and they point out that the great threat to the home refining industry lies in a possible expansion of Cuban refined sugar.

Now it is true that the refiners of Cuba are a serious threat to the home cane-sugar refining industry. Cuban refiners could substantially expand their production for the American market if the existing quotas on Cuban refined sugar were lapsed with the termination of the Sugar Act of 1937. This is especially true because under the existing tariff schedule of 1930, there is no tariff protection of any kind afforded the home cane-sugar refining industry against its chief foreign competitor—the refiners of Cuba.

But the possible expansion of Cuban refined sugar is not the greatest threat to the future of the home refining industry in Maryland and other States. The major threat to the industry is found in legislation of the type of the Cummings sugar bill. That bill would extend subsidies to the refiners in Hawaii and Puerto Rico, and it would place no limit upon the expansion of those refiners. The home refining industry fears this type of subsidization more than any other factor. And if the Cummings bill is defeated these cash subsidies will end.

It is not only with excessive subsidization that the refining industry is concerned. If Hawaii and Puerto Rico are permitted to refine all of their raw sugar they can stop the flow of a large part of the raw material necessary for the mainland refiners' existence. Under a quota system, the refiners' purchases are limited, both as to amounts and sources. The refiners are fearful that if Hawaii and Puerto Rico are given a monopoly of 1,700,000 tons of raw sugar they will use that monopoly in a manner detrimental to the home industry.

And there are many features of the quota-subsidy system which work hardships on the home refining industry. We must not forget that the home refining industry each year pays some $47,000,000 as a manufacturers' sales tax into the Federal Treasury. It is true that the refiners may collect this tax from consumers, but in the process they must maintain enormous cash funds in order to make the payments in the first instance to the United States Government.

And, in addition, the quota system places the price of raw and refined sugar largely in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, who administers the act. Since the quota system went into effect prices have fluctuated widely as changes have been made from time to time in the price policy of the Department of Agriculture. These wide price fluctuations have made it extremely difficult, if not impossible, for the refiners to avoid financial losses through fluctuations in the value of their inventory.

The refiners have not profited under the quota system. The facts show that since 1934 the value of the industry has shrunk by some 40 percent, and investors have suffered heavy losses. The refiners receive no subsidies, they must pay millions of dollars to the Federal Government in taxes, they must stand the risk of widely fluctuating sugar prices, and they must operate under the quota system at a relatively low rate of output.

It is for all of these reasons that labor and capital in the home refining industry in Maryland and other States would rather see a termination of the quota-subsidy system than a continuation of that system under terms which would further depress the refining industry.

The quotas on Hawaiian and Puerto Rican refined sugar should be restored. I am in favor of the McCormack amendment because it keeps thousands of employees in the city of Baltimore and throughout the United States in their jobs.

RESOLUTION RELATIVE TO THE CUMMINGS SUGAR BILL, H. R. 9654, ADOPTED JUNE 18, 1940

Whereas the National Association of Retail Grocers has endorsed legislation opposing the entry into the continental United States of tropically produced refined sugar, we view with particular concern the Cummings sugar bill, H. R. 9654, which fails to restore the previous quotas on Puerto Rican and Hawaiian refined sugar.

By this resolution, therefore, we request the Members of Congress to vote for the amendment to this bill which will restore the previous quotas on Puerto Rican and Hawaiian refined sugar.

We also ask if this amendment is not adopted the Members of Congress vote against the bill.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF RETAIL GROCERS.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FLAHERTY].

Mr. FLAHERTY. Mr. Chairman, it is regretable that there has been a limitation placed on this debate because there are some of us who do not consume a great deal of the time of the House during the course of a session who would like to speak at some length when an item of this kind that is so vitally important comes up for consideration. I believe it would be logical to give everybody an opportunity to be heard to the extent they desire.

I was interested in the statement made by the gentleman from Kansas this afternoon, the ranking minority member of the committee, when he stated that the refining interests desired to throttle the beet-sugar industry. I do not think that represents the position of the Members who come from the industrial areas because if he will look at the RECORD he will find that the Members from the cities have been most cooperative in aiding the agricultural interests in passing their legislation through this Congress. He also stated that the McCormack amendment would place a limitation upon beet-sugar production, but I do not agree with him on that point, and I think he will agree to some extent that the sugar bill as it is represented by the Cummings proposal here would place a limitation on efficiency in industry and would place a limitation upon the employment of labor in those sections of the country which cannot stand such a limitation at this time.

Mr. Chairman, I want to register the strongest protest against the Cummings bill, or any other sugar-quota bill, which will not reimpose the quotas on tropical refined sugar from Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

In taking this firm stand I speak, of course, for my State, Massachusetts; but I speak even more particularly for my own district. Boston has two large cane-sugar refineries, and the people want to keep them there.

Thousands of my constituents either work in the refineries or work in other New England industries which furnish them with supplies of all kinds. All of these people receive the high American wage, and enjoy the American standard of living. All of the refinery workers are unionized, and the fine working conditions they have achieved have been established by management and labor sitting together around the conference table.

These thousands of workingmen bear no ill will whatsoever toward the workers in the Tropics—in Puerto Rico or Hawaii. In fact, they would like to see tropical labor share their own high working standards. But they know that the tropical workers have wages that are pitifully low. And they know that the refiners in Puerto Rico and Hawaii will put the Massachusetts refineries out of business if the Cummings bill is not properly amended.

Thousands of my constituents, whether they work in the refineries or not, know, too, that as consumers they are making a disproportionately large contribution toward the sugar subsidy. These citizens are just as anxious to cooperate in any national program of farm relief as those anywhere else in the country. But they are opposed to the continuation of the plan proposed in this bill to support a sugar program under which they pay the refiners of Puerto Rico and Hawaii to reduce their own volume of business, and throw them out of work.

I desire to call to the attention of the Members of this House the fact that I have received thousands of letters from the people of my district and others in Massachusetts on this issue. All of those persons writing earnestly and sincerely make the same urgent appeal. They tell me that the refinery in my district is one of the most efficient in the world. They tell me there are many skilled refinery workmen there, ready and eager for work, who cannot obtain that work because subsidized tropical sugar is pushing their own first-rate product out of the American market. None of these people want to go on relief; they want to be back on the job.

A restoration of the refined-sugar quotas will injure no one in Hawaii and Puerto Rico. It certainly will not injure the plantation corporations who receive millions of dollars of subsidy every year—where our home refineries receive no subsidy. It certainly will not injure the workers of those islands who depend for a living on raw sugar and not on refined. And it will save our nonsubsidized home refineries, and the thousands of workers employed in them from certain harm.

The people of New England in recent years have suffered from an exodus of industry. When industry leaves, jobs go with it. I do not see any reason why Congress at this time would want to enact sugar legislation which would create unemployment in New England, and to raise the tax burden which would naturally follow. The quotas on Hawaiian and Puerto Rican refined sugar should be restored.

I am heartily in accord with the McCormack amendment and urge the members of the committee to adopt it.

SUGAR WORKERS CONFERENCE,
Washington, D. C., May 22, 1940.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Sugar legislation, designed to replace the current law which expires this year, is pending before the Congress. The legislation, as reported by the House Committee on Agriculture, is distinctly contrary to our interests and would if enacted work great hardships on the men and women whom we represent.

Briefly, the legislation (H. R. 9654) as reported would allow unlimited imports into the mainland of sugar refined in Puerto Rico and Hawaii. We believe Hawaii and Puerto Rico already are receiving their just share of the country's sugar production. We do not believe it fair to give our jobs in the cane-sugar-refining plants to low-paid workers in the islands. Let the island workers grow the sugar. Let us continue to refine it.

We are enclosing a resolution adopted by the 1939 Cincinnati, Ohio, convention of the American Federation of Labor, with whom we are affiliated. We earnestly and respectfully ask your support in our efforts to have restrictions continued on the importation of refined sugar from the islands.

Very truly yours,

EDWARD GILLESPIE, Chairman.

Resolution 92

Whereas the refining of raw cane sugar in continental United States gives employment to thousands of workers affiliated with the American Federation of Labor; and

Whereas the jobs and pay rolls of the sugar-refinery workers have been reduced since 1925 by the flood of refined sugar which has been imported into this country from Cuba, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines and other tropical islands; and

Whereas a further loss in jobs and pay rolls will occur after 1940 unless these workers receive an adequate protection in the Sugar Act to be written in that year: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That this convention, the fifty-ninth of the American Federation of Labor, go on record as recommending that an adequate protection (through tariffs, quotas, or otherwise) be provided for the sugar-refinery workers in any sugar legislation which may be developed by Congress in 1940, and under no circumstances should there be any further expansion in the importation of refined sugar made in the tropical islands for our market; and be it further

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor does endorse and advocate protective legislation for these workers.

Your committee recommends approval of the purpose of this resolution and would refer it to the executive council for study and action.

The report of the committee was unanimously adopted.

[From the Boston Herald, June 14, 1940]

SUGAR AMENDMENT

The sugar bill of 1937, which will expire December 31 of this year, provides quotas for the producing areas which have supplied sugar for United States consumption. It has been a pretty good bill, on the whole, for producers, distributors, and consumers. But the section of the bill setting a limit on the amount of refined sugar allowed to be imported into continental United States from Puerto Rico and Hawaii expired last March. This restriction was included in the original bill of 1937, in order to protect the interest of labor employed in our continental sugar refineries. It is the only protection of any kind that they get.

The Cummings resolution, which was recently introduced into the House, extends the life of the 1937 sugar bill, but without the refined-sugar restrictions. This resolution, reported out by the rules committee, allows only one amendment. That is an amendment for reinserting in the bill the original refined-sugar restrictions. Congressman JOHN MCCORMACK, of Boston, is to propose it.

This amendment is of direct, immediate concern to Boston and other refining centers of the United States. They have many employees, they pay large taxes, they furnish steady employment for thousands in collateral industries, and they are all well established. If the amendment should fail of passage, inevitably many men and women would lose their jobs and the sole beneficiaries would be the refinery workers of Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

The amendment deserves the warm support of everybody who is interested in protecting an excellent, established industry, and in safeguarding the employment of a great many thousands of Americans.

CHARLESTOWN, MASS., May 8, 1940.

Hon. THOMAS A. FLAHERTY,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Unless H. R. 9654 is amended to restore refined-sugar restrictions which existed prior to March 1, employees of local sugar refineries will suffer severely through loss of employment. Urge you use best efforts to prevent passage of this bill, unless there is restoration of such restrictions.

WILLIAM J. GALVIN,
President, Boston City Council.

Hon. THOMAS A. FLAHERTY,

House bill 9654 should be amended to restore refined-sugar restrictions which existed prior to March 1. Also necessary that no increase in beet-sugar quota be permitted.

BOSTON, MASS., May 9, 1940.

Hon. THOMAS A. FLAHERTY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

To protect sugar-refining industry in Massachusetts, I urge your careful investigation of House bill 9654, reported May 7 by House Agricultural Committee. Substantial Massachusetts sugar-refining industry will be vitally affected; also hope you will study effect of increase in beet-sugar quota. We must do everything possible to protect jobs for cur citizens in Massachusetts, which obviously will be affected by this bill if it becomes law as it now reads.

LEVERETT SALTONSTALL,
Governor of Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, this bill, H. R. 9654, fails to furnish the protection to American labor employed in the American sugar-refining industry that was provided in the sugar legislation of 1934 and 1937 in the form of restrictions on imports of refined sugar from Puerto Rico and Hawaii. If the bill is passed without the adoption of the McCormack amendment to provide for such restrictions, the importation of refined sugar from these insular possessions will be virtually unlimited, except by their own capacity to produce. It is estimated that, over a period of time, it will be possible for these islands, by means of cheap labor and Government subsidies, to increase their production of refined sugar by as much as 1,700,000 more tons annually.

According to the United States Department of Agriculture, the number of refineries in Puerto Rico has grown from two in 1933 to eight in 1939. Under the 1937 legislation, the annual quota of refined sugar from Puerto Rico was fixed at 126,000 tons and from Hawaii at 29,000 tons. The McCormack amendment will serve to peg these quotas at the same ratio.

It is stated on authoritative information that, since the expiration of the quota allotment in February of this year, Puerto Rico has shipped about 125,000 tons of refined sugar in a period of 4 months—an amount equal to the entire quota of last year. If the McCormack amendment is not adopted to peg these quotas, it will result in a serious blow to the American men and women who are employed in the continental cane-refining industry and disaster to an industry that dates from Colonial days. American workers have been employed in the refining of cane sugar in the United States for over 250 years and today this American industry is located at the historic seaports of Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Georgia, Louisiana, Texas, and California. It is also found, on a smaller scale, in the States of Illinois, Indiana, and Wisconsin.

The No. 1 domestic problem of our Nation, still unsolved, is unemployment, and I am sure that the Members of this House will not want to deliberately take a step that will increase unemployment and jeopardize the employment of thousands of Americans. Nevertheless, unless the McCormack amendment is adopted, that will be precisely the result of this bill. If unrestricted importations of refined sugar are permitted from these insular possessions, thousands of American sugar workers will face either total loss of employment due to the shut-down of continental refineries or serious reduction in their employment, making it impossible to provide them and their families a decent American standard of living.

The men and women employed in the cane-refining industry here on the continent enjoy high labor standards and conditions of employment. The minimum hourly wage for most workers in the industry is between 63 and 70 cents for unskilled labor. A 5-day week and 8-hour working day have prevailed for several years and the degree of unionization in the refining industry here amounts to about 80 percent of the plants. In fact, in the following States the industry is 100-percent unionized: Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Texas, and California—leaving only a small number of establishments in the South that are not tctally unionized.

Moreover, the persons engaged in handling the raw sugar on the docks, the longshoremen and other workers, are 100-percent unionized, and the refined sugar is moved by union truckmen and union railroad workers.

In contrast with the labor standards of the sugar workers in continental America, tropical workers in the insular sugar refineries are almost entirely without any unionization. Collective bargaining, as it is known in the United States, does not exist there. Before the passage of the Wage and Hour Act, average earnings in the Puerto Rican refineries were placed at 17.5 cents an hour or $7.49 a week. Since its passage the Wage and Hour Act has been applied to a few industries in the island, but its application has been vigorously resisted, and a concerted attempt has been made by employers to obtain exemptions from its terms. As you will undoubtedly recall, when the Wage and Hour Act was before the Congress during this session, Puerto Rican interests sought to obtain its nullification insofar as it applied to Puerto Rican industry.

It is argued by some that the American sugar industry is not worth saving because of the small number of workers affected. Even if accurate, which it is not, the argument would be wholly unfair and unsound. I am sure that Members of Congress are interested in fair treatment for labor employed in the small industries as well as the large ones. But the true fact is that the continental cane industry is not small as compared with other American industries. Of the three-hundred-and-forty-odd American industries, the sugar-refining industry rates one hundred and sixteenth in size. The industry employs directly about 18,000 persons, including factory workers and clerical, sales, technical, and administrative help. In addition, some 2,000 persons are employed outside of the industry but on work directly connected with it, such as stevedores, truckmen, freight handlers, bringing the total employment furnished by the industry to some 20,000.

Besides the employment and pay rolls furnished by the industry, the various plants bear a very important and vital relationship to the economic welfare of the communities and States in which they are located as well as to the Federal Government. For example, there are two refineries located in Massachusetts—in the city of Boston in fact—that have a combined pay roll of approximately $2,500,000 a year. The local taxes alone paid to the city of Boston by these two refineries amounts to $260,000 annually. The two plants have an assessed valuation of $6,000,000 and represent a replacement value of ten to twelve million dollars.

In relationship to the Nation as a whole, it may be noted that the continental refining industry furnishes a total pay roll of about $27,000,000 a year, and workmen's compensation and social-security payments bring this amount in excess of $28,000,000 a year. The continental industry pays in taxes to the Federal, State, and local governments about $85,000,000 a year. This historic American industry has been maintained without tariff protection or cash subsidy of any kind. Since 1925, the continental refining industry and the labor employed has steadily and increasingly suffered from the increase in the refining of beet sugar and cane sugar in the tropical islands. Since that date American labor has had a cumulative loss of 10,000,000 tons, representing 2 full years of output and about $54,000,000 in wages.

Some 70,000 American investors, living in every State in the Union and paying taxes, have a vital interest in the enactment of equitable sugar legislation whereas the control and ownership of Puerto Rican refineries is concentrated in the hands of two families, and I understand that these families have managed to escape the payment of any income taxes on their earnings.

Mr. Chairman, organized labor in America is strongly opposed to any further encroachments on this industry by tropical interests. A partial list of organizations which have officially endorsed the protection of home refining labor is as follows: The American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, the International Longshoremen's Association, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, the teamsters, chauffeurs, stablemen, and helpers, and many others.

We now ask in the name of those persons whose jobs and livelihoods depend on this industry, and in the name of the investors, related industries, and the States and cities that will be disastrously affected that no further inroads be made by legislation on the right of this 250-year-old industry to exist. We ask that Congress consider the equities involved and that fair treatment be accorded the refining industry by the adoption of the McCormack amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, now that all the crocodile tears have been shed over the plight of the eastern refiners let me call to your attention that the quota on Hawiian refined sugar has been only 29,660 tons. Neither in 1938 nor in 1939 did Hawaii ship in even 15,000 tons of refined sugar; in fact, Hawaii has never shipped in its quota of 29,000 tons of sugar since 1934. Is that a big threat to the eastern refiners that would necessitate the adoption of the McCormack amendment to restrict Hawaii? It is a matter of principle only so far as Hawaii is concerned in this amendment, because there is no reason to fear any increase in refined sugar from that source.

As far as Puerto Rico is concerned, Puerto Rico had a quota of 126,000 tons of refined sugar and has filled its quota each year. Puerto Rico is expected to exceed that amount this year.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is no quota now.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. The quota, of course, expired on March 1 as to Puerto Rico and Hawaiian refined sugar.

It is expected that Puerto Rico may increase their shipments of refined sugar over and above what has been their quota by approximately 30,000 or 40,000 tons this year. To verify that statement, I inquired of Dr. Bernhardt, Chief of the Sugar Section. He advised me that he did not anticipate an amount in excess of 30,000 or 40,000 tons of refined more than Puerto Rico had been shipping to us under the restrictions.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I have some time reserved, but because my colleague the gentleman from Nebraska represents so many sugar-beet growers who are anxious to expand the acreage in Nebraska and is making an effort on behalf of them, I ask that my time may be given to him.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I thank my colleague the gentleman from Nebraska for his kindness.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is it not a fact that in the first 5 months of this year 139,000 tons have been brought in from Puerto Rico, 13,000 more than their quota, and that the shipments this year alone will run well over 300,000 tons?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. They have brought in 139,000 tons, but it is not anticipated that they will bring in much more during the rest of the year.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Hawaii.

Mr. KING. With regard to the importation of Hawaiian refined sugar, as of June 13 it amounted to 3,000 tons, not even the amount of its quota, so the question of the amount is not involved.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Let me say that in my opinion the effort to incorporate the McCormack amendment is for the purpose of sabotaging the entire sugar legislation, anticipating that with this amendment the continuing resolution will be vetoed. Then there will be no further restrictions on imports other than the tariff. The cane-sugar refiners will gain volume and the sugar-beet growers will be ruined by low prices. In that event it will mark the beginning of the end of the sugar-beet industry in the United States.

Let me also call to your attention the fact that in the event this Sugar Act should expire, those of you who are now worrying about the eastern refineries will then have something really to worry about. There will then be no restrictions whatever. In the present Sugar Act Cuba's shipments are limited to 375,000 tons, but much more refined sugar from Cuba will then come in than will ever come from Puerto Rico and Hawaii. The McCormack amendment is an indirect method of killing all sugar legislation.

I am interested in the sugar-beet growers and the sugar-beet industry. It is for the purpose of trying to continue this legislation for 1 year so that we may be able to work out some practical method of safeguarding all the industry that I ask you to support the bill and oppose the McCormack amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, there is no finer man in the world than the gentleman who has just yielded the floor. He is one of the soundest thinkers of this House and I am devoted to him. I would like, however, to answer the statement he has just made with his own language as uttered when the sugar bill was before the House for debate in 1937. At that time the same report was circulated in the House that in the event these quota provisions on Puerto Rico and Hawaii were included in the bill the President would veto it. Answering that thought, the gentleman who has just yielded the floor said:

> We heard from the Departments, and we tried to exercise our legislative function as an independent branch of this Government and bring in satisfactory legislation.

The gentleman further said:

> It is necessary for all the people interested, whether from the growers' standpoint or from the standpoint of beet labor or sugar-cane labor, or from the standpoint of the refiners or those working in the refineries, to stand shoulder to shoulder in trying to pass legislation which will safeguard the industry as a whole. If you cripple the refining industry in this country, we know that sooner or later the continental growers will find themselves in a like position.

He said further, speaking of the work of his committee:

> The committee gave a great deal of consideration to the controversial question at issue. We felt there was no justification in encouraging the building of new refineries in Hawaii and Puerto Rico at this time that would jeopardize the investment in continental refineries and the jobs of the men now employed in them.

I again wish to express the hope that there may be a sufficient number of Representatives coming from these 17 States to which reference has been made that will vote for the McCormack amendment in order to dissipate the suspicion that there is a willingness on the part of this group to throw down those who have been heretofore responsible, in large part, for all of the benefits that they have derived. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, under the 1934 sugar bill, enacted before I came to Congress, the cane-producing States of Louisiana and Florida had a quota of some 260,000 tons, with Louisiana receiving approximately 224,000 tons of that. After I came to Congress we enacted the 1937 Sugar Act, which gave these two cane States a quota of 420,000 tons, of which Louisiana's part was 363,000 tons. The 1937 act, therefore, increased Louisiana's quota by 142,000 tons, or 63 percent. I cooperated fully in securing these increased benefits under the 1937 act. The sugar people of Louisiana requested me to support it, and I did so, just as I have always supported sugar legislation. I received many messages from the cane people expressing their appreciation. I wish here to read two or three of these:

SUGAR WORKERS CONFERENCE,
Washington, D. C., September 24, 1937.

Hon. A. LEONARD ALLEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Our organization is deeply grateful for your fine support for the sugar bill during this recent session of Congress.

By the successful enactment of this legislation thousands of American workingmen and their families are guaranteed economic security because they can continue on their jobs. Your willingness to assist American workers in the sugar industry will not be forgotten.

Very truly yours,

HAROLD J. BURK,
Secretary-Treasurer.

RESOLUTION UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED AT THE MEETING OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE AMERICAN SUGAR CANE LEAGUE, HELD SEPTEMBER 3, 1937

Whereas the Louisiana sugar industry, as a whole, in all its branches, as represented by the 8,757 members of the American Sugar Cane League, is deeply grateful to the members of the congressional delegation of Louisiana for their indefatigable and successful efforts to bring about the enactment of the Jones-Brown sugar bill in a form acceptable to our industry: Therefore be it

Resolved by the executive committee of the American Sugar Cane League, That the appreciation of the Louisiana sugar industry be formally expressed and put on record, and this we now do; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and resolutions be sent to each of the Members of Congress from Louisiana.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., April 28, 1937.

Hon. A. LEONARD ALLEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

At the regular monthly meeting of the executive committee of the American Sugar Cane League held today, I was instructed to wire you in behalf of the Louisiana sugar industry and say that those engaged in it thank you from the bottom of their hearts for the sponsorship of the cause of Louisiana sugar in which the Senators and Congressmen from this State have so splendidly united. We feel full confidence that the able work being done will result in a proper legislative recognition of the right to a quota of 500,000 tons for Louisiana.

REGINALD DYKERS,
Vice President and General Manager.

But, Mr. Chairman, I felt then and I feel now that that was not the proper way to deal with this question, and I went along on the bill only because the growers requested it. I shall again do my best to go along with the growers on other bills, but I hope they insist on returning to what I think is a basic American principle. I refer to the principle of giving the American market to the American farmer.

Here in this bill we are called upon to continue a law for 1 year which drastically restricts the growing of a vital food product that this country needs and cannot possibly grow enough of to meet our demands. We are called on to do that also at a time when we are facing a world condition that may demand that we conserve every precious pound of sugar.

Of course, if this Congress is going no further than to enact a continuing resolution to keep in force the 1937 act, then I favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], because I am in favor of helping American labor—and I have always stood by labor—but I also stand for American agriculture. This Congress should determine that it is going to stand first, last, and all the time for American labor and American agriculture. [Applause.] I do not know when that time is coming. It looks ridiculous to me to prevent our own people from producing a product when we cannot produce half as much as we need of that product anyway. We may face the fact that we cannot get sugar from the islands thousands of miles from us. Sugar may go to 30 or 35 cents per pound, as it did after the World War.

Mr. Chairman, I wish this House would meet this sugar issue now. Why not? We are here and probably will be here much longer. We have ample time. Why put it off? Why put up a makeshift resolution to tide us over 1 year? We are put in the position in the House here because of the closed rule that we are not even permitted to offer an amendment to increase the quota. I intend to vote against this extension of the 1937 act. To refuse to let America grow sugar for Americans is un-American. Give the American farmer the American market. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the McCormack amendment, because; in justice to the men from States with large refinery labor populations, I think it about time that we from some of the farm areas, at least, support their position as they have so often and well supported parity payments, Federal surplus commodity purchases, and other legislation in which the bulk of midwestern farmers were vitally concerned.

There are numerous pertinent reasons why this bill should pass with the McCormack amendment, and be defeated without it. One of those reasons is the interest of the American consumer, to which interest I wish to address myself briefly.

Under no consideration should there be any expansion of the quota now assigned to the continental beet and cane producers. American farmers generally would be harmed by such an expansion.

There are only about 84,000 sugar growers in continental United States, and the total farm value of the sugar crop is less than 1 percent of the Nation's farm income. Even if this country produced all of its own sugar requirements in continental United States, it would only increase the national farm income by about 2½ percent.

Continental sugar growers are prosperous; they get full fair exchange value for their crop without any limitation on production.

Sugar growers have received disproportionate agricultural benefits. The public has contributed direct and indirect subsidies to continental sugar growers of $575,000,000 since 1934. This is a subsidy of 112 percent. All American farmers receive Federal assistance of only 8 percent.

Continental sugar production kills the American market for the American farmer. The Secretary of Agriculture has reported that with each additional acre of sugarcane or sugar beets planted there is a contraction of farm exports equivalent to the product of either 3 acres of corn, 3 acres of cotton, or 6 acres of wheat.

Continental sugar production is a burden upon the farmer as a consumer. The 32,000,000 persons living on American farms since 1934 have paid at least $400,000,000 for their sugar over what it would have cost them at the competitive world price.

American consumers since 1934 have paid $1,600,000,000 more for their sugar than they would have if they bought it at the world price. By skimming a billion six hundred million dollars off the American market, there was that much less money in the budget for the purchase of milk, meat, fruits, vegetables, cotton textiles, cotton goods, and other farm products. This country at this time should not be expanding inefficient, high-cost industries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the McCormack amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CUMMINGS) there were—ayes 134, noes 20.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. ZIMMERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 9654, to extend, for an additional year, the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937, and the taxes with respect to sugar, and pursuant to House Resolution 515, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment, adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Baldridge, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8202) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes";

That the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 20, 21, 39, and 43, and that it recedes from its amendment numbered 61 to said bill; and

That it further insists upon its amendments numbered 65 and 66 to said bill.

The message also announced that the Senate had ordered, that Mr. THOMAS of Utah be appointed as an additional conferee on the part of the Senate to the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9850) entitled "An act to expedite the strengthening of the national defense."

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CHIPERFIELD, for 2 days, on account of serious illness in his family.

To Mrs. BOLTON, for tomorrow, on account of the marriage of her son.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article from the Jersey Journal and an article from this morning's New York Times.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLAHERTY. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the remarks I made in Committee of the Whole, I ask unanimous consent to include several telegrams and an editorial from the Boston Herald, along with another communication.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous concent to extend my remarks on the Cummings bill and to include a resolution from the National Retail Grocers Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RED-CEDAR SHINGLE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9765) to provide for exercising the right with respect to red-cedar shingles reserved in the trade agreement concluded November 17, 1938, between the United States of America and Canada, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. McCORMACK. I understand there is no opposition to the bill, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the United States Tariff Commission is hereby directed to conduct an investigation as soon as practicable after the close of the calendar year 1939 and each calendar year thereafter, for the purpose of ascertaining the quantities of red-cedar shingles shipped by producers in the United States and the quantities of imported red-cedar shingles entered for consumption, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, during each of the three calendar years immediately preceding any such investigation.

(b) If the Commission finds, on the basis of an investigation under subdivision (a) of this section, that in any calendar year after 1938 the quantity of imported red-cedar shingles entered for consumption, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, was in excess of 30 percent of the combined total for such year of the respective quantities ascertained in such investigation, it shall so report to the President. If the President approves the report of the Commission, he shall so proclaim, and on and after the day following the filing of such proclamation with the Division of the Federal Register and so long as any trade agreement entered into under the authority of section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, shall be in effect with respect to the importation into the United States of red-cedar shingles, there shall be a duty upon imported red-cedar shingles entered for consumption, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, in any calendar year in excess of 30 percent of the annual average for the preceding three calendar years of the combined total of the quantity of such shingles shipped by producers in the United States and of the quantity of such imported shingles entered for consumption, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption. The rate of such duty shall be 25 cents per square. Any duty imposed under this act shall be treated for the purposes of all provisions of law relating to customs revenue as a duty imposed by the Tariff Act of 1930, and shall not apply to shingles entered for consumption before the duty becomes applicable.

(c) The quantity of red-cedar shingles entitled to exemption from any duty imposed pursuant to this act shall be ascertained for each quota period by the Commission and reported to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING TARIFF ACT OF 1930

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6328) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by section 34 (c) of the Customs Administrative Act of 1938 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 19, sec. 1001, par. 1529 (a)).

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply meets a decision of the customs court of appeals. There was a 12-cent specific duty imposed on cocoa mats coming into the United States. Some importers raised the question whether or not the classification by the Treasury Department was proper. The customs court said it should have come in under another provision of the Tariff Act which imposed a lower duty. The purpose of this bill is to make plain the intent of Congress, as intended in the 1930 Tariff Act, to impose a higher duty.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. In other words, this bill, which is a unanimous report from the Committee on Ways and Means, is to comply with what Congress intended the law to be?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is absolutely true.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. This is a protective tariff bill to protect the blind workers of the country who are working in workshops for the blind, making cocoa mats, and if we do not pass this bill they will not have any work to do?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is absolutely correct. I have received a number of letters from the Blind Workshop of Wisconsin and from the gentleman himself and other parties from Wisconsin conveying to me their deep interest in the passage of this legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph 1529 (a) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by section 34 (c) of the Customs Administrative Act of 1938 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 19, sec. 1001, par. 1529 (a)), is hereby further amended by inserting "1022" after the figure "1006."

This act shall take effect on the day following its enactment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech entitled "War or Peace in America," by Mr. James D. Mooney, vice president of General Motors Corporation in charge of their overseas operations.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHN L. McMILLAN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a brief paragraph from the Republican platform of Illinois, adopted a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, on last Monday I sought and obtained unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein an editorial by the National Commander of the American Legion. The copy was returned to me on the ground that a Member of another body had extended it. I desire to renew my request to include it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein letters from the Polish Embassy.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. OSMERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a table on sugar.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks.

RELIEF BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the committee of conference may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the so-called relief bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The Speaker announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2059. An act authorizing a grant to the city of Fargo, N. Dak., of an easement in connection with the construction of water and sewer systems.

THE LATE SENATOR GIBSON

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 541

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. ERNEST W. GIBSON, a Senator of the United States from the State of Vermont.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That a committee of two Members be appointed on the part of the House to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as Members on the part of the House to attend the funeral, Mr. PLUMLEY and Mr. PITTENGER.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JUNE 21, 1940

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who alone dost offer man the hope of lasting harmony and peace: We beseech Thee to fill our hearts and minds with such a strong desire for unity and spiritual strength, that every cause of disunion may fade away like night before the rising sun, till all the peoples of this land and hemisphere are drawn together in one brotherhood, united in a common service to each other and to Thee. Through Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Thursday, June 20, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

REPORT OF COMMISSION ON ENLARGING THE CAPITOL GROUNDS (S. DOC. NO. 251)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Architect of the Capitol (member of the Commission on Enlarging the Capitol Grounds), transmitting, pursuant to law, the final report of the Commission on Enlarging the Capitol Grounds, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

REPORT ON AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939, covering the receipts, expenditures, and work of agricultural experiment stations in the States, Hawaii, Alaska, and Puerto Rico, etc., which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate 18 letters from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, lists of papers and documents on the files of the Departments of the Treasury (3), of War (2), of Justice, Navy, Interior (7); Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System; Veterans' Administration; Federal Works Agency, Work Projects Administration; and the Federal Works Agency, which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. TOBEY members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by a mass meeting of citizens of Fannin County, Tex., held under the auspices of the American Legion, favoring the extension of material aid to the allied nations, the strengthening of the armed forces of the United States, the speeding of production of war munitions and materials; the immediate repeal of the Johnson and Neutrality Acts; and the adoption of a form of compulsory military training, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. VANDENBERG presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Michigan, praying that the United States keep out of war, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Salisbury, Md., praying that Congress remain in session during the existing emergency, and that American boys be kept out of war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying that a full measure of material assistance be rendered to the Allies, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WALSH presented a petition of several citizens of Cambridge, Mass., praying that the United States avoid all steps leading to war, and also that the Monroe Doctrine be abrogated and mutual assistance pacts substituted therefor with the nations of the Western Hemisphere, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a statement in the nature of a petition from the Massachusetts State C. I. O. Industrial Union Council, Boston, Mass., praying that the United States keep out of war and pursue a policy of peace, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Worcester, Mass., being members of a branch of the Committee of American Friends of France and the American Fund for Wounded in France, praying for the extension of material aid to the Allies, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition numerously signed by sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying that the United States keep out of war, and that no American boys be sent to participate in foreign wars, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petitions of Everett Post No. 176, of Everett; Quincy Post, No. 95, of Quincy; South Hadley Post, No. 60, of South Hadley; and Waltham Post, No. 156, of Waltham, all of the American Legion, in the State of Massachusetts, praying that Congress remain in session during the existing international emergency, which were ordered to lie on the table.

RESOLUTION OF VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS, NORTH CAROLINA

Mr. REYNOLDS presented a resolution of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Department of North Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Department of North Carolina, are duly assembled in encampment at Winston-Salem, N. C., this 20th day of May 1940, and

Whereas said Veterans of Foreign Wars are aware that the United States of America is now faced with the problem of immediately preparing itself for effective defense against any power or combination of powers, and

Whereas it is a matter of recorded history that prior to and after the entry of the United States of America into the World War of 1914–18 peace and order were threatened, and considerable sabotage occurred as a result of the activities of enemy aliens and agents of enemy powers in the United States of America, and

Whereas the investigations of the Congress of the United States of America, through a special committee for that purpose appointed, disclose the existence of organized and dangerous revolutionary groups of alien extraction operating in the United States of America, and

Whereas there is at the present time no adequate method of establishing the identity or of tracing the activity of potential enemy agents and traitors in the United States of America: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Department of North Carolina, strongly advise and urge the Congress of the United States of America to immediately enact all necessary statutes and laws to require all persons residing or traveling within the boundaries of the United States of America or its possessions to have identity cards and to require the fingerprinting and other identification of all such persons; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Senator and each Representative from North Carolina in the Congress of the United States of America, to the chairman of the special committee of the House of Representatives of said United States charged with the investigation of seditious and un-American activities in this Nation, to the national encampment for 1940 of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and to the 1940 State convention of the American Legion of the Department of North Carolina.

RESOLUTION OF INDIANOLA (MISS.) POST NO. 2, AMERICAN LEGION

Mr. BILBO presented a resolution of Indianola Post No. 2, American Legion, Indianola, Miss., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas all Europe and the Far East are now engaged in a major conflict, the direct effect of which is to strike down the last vestige of freedom in those lands; and

Whereas solemn pledges of nations written into treaties are no longer recognized as anything but a "scrap of paper," used by aggressors to ensnare the unwary, so that such aggressors respect nothing but force, and are limited in their operations only by fear; and

Whereas it has come to the attention of the American people that this country is deplorably deficient in armaments and is now at the mercy of aggressor nations, and that it is apparent to all thinking Americans that the forces of greed and oppression are being held off these shores only temporarily while they solidify themselves at home, and that our day of trial by fire and steel appears to be in the near future; and

Whereas there have sprung up in this Nation large groups of people organized under the direction of nations that would destroy us by weakening us from within; and whereas there are those among us owing their allegiance to the enemies of America, who are seeking to destroy our constitutional liberties, and who hide behind our constitutional guaranties of free speech so to do; and

Whereas it is the sense of this body that it was never intended that the right of free speech be accorded to aliens who are seeking to use that privilege to destroy us, and we further believe that our Constitution contains sufficient provisions to protect itself and the citizenship of America; and

Whereas no nation can survive in this present world without being strong from within and strong from without, and it is essential that we immediately clean out all subversive elements within our country, and arm this Nation at once sufficiently to protect us from any nation or combination of nations that would destroy us: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by Indianola Post No. 2, the American Legion, at Indianola, Miss., on the 11th day of June 1940, That we now call upon all officials in our Nation to put aside all partisan feelings and considerations, and to rally behind the President in a concerted drive to immediately and fully arm and equip this Nation, and to wipe out all un-American influences at work in this country; and we deny that aliens in our midst are entitled to the use of free speech in their efforts to destroy us, and we demand immediate deportation of every alien wrongfully in our midst or who abuses the freedom of this country, and we demand the Department of Labor to take immediate steps to deport all such alien agitators of every kind from America, and that all aliens be forthwith required to register and keep their movements and whereabouts known to the authorities, and we further demand that aliens be taken off the relief rolls of this country and from jobs that our citizens want or should hold; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our Congressmen and Senators in Washington, and that a copy thereof be filed with the proper committee at the ensuing department convention with a view of having the same there adopted.

RESOLUTION OF FLORA (MISS.) LIONS CLUB

Mr. BILBO also presented a resolution of the Lions Club of Flora, Miss., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the slogan of the International Association of Lions Clubs is Liberty, Intelligence, Our Nation's Safety; and

Whereas the Flora Lions Club is vitally interested in and deeply concerned for the safety of the United States of America: Therefore

Resolved, That the Flora Lions Club hereby assures the President of the United States and the Congress of its approval of legislation enacted to keep the United States safe in a world consumed by war; and that we respectfully but earnestly urge further immediate and positive action to assure a degree of preparedness such as will safeguard our free democracy; and be it further

Resolved, That the Flora Lions Club stands resolutely for freedom of speech, freedom of thought, and individual liberty; that to this end we believe in adequate and substantial preparedness; that the Flora Lions Club asks a definite part in carrying out the program of preparedness and stopping the subversive activities of aliens and of all who would hamper the task of the Government in making this country fully prepared to defend its liberties and rights; and be it further

Resolved, That the Flora Lions Club urges the immediate enactment of legislation such as may be necessary to put an end to the subversive activities of foreign powers, paid or otherwise, who are plotting and working against our democracy; and that the Congress enact further legislation to inflict drastic punishment on any citizen or alien, working in the interest of any foreign power, who may willfully engage in any activity whose purpose is to defeat or overthrow our democratic form of government; and be it further

Resolved, That the Flora Lions Club hereby heartily endorses the work of the Dies congressional investigating committee and the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, and emphatically urges that their powers be broadened and that ample appropriations be made to enable them to combat all subversive activities, thereby further guaranteeing our Nation's safety; and be it further

Resolved, That duly authenticated copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the Vice President, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to Senators THEODORE G. BILBO and PAT HARRISON, and Hon. DAN MCGEHEE, our Representative in Congress.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The routine morning business is closed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, yesterday I announced that, following the completion of the routine morning business, I would ask for the consideration of unobjected-to bills on the calendar. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] is in charge of the unfinished business, which he thinks will not take much time, and I am perfectly willing to postpone the request for the consideration of unobjected-to bills to see if he can get his bill through.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I make that request because I should like to have the Senate act on the Commodity Credit Corporation bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if request is made for an order to proceed with the calendar for the consideration of unobjected-to bills only, I must object, for this reason: There are on the calendar many bills which should be considered; and if an order should be entered to consider only unobjected-to bills, obviously we may not consider certain important bills.

Mr. President, I wish to aid the able Senator from Kentucky; but there are on the calendar bills which are hotly contested. I would not attempt at this time and in these circumstances to try to get up the Walter-Logan bill, although my attitude toward that bill is well known; but there are other bills of importance, notably the so-called Boulder Dam adjustment bill, upon which the seven Colorado River Basin States have agreed. That bill is in charge of the able senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. There is the freight-forwarders bill to be considered. Moreover, there is Senate bill 4008, introduced by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] for himself and 10 other Senators; and I do not overemphasize when I say that Senate bill 4008 is one of the most, if not the most, important of the bills pending before Congress, because it implements and equips the authority, the power, and credit to prospect for, extract, and process strategic, essential, and critical minerals now locked in the hills and mountains of our country.

Surely if we are in good faith, as we certainly are, about preparedness and rearmament for our country's defense, the Senate will not adjourn until it passes Senate bill 4008, introduced, as I said before, by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] and 10 other Senators, and which bill was favorably reported from the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, so that we may be equipped to secure, extract, and process these strategic, critical, and essential minerals from our own country without being required to obtain these minerals from Brazil, Russia, or other countries.

So, Mr. President, I must object unless we have assurances that that bill and bills of similar character may be considered. Under the order that will be asked by my able friend the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], that bill (S. 4008), for example, might not have opportunity to be considered. Mr. President, why dehorn ourselves? Why draw our teeth, and clip our claws, and render ourselves unable to consider these bills?

I wish no order entered to consider only unobjected-to bills on the calendar. I desire both objected-to and unobjected-to bills considered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona knows that there are on the calendar many bills which can be passed as soon as they are called, to which there is no objection. Unless we enter an order for the consideration only of unobjected-to bills, the first bill called might take an indefinite length of time, and we never would reach the other bills.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, we have 6½ months remaining.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, well, Mr. President; I want to be perfectly frank. Unless we can get an order for the consideration of unobjected-to bills only, I shall withdraw my request for the consideration of the calendar, and let the Senator from South Carolina go ahead with his bill.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, this bill, reported from the Banking and Currency Committee——

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. NYE. Has there been consent to waive the order of last night, and take up the so-called unfinished business at this hour?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No order was made last night except to adjourn, so far as the Chair knows. Therefore, the regular order comes on after adjournment, which is the routine morning business.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. We have not completed the routine morning business, have we?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been completed.

Mr. McNARY. Has it been?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was so announced by the Chair.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. NYE. A few moments ago the Senator from South Carolina made a personal request of me. I understood that his request was that I refrain from delivering the remarks I had planned to make this noon until he could bring up the unfinished business. I am sorry to have misunderstood as completely as I did his purpose. I had no knowledge that he planned to move the consideration of the unfinished business as the first order today. I had been hoping and planning to speak when the Senate convened this noon, and had assumed, when the plan was announced to take up the calendar, that as soon as the consideration of the calendar was completed the Senator from South Carolina would call up the unfinished business, and I should have a chance then to be heard.

If, now, the Senator wishes to proceed with the unfinished business, and hopes to prevent any talk aside from the business itself, I am sorry to have to disappoint him, because it seems to me this is going to be the only opportunity I shall have during the day to speak.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I did speak to the Senator, and presented to him this situation:

Here is a bill which was unanimously reported by the Banking and Currency Committee, which would make available to the Commodity Credit Corporation additional credit to make loans upon wheat, cotton, and corn under the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. It is essential that it be done; and my personal request to the Senator was that he would permit me to dispose of this matter, which I was sure could be done in a few minutes, that I might return to the Appropriations Committee, where the deficiency subcommittee is in session, of which the Senator from North Dakota is a member and I am a member, and hearings are going on.

There is no agreement about the consideration of bills on the calendar. I do not know why the Senator will not have an opportunity during the day to make the speech he desires to make. I hope he will permit this bill to be disposed of, because it is a matter of very great importance to the agricultural interests of the country.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NYE. If the unfinished business is taken up and disposed of, will the Senate then proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar under the 5-minute rule?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that we have not any consent to consider bills on the calendar at all. We cannot proceed with the calendar without obtaining consent.

Mr. NYE. May I ask the leader, then, whether there will be an opportunity to be heard?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The Senate adjourned last evening, did it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The RECORD shows that the Senate adjourned last evening.

Mr. McNARY. Then, automatically, the calendar comes up today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct, under rule VIII.

Mr. McNARY. Under rule VIII. The Senator from Kentucky desires to amend the usual formula by asking unanimous consent for the consideration of unobjected-to bills; but in the absence of that agreement the calendar would come before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is true.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment? The RECORD seems to me to be fairly clear in regard to the matter.

Last night the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] suggested, after he had presented his matter, that—

> I will do whatever the Senator from Oregon wishes. If delay is desired, I shall not ask for action on the bill today.
>
> Mr. McNARY. Why not let the bill remain the unfinished business, and let the Senate carry out its purpose to adjourn out of respect to the memory of our late colleague?
>
> Mr. BYRNES. Very well. I ask that the bill be read.
>
> The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.
>
> The Chief Clerk read as follows:
> "Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved March 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 107), as amended by the act of March 4, 1939 (53 Stat. 510), be amended as follows: In section 4 delete the figure '$900,000,000' and insert in lieu thereof the figure '$1,400,000,000.'"
> The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.
> The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3998) to increase the credit resources of Commodity Credit Corporation.

It seems to me we are left, then, at the close of the session with the Senate having agreed to consider this particular bill, and this particular bill comes before us this morning the first thing.

Mr. BARKLEY. That would be true if the Senate met today following a recess, but the Senate adjourned yesterday, which, of course, brings about a morning hour. In the course of considering the morning hour's business we have reached the calendar. We either have to dispense with the call of the calendar or get an agreement to consider unobjected-to bills, or proceed with the calendar until 2 o'clock, and debate the first bill or any other bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. After the particular exchange to which I have referred had been had, the Senator from Kentucky made a statement, and I read that statement:

> Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] makes his motion, I wish to advise the Senate that tomorrow, as soon as the routine business of the morning hour shall have been concluded, I shall ask the Senate to consider bills on the calendar to which there is no objection. There are a number of bills on the calendar which should be considered before the week is over, and I think we shall have time to do that tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. It seems to me it is not difficult to unravel the situation, then. But it depends now upon what is to be done by the Senate tomorrow, and if it will not be presumptuous I should like to inquire whether it is the intention of the Senator from Kentucky to ask tomorrow that we adjourn, and adjourn sine die.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is it the intention to ask for a recess until a day in August?

Mr. BARKLEY. That depends, I will say to the Senator. I had first thought—and I have been trying to work it out with the other body—that we could recess until the 1st of August. Whether that can happen or not I do not know. But I understand the House is now considering a suggestion to recess from tomorrow until Monday week, which would be after the Philadelphia convention; and if they adopt such a resolution as that and send it to the Senate, I think it is likely we could agree to it. Unless the House passes some resolution of that kind or some resolution with respect to a recess, I do not intend to offer any resolution on the subject either of adjournment or of recess. But if we cannot recess for a week, I think, as is customary, out of respect to our colleagues here, we will have to have an understanding that no important business shall be transacted next week—that we will recess from Monday until Thursday and from Thursday until the following Monday.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Quite so; and I think that would be an eminently fair suggestion. But I am one of those who do not want Congress to adjourn or to recess for a definite period until August, and I am trying to ascertain the facts so that I can govern myself accordingly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand the Senator. I cannot tell him now what kind of a resolution the House may adopt and send to the Senate, or whether it will adopt any, but I think it is likely that they will not adopt any that will provide for a recess of more than a week.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think the able Senator from California has voiced the sentiments of the Republican Senators. We desire to remain in session constantly from day to day. However, an arrangement in accordance with the very generous statement made by the able leader of the Democratic Party in the Senate would permit us to meet Monday and recess until Thursday, and meet Thursday and recess until the following Monday, to permit those who desire to attend the Republican convention to do so.

So far as recessing to a definite time is concerned, whether it be for a week or a month or 2 months, I think it may be said, in fairness to the Democratic leader, that the Republican Members of the Senate object to that form of arrangement.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that suggestion. I understand that to be the public attitude of the minority, taken in a conference which they held. Many of them have told me that they voted for that action in the conference with so many of their fingers crossed that it made their hands look as if they had been deformed through a lifetime of rheumatism. [Laughter.] At the same time I realize that is the action they have taken.

I wish to say to the Senator from Arizona that I am for his proposed Boulder Dam bill. I think it can be passed on the call of the calendar. I am for his mineral bill, and I will cooperate with him in an effort to get that bill brought up separately before tomorrow night if we cannot pass it on the call of the calendar, if there should be objection to it.

I will say frankly that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, has a naval bill, which is part of the defense program, which he desires to have acted on. I do not think the consideration of that bill will take long, and it is very necessary to get it through. But I have every reason to believe we can take up the bill of the Senator from Arizona if it cannot be passed on the call of the calendar.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, there are other bills on the calendar in which other Senators are interested. For instance, the bill introduced by the Senator from Arizona prohibiting interstate commerce in convict-made goods is a bill which has very wide support. I do not know whether it can be passed on the call of the calendar or not, but I do not want to see others precluded. I think there should be a regular call of the calendar before the end of the session, and at the earliest possible date, not for unobjected-to bills but a regular call of the calendar, so that Senators may have opportunity to move to take up bills.

Mr. McNARY. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BARKLEY. The hope is that we may have such a call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3998, the Commodity Credit Corporation bill.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3998) to increase the credit resources of the Commodity Credit Corporation, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency without amendment.

Mr. BYRNES obtained the floor.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. NYE. I have no desire to delay the passage of the bill which the Senator has before the Senate at the present time, but I wish to make inquiry of the majority leader whether it is his intention to ask unanimous consent, on the disposal of the unfinished business, that we proceed to consider the calendar under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. BARKLEY. That had been my purpose. I will say to the Senator, in response to his former question, that undoubtedly there will be opportunity for the Senator to address the Senate even after the call of the calendar. We have to take up the naval bill, and we will have to take up several other bills before the end of the week. I am sure the Senator will have an opportunity to address the Senate.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I shall seek recognition at the conclusion of the consideration of the unfinished business, and seek to make my remarks then.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the pending bill was reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency by unanimous vote. It is made necessary by reason of the fact that the Agricultural Adjustment Act provides that should the prices of certain commodities decline to 52 percent of parity, loans by the Department of Agriculture shall be mandatory.

Today the Commodity Credit Corporation has available for such loans, if the loans become necessary, a little more than $20,000,000. Because of the fact that our exports to European nations are necessarily curtailed, if not absolutely destroyed, it is evident that there will be a necessity for the department to make such loans.

The committee therefore has reported this bill, giving to the Commodity Credit Corporation an increase in its borrowing power so that should the necessity arise, they can make the loans. If the prices of wheat, corn, cotton, and tobacco, should not decline, the loans would not be made. Should those prices decline below the percentage fixed in the law, then the loans would have to be made.

It is necessary that the Commodity Credit Corporation be clothed with the power to carry out the provisions of law. That is all there is to the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. KING. Assume that, by reason of convulsions throughout the world, our foreign market is practically destroyed—and, of course, the repercussions would be manifested in our domestic market—and wheat, corn, and other commodities should fall to a very low figure. Under the law would this organization be compelled to make loans?

Mr. BYRNES. They would be compelled to do so.

Mr. KING. Nevertheless, there might be enormous losses which would have to be paid by the Government?

Mr. BYRNES. The question of losses would be determined on liquidation. At present, under the law the Corporation must file a statement as of March 15, and as of March 15 last there was a paper profit of $75,000,000 because prices happened to be high. Today there would be shown to be a paper loss instead of a paper profit.

Mr. KING. Has a statement or report been made by this Corporation to Congress or to some executive agency of the Government indicating the amount they have expended by way of loans, the losses and the profits, and what they have on hand?

Mr. BYRNES. That information is contained in the hearings, two statements, not only the one of March 15, but a statement as of April 30, the date of the hearings, giving the exact information the Senator desires to secure.

Mr. KING. Would the Senator care to state the amount which has been loaned, the sources from which the money was obtained, and the amount of assets which the Corporation has at present?

Mr. BYRNES. As to the source, it is obtained from the sale of securities which the Commodity Credit Corporation borrowed from the Treasury. I shall be glad to hand the Senator the itemized statement, which is quite lengthy, but gives the detailed information. To my surprise, on the commodities which have actually been liquidated to date, there has been an actual profit. But the question of profit or loss depends, of course, upon what would be the situation if the Corporation were required to liquidate today all the commodities held as security. There would be a loss if the Corporation were forced to liquidate today. That statement differs from day to day as the price of the commodities held differs.

The Senator will find that the committee went into that matter in the hearings, which give to the Senate information as to the assets and liabilities, and as to the loans guaranteed. The loans are made through banks, and the Corporation guarantees the loans. That is necessary at this time. If there are any losses they have to be made good.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I am very greatly interested in the objective of the Commodity Credit Corporation. I think, however, it has made some unwise loans. I am curious whether the Senator has a statement of the losses sustained on the capitalization heretofore granted the Corporation by Congress.

Mr. BYRNES. I was just saying something along that line in answer to a question propounded by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. McNARY. I am sorry I did not hear that. I shall be glad to read it if the RECORD discloses it. I was obliged to leave the Chamber for a moment and failed to hear that explanation.

Mr. BYRNES. The answer is that, somewhat to my surprise, a profit was made on the commodities that have actually been liquidated. But the question of whether or not there is a profit or loss depends on the price of the commodities on the day we ask the question. For instance, the law requires that the statement be made as of March 15. On that date this year the price of wheat, corn, and cotton was much higher than it is now, and there was shown a profit—a paper profit I call it, because that is all it is—of $75,000,000, which, under another provision of the law, the Commodity Credit Corporation must pay to the Treasury out of this fund.

If we take the price as of today, because of the amount of cotton that is held, there would be a loss.

Mr. McNARY. What would be the extent of that loss?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I must say that I have not followed the price of cotton the last few days.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator will recall that when we extended the capitalization of this corporation 2 years ago there was a very great loss incident to loans made on cotton.

Mr. BYRNES. That is true.

Mr. McNARY. I am not criticizing the Corporation because of these losses, but I would probably criticize the administration of the act in the lending of more money than was justified by the price of cotton. The loans did a great service to the cotton growers. I am not objecting to that. I only mention that situation. I know of other commodities in connection with which losses have been made. I believe a miscalculation was made with respect to the price level of the products, or they were struck by the depression. In any event, losses were incurred.

What I should like to obtain, if the Senator has it, is a statement of the loans that were made on the different commodities in the order in which they were made, and the losses and profits that may accrue from these loans. Has the Senator such a record?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I will say that in order to determine that we must take the value of the cotton which is now held by the Commodity Credit Corporation. Some of it was bought at high prices. It would represent on a given date a loss. I will give to the Senator the answer of the official in charge who replied to this question. He said that if all the assets of the Commodity Credit Corporation on March 31 had been sold at the then prevailing market prices, and all its liabilities had been paid, the Corporation would have returned to the Treasury the original $100,000,000 of capital appropriated by the Congress, plus an estimated $75,000,000 of profit. There have, however, been appropriations to offset deficits in 2 earlier years. That is the situation as it stands today.

Mr. McNARY. What amount of money has the Congress appropriated to the capital stock of this Corporation in toto?

Mr. BYRNES. Outside of the $100,000,000, there was an appropriation provided to make good a deficit, as the official of the Corporation testified. The exact amount of that, I do not know, but it is set forth in a letter addressed to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. I think he secured a statement of the amount.

Mr. McNARY. The original capitalization was $100,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. Did we not increase that by $200,000,000 in the consideration of the last model of the A. A. A. measure?

Mr. BYRNES. No; it was not increased by that legislation.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me so that I may answer the question of the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. In 1938 there was an impairment of $96,000,000 of the capital stock of the Commodity Credit Corporation. In 1939 there was an impairment of $116,000,000. Both those items were made good by appropriations out of the Treasury.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as to the exact amount, I do not have it in mind. If the Senator from Virginia says that those two losses occurred, and that they were made good, the total represents the loss to the Treasury.

Mr. McNARY. The pending bill proposes to increase the capital stock to $1,400,000,000?

Mr. BYRNES. It raises its borrowing power from $900,000,000 to $1,400,000,000.

Mr. McNARY. Then the borrowing power today is $900,000,000?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. What has been the total impairment in the amount of money advanced by the Government, through loans made by the Corporation?

Mr. BYRNES. The impairment would be the amount represented by the figures given by the Senator from Virginia. He says he has the figures at hand with respect to those two appropriations. They represent the only impairment. The statement made by the Corporation is that if the assets were sold a month ago and all liabilities paid, there would be a profit of $75,000,000; that is, the Corporation would return the $100,000,000 of capitalization, plus $75,000,000.

Mr. McNARY. I may ask the Senator what amount of cotton is the Commodity Credit Corporation now holding for liens upon the money advanced? I refer to the cotton in bales. At one time it amounted to about 12,000,000 bales.

Mr. BYRNES. That amount was greatly reduced. On April 30 the Corporation had loans outstanding of $118,000,000 on 2,500,000 bales of cotton, and on that date the Corporation owned, in addition, 6,650,000 bales of cotton.

Mr. McNARY. The Corporation owned that number of bales?

Mr. BYRNES. The Corporation owned 6,650,000 bales of cotton.

Mr. McNARY. In the loss which the Senator stated, does he take into consideration the amount of cotton held after the final disposition of the cotton impounded under loans?

Mr. BYRNES. The Corporation states that there would be no loss, taking into consideration the value of the cotton impounded, and it is stated that as of March 31, had the Corporation been liquidated, there would have been a profit of $75,000,000.

Mr. McNARY. I am happy indeed to have that information.

Mr. BYRNES. I may say I was surprised to learn of it.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection to the bill sponsored by the Senator. Indeed, I favor it, provided the declaration of the Senator is that the Corporation is conducting its affairs in a businesslike way, and that the losses are not larger than good business would justify.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Am I to understand the Senator to say that the Corporation now owns 6,600,000 bales of cotton?

Mr. BYRNES. I was reading from the hearings. That was the statement of Mr. Robbins in the hearings.

Mr. TAFT. And then they also have loans on 2,500,000 bales of cotton?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. I notice in the statement on page 10 of the hearings that the Corporation has obligations to purchase loans made by private lending agencies in an amount of $293,000,000. Is that in addition to, or is that part of the 2,500,000 bales?

Mr. BYRNES. I assumed that was part of the obligations on loans outstanding. As the Senator knows—and he was present at the hearings—all their obligations are made upon the outstanding loans.

Mr. TAFT. So in effect the Corporation owns something over 9,000,000 bales of cotton today, at a cost of perhaps $600,000,000 or so?

Mr. BYRNES. As to the figure with respect to cotton, I will say yes. As to the amount, I do not know, because the cotton was bought at different prices, and without looking at the statement I could not tell.

Mr. TAFT. I see this estimate provides for an increase in the loans on cotton of $100,000,000, or an approximate increase of 2,000,000 more bales, in addition to the 9,000,000 bales which we already have. That is a contingency that is provided for here.

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. Is the Senator advised as to how much money is outstanding in loans on corn today?

Mr. BYRNES. Only from the statement which the Senator has in front of him. I have no other information. As to corn, the Corporation's obligations to purchase loans made by private lending agencies amount to $108,000,000.

Mr. TAFT. And in addition, the estimate provides for increase in loans on corn, gross without any deduction, of $150,000,000 for 260,000,000 more bushels of corn.

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. And is the Senator advised as to how much is outstanding on wheat today?

Mr. BYRNES. Only as shown in the statement which the Senator has before him, $87,956,000, which was the figure as of March 15. I have no other information than was given to the committee.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wish to say only a few words. The bill, of course, authorizes an increase in the public debt of the United States of half a billion dollars in effect. We first authorized a capital stock of $100,000,000. We then authorized $400,000,000 to be borrowed on the credit of the United States. Then last year we authorized $500,000,000 more. The bill proposes to authorize $500,000,000 more, so we shall have $1,500,000,000 invested in various crops. As I understand, loans on corn are made at a price in excess of the price on corn. Many of the loans on cotton are made at a price in excess of the price on cotton. I think we have undertaken obligations which require that the bill be passed, but if we continue the policy of the Government buying surpluses, in effect at prices in excess of the market prices, it means a constant increase in the Government debt, and it seems to me that, in the long run, we stand a chance of a very large loss.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. The report made by the Commodity Credit Corporation as of June 30 last showed that loans to the extent of $132,441,000 were in default. I assume that when the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] said that there had been a profit, he did not include the losses which were made good out of the Treasury. For 1938 those losses were $96,000,000; for 1939, $116,000,000; and for 1940, no report has been made.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is correct. On March 15, 1939, the losses were approximately $200,000,000. On March 15, 1940, the cut-off date, it happened that the price of cotton was unusually high. I think it has gone down since then, has it not?

Mr. BYRNES. It has.

Mr. TAFT. Therefore the $75,000,000 profit was simply a book profit, because the price of cotton happened to be higher on March 15, 1940. Also, in a sense, the $200,000,000 loss was a book loss. We may or may not make money; but undoubtedly the Government is in the grain business and the cotton business to a greater extent than any Government has ever been in any such commodity business.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. Surely.

Mr. BYRNES. To me, the interesting—and I may say surprising—statement was that on the commodities actually liquidated there was an actual profit. On the basis of the figures, there would be a loss or profit, depending upon the prices of commodities on a given date. On March 13 there was a paper profit of nearly $75,000,000. There is actually no profit, because the prices of wheat and corn are now lower.

Mr. TAFT. Whether or not there is a profit depends on whether we sell the cotton we buy at a low price or at a high price. Those things are hardly determinative of what may happen in the long run. I should say that under the circumstances we are certain to suffer a loss. How large that loss may be, I cannot say.

BRIG. GEN. WILLIAM L. MITCHELL

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I rise today to do a job which I have wanted to do for a long time, a job which I should do, because it concerns the vindication of a famous Wisconsinite. It also concerns the matter of preparedness, which we have been discussing.

Yesterday we paid homage to one of our Members who has gone on ahead in the great journey. The great Wisconsinite to whom I refer has also gone on ahead. The job I wish to do now should be done, because in vindicating the memory of this man we may be able to make constructive contributions to our defensive philosophy. If there is anything we need to do now, it is to awake to the importance of defense.

Mr. President, I rise today to alter the epitaph which Army "brass hats" wrote more than a decade and a half ago for the military career of a great soldier. It is well that this epitaph be altered for the RECORD.

Fifteen years ago a good Milwaukeean, Brig. Gen. Billy Mitchell, blasted the Army and Navy mossbacks with a scorching broadside for "their criminal negligence and their bungling incompetency." General Mitchell, one time Chief of the Army Air Corps, was a brilliant soldier and a pioneer flier. He rebelled—and I use that word advisedly—at the criminal blindness of his superiors. Finally he publicly urged the establishment of a separate air branch for national defense.

This far-seeing man, who commanded the A. E. F. air force in France, was convinced that the airplane would be a decisive factor in all future wars. He was so far ahead of his time that he advocated aerial torpedos, parachute troops, troop transport planes, heavy-gun combat planes, and air bases in Alaska. As far back as October 17, 1918, Mitchell discussed troop transport and parachute armies with General Pershing. At that time he urged further development and greater use of the tank. That was expert pre-vision. Mitchell was a prophet. He was ahead of his time. Today he stands high in our current history as "the man who saw them coming."

His idea of the military importance of air power dates back to 1910, and he fought from that time until his death—he fought, I say, until his death, literally becoming a martyr—to have the United States lead the world with an air armada.

Billy Mitchell never "pulled his punches." He was outspoken in his criticism, but he backed his statements with facts. As early as 1920 he literally stunned officials in Washington with the statement that he could sink a battleship with airplane bombs. Rocking-chair admirals and swivel-chair generals scoffed at the idea, but they arranged a demonstration. He directed Army flyers who bombed and sank a submarine, a cruiser, a destroyer, and then a German dreadnaught. By the way, that dreadnaught was the one which the infamous von Tirpitz said could not be sunk.

As recently as 1933 Brig. Gen. William L. Mitchell was still fighting for an air force. There was one other man in the world who was waging a similar battle. His name was Hermann Goering, of Germany. Goering's advice was respected.

Mitchell's advice was not respected. Goering was given carte blanche authority to build the German air force. He built it, and today Germany is the only first-class nation in Europe. Mitchell was repudiated, and died a broken man in 1936, at almost the same time Adolf Hitler was completing his air defenses. Not a single official representative of the Army attended his funeral.

I say it is time for us to develop an air force in this country and get away from those who can see only today and yesterday, but not tomorrow. When Mitchell made his first blistering attack on our military high-caste command, what happened? He was relieved of his tour of duty and sent to the "sticks" in a Texas outpost. When the airship Shenandoah crashed this man dared to speak out. He issued a bitter blast against the hide-bound officials who held down the development of the air defense of this country. The sole result of this accurate indictment was what? Billy Mitchell was arrested, court-martialed, and suspended from the service for 5 years. He was "cashiered" by a packed court. One of the greatest military minds of all time was crucified under the outmoded terms of the ninety-sixth article of war.

Today we are outmoded because we would not listen to the advice of vision of Billy Mitchell, from my State of Wisconsin. Mitchell was pilloried by military martinets. His ideas were stifled and his beliefs entombed. If he were alive today he could say, "Gentlemen, I told you so." He could enjoy the last laugh, though it would be a grim one, because today, just 4 years after his death, we lay plans for an Air Corps of 50,000 planes, an even mightier air fleet than Mitchell envisioned.

Mr. President, vindication is always late. Mitchell's case may never be reopened by an Army court. Meanwhile, confession is good for the soul. It is good to know that Maj. Gen. Edwin B. Winans, a member of the court-martial board which tried Mitchell, recently publicly admitted—and I quote:

> Mitchell was right and we were wrong.

Pray God that the mistake of those who were wrong will not present America as another France to the world. The vindication came too late for Billy Mitchell; but I hope it does not come too late for us publicly to alter his epitaph as the public reads it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks an article from the Milwaukee Journal of May 24, 1940. That article is entitled "Air War a Vindication of General Mitchell." I want the RECORD to be straight on the vindicated vision of Brig. Gen. William L. Mitchell, from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the article may be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, a lip service of vindication is not enough. In the Holy Writ it is written, "Where there is no vision, the people perish." Some of us who listened to Petain the other day heard him tell of his beloved France going down, not because the soldiers failed but because France failed 4 or 5 years ago to see what Billy Mitchell saw.

On the floor of the Senate we now admit we are unprepared because we failed to see what he saw. The truth of the statement that without vision a nation perishes is evident to everyone. The truth of that warning is written in the trail of blood flowing across all Europe today. If we are really to vindicate Mitchell, we must erect a monument to his memory in the sacred shrine of a new concept of security; we must grasp what we are facing and meet it head-on. It is not enough for us to look backward. We have got to meet the challenge of this hour; we have got to realize that the Hitler revolution is one of the stupendous movements of history. It not only affects the geography of the world but it affects the economic picture of all life on this globe.

It will do no good to build planes and make guns if we do not use brains and vision in their design and in their use. We must eliminate any vestige of a vicious military caste system which crucifies courage and vision. That is what Petain found was the matter with France, and, perhaps, in our own land today we had better look to our own faults and shortcomings.

Have we denied men with ideas an opportunity? The best demonstration of what we have done is what was done in crucifying Billy Mitchell. We must scrap outmoded ideas, red tape, and, above all, mossback thinking. We must insist on open minds, receptive to new ideas, and we must insist on a fair hearing for such ideas.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not know what the Senator has in mind to propose as a matter of vindication in line with his argument, but I think he might well consider, being a Senator from Wisconsin, having a bill introduced which would give to the widow and children of General Mitchell for the period of life at least the salary and allowances which he would have had if he had not been eliminated from the Army. Mere words will not do General Mitchell any good, but they will do the country good, and I am glad the Senator is speaking as he is speaking. But, for one, having a feeling that General Mitchell, as the Senator indicates, was victimized—perhaps General Mitchell was not completely right, but certainly he was not altogether wrong either. I think it might be well for the Senator to consider, as he has given some thought to the matter, a measure which would give to General Mitchell's widow and children at least the pay which he would have had during his life if he had not been court-martialed from the Army.

Mr. WILEY. I thank the distinguished Senator very much for his suggeston.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. WILEY. I will yield in a few moments, but I should like to conclude the chain of thought which I started.

May I say that my speaking today is not primarily for the purpose indicated by the Senator from Maryland, though I have that purpose in mind? My purpose in addressing the Senate and taking its time goes far deeper than merely asking that General Mitchell's name be cleared. Time has cleared his name. One of my purposes in rising is to bring to the Senate and the country the significant questions, Has America become soft; has America put herself in the same position into which France and other countries fell? Are we by neglect making ourselves an open target to the new "blitzkrieg" methods developed by the brains and ingenuity of Hitler? It does not do us any good to sit back here and damn Hitler, but we can, perhaps, profit from some of the ideas he has put into effect—not to emulate such a character as he is, not to become a destructionist but, rather, to protect ourselves and all the values we have in America, the great freedoms which we never did a thing to attain but which were handed to us on a silver platter, to protect those freedoms against experiences similar to those through which France, Holland, Norway, Belgium, Poland, and other countries have gone.

Mr. President, it is necessary that we slough off all dead timber in our military system. Let me say that does not apply only to the military system. The distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has been showing that we have got to slough off dead timber in our economic system. He has done a great job. Largely through his efforts we, at least, passed a bill the other day which indicated not simply to this country but to the world that, if war should come, we will dig deep down in our pockets as we never dug before to the tune of raising $15,000,000,000 from incomes, and we have said to the world that, if war comes to America, we will be ready.

There are many other ways we could learn from Billy Mitchell. If necessary, we can revamp our naval and military training schools so that less emphasis would be laid on antiquated tactics and more on the vision needed to meet new emergencies.

Mr. President, when I make that statement I say what has been told to me by graduates of West Point and Annapolis. We must see to it that the mere wiping off of dust is not so significant as getting the cobwebs out of the brain. We must get men who will develop mentally to the point where they realize that life is growth and that growth never stops in the mind of man if man would have it that way.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, in line with the Senator's remarks, I wish to call the attention of the Senate, of the Senator from Wisconsin, and of the country to the fact that there is right now a case, in my opinion, similar to that of the Mitchell episode. There is an inventor of a high explosive, a Mr. Barlow, who is not receiving the cooperation and encouragement from the Ordnance Department of the United States Army that should be given to him in this hour of our Nation's need. The defense of our Nation right now in this day, in my opinion, as a member of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate, is being denied the development of an explosive more powerful than anything now known.

Mr. WILEY. I thank the distinguished Senator from Oregon for his contribution.

Now, let me say to the Senate, the things I have said we must do to vindicate ourselves and vindicate General Mitchell, we must also do to protect America; and we must do them because we cannot gamble with our American destiny.

Mr. President, to safeguard America we have to find an effective antidote for the "blitzkrieg" methods of the Hitler revolution.

(At this point Mr. WILEY yielded to Mr. LUNDEEN, who introduced Senate bill 4168, which appears under a separate heading.)

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, when I was a youngster studying in the University of Michigan with my friend the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], we took class work under the distinguished Professor Trueblood in oratory. In those days when we looked ahead to the time when we might be Senators of the United States we, in our minds, saw ourselves as Websters and Hayneses, and saw the other Senators sitting around listening with close, enraptured attention—just as they are listening now. [Laughter.] In our mind's eye we saw the chairs completely filled; we saw the Senators saying to themselves, but never speaking out loud, "Ah, he is hitting the ball"—just as they are doing now. [Laughter.] We thought, too, that in the Senate of the United States there was the quintessence of courtesy and the perfection of conduct and that every Senator listened to his fellow Senator, in rapt attention.

We have since learned, however, that the presiding officer performs an important function in doing what we never thought could be possible—calling to order the Senate, the greatest deliberative body in the United States—and only the occupants of the galleries are supposed to listen. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I can assure the able Senator that we are listening very carefully to his remarks.

Mr. WILEY. I thank the Senator. That at least one Senator is listening, is a remarkable compliment to any speaker in the United States Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, to safeguard America we have to find the effective antidote to the "blitzkrieg" methods of Hitler's revolution. I commented on what the revolution is. It is not simply another war. We are running into one of the stupendous periods of history, comparable with the period of the Renaissance and the Reformation, comparable to the period of the industrial revolution; and anyone who is "sitting by the side of the road," and does not appreciate that the world is turning over, is simply not awake. Consequently, it is up to us to realize that we cannot follow our outmoded methods of yesterday, whether in warfare or in thinking.

Billy Mitchell was the type of man who stretched out ahead, and used his imagination. Our military experts now say that the antidote to the Hitler "blitzkrieg" is to be found in bigger and better air fleets, bigger and better navies, bigger and better tanks, bigger and better mechanized military equipment, a bigger and better Army. This may be the answer; but I believe that if Billy Mitchell were alive, or if men like Billy Mitchell were permitted to use their ideas, they would seek out new ways. Billy Mitchell would not continue building battleships as they are now built. He would make them more immune to attack by torpedoes, more immune to attack by bombers. He also would use his God-given ingenuity to meet the mechanized dreadnaughts not simply with dreadnaughts but with improved methods.

Mr. President, we cannot have antiquated minds looking after America. We cannot have outmoded minds looking after America. If we do, we shall not have any America.

As I said in the Senate in another connection, it is time that the people of this country—you, and you, and you—look after your big business in Washington, and forget a little of your own little business back home; because if you do not look after your big business of Government, which spent $11,000,000,000 last year, you will not have any little business back home to look after.

I repeat, we cannot have antiquated minds looking after America. Gold braid does not make a soldier. We have here in America the best inventive minds in the world, the greatest genius for doing things, but we simply have not been utilizing the minds or the genius. The mind of a Billy Mitchell would have sought out ways of stopping these land dreadnaughts, not according to military rules but by the use of mechanical, explosive, or electrical force. He was no "rut-ist." He was an experimenter, an adventurer, an explorer. He sank ships with bombs, And then the gold-braid fellows who had control of the forces of America—air, naval, and Army—forgot his experiment.

Of course he was not a West Pointer, but he was the son of a United States Senator from Wisconsin, a Spanish War veteran, a veteran of the Philippine Insurrection, and the chief of the United States flyers at the front in 1917. He was not a swivel-chair soldier.

He had the Distinguished Service Medal, the Croix de Guerre with five palms, and other great medals, and was made a commander of the Legion of Honor.

Mr. President, my remarks today—and I am about to conclude—have a twofold purpose. First, I want to put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this tribute to one of Wisconsin's greatest sons and one of America's greatest soldiers.

Second, I am hoping that these remarks will make a contribution to arouse those, who have charge of our military, naval, and air forces to take stock of them, and see that antiquated tactics, red-tape methods, caste controls, are done away with.

I am hoping that the crusading spirit of Billy Mitchell will enter our great military, naval, and air establishments. I pray God that his spirit is there to enliven, to give vision to the men who hold in their palms the safety of our America. I am hoping also that as a result partially of these remarks the subordinates in the ranks, the men of ideas, will be given an opportunity to express them, to "sell" them, to demonstrate them. I am hoping also that the establishments of the Army and the air and the Navy will not be so hide-bound that they will fail to reach out for ideas that will help this country, no matter where those ideas come from.

Why should not a farmer, ploughing in his field, be the originator, if you please, of some great defense idea? Edison was told by his teacher that he was so dumb that there was no hope for him. He never went to West Point or Annapolis, but there was something about him that made him the greatest genius of his time. So I repeat, I hope that those who have charge of the Army and the Navy and the air force will be on the receiving line to get ideas that are ready to be discovered. Damn the ostrich mind! I am also hoping that this Government will create an independent experimental laboratory to supplement the activities of our three great forces of defense. In this laboratory, ideas can be tried out and new forces can be discovered.

America must be made safe. The spirit of Wisconsin's Billy Mitchell speaks this command to all of us.

EXHIBIT A

[From the Milwaukee Journal of May 24, 1940]

AIR WAR A VINDICATION OF GENERAL MITCHELL—15 YEARS AGO FIGHTING HEAD OF A. E. F. FLIERS FORETOLD HOW NEXT CONFLICT WOULD BE FOUGHT AND WARNED THAT MASTERY OF SKIES MIGHT MEAN MASTERY OF WORLD

The brass hats kicked Milwaukee's "Billy" Mitchell out of the Army for shouting from the housetops in favor of such an Air Service as the United States at last is to have. It took the crash of Nazi lightning in the Low Countries and northern France to awaken America's war lords, who were merely annoyed and angered by the warning voice of General Mitchell. Fifteen years after the military chiefs hung Billy Mitchell's scalp on their totem pole, 4 years after his death, the President laid before the country a plan for an air corps of 50,000 planes, and a few days later Congress moved to provide the first unit of 16,000 ships in that mighty air fleet—a greater force than Mitchell ever visioned.

Even after Norway, diehards of the military clique that sent Mitchell to Coventry were only mildly interested in expanding the Nation's air defenses. They still were beating the tom-toms for a bigger Navy of bigger ships, which would require years to build and which, even as far back as 1921, General Mitchell insisted would be impotent under attacks from the air.

When the devastating "blitzkrieg" struck, Allied defenses crumbled under the smashing attacks of wave upon wave of German airplanes. Allied troops melted under the blistering fire of machine guns and cannon and bombs from the air. All that was left for the ground troops was to mop up in the wake of the hurricane. The importance of air supremacy in modern warfare had been proven in a way to convince even the most mossbacked Tory of the Army and Navy club.

Fifteen years ago General Mitchell wrote in his book, Winged Defense: "Neither armies nor navies can exist unless the air is controlled over them. Air forces, on the other hand, are the only independent fighting units of the day.

"A new set of rules for the conduct of war will have to be devised and a whole new set of ideas of strategy learned by those charged with the conduct of war. No longer is the making of war gaged merely by land and naval forces. The air force has ceased to be a mere auxiliary service for the purpose of assisting an army or navy in the execution of its task. No missile-throwing weapons or any other devices have yet been created or thought of which can actually stop an air attack. The only defenses against aircraft are other aircraft which will contest the supremacy of the air by air battles. Great contests for control of the air will be the rule in the future. Once supremacy of the air has been established, airplanes can fly over hostile country at will.

"If a nation ambitious for universal conquest gets off to a 'flying start' in a war of the future, it may be able to control the whole world more easily than a nation has controlled a continent in the past.

"In the former conception of national defense the principle was held that to invade a nation the piercing of its lines of resistance was necessary. If the nation lay across the sea, its lines of battleships had to be pierced, destroyed, and overcome to gain access to the shores. Again, the line of the armies had to be pierced to gain access to the interior. This condition no longer exists in its entirety and is decreasing relatively every day. Aircraft do not need to pierce the line of either navies or armies. They can fly straight over them to the heart of a country and gain success in war.

"The missions of armies and navies are very greatly changed from what they were. No longer will the tedious and expensive processes of wearing down the enemy's land forces by continuous attacks be resorted to. The air forces will strike immediately at the enemy's manufacturing and food centers, railways, bridges, canals, and harbors. The losing side will have to accept without question the dominating conditions of its adversary, as he will stop entirely the manufacture of aircraft by the vanquished.

"Surface navies have entirely lost their mission of defending a coast because aircraft can destroy or sink any seacraft coming within their radius of operation. In fact, aircraft today are the only effective means of coast protection. Consequently, navies have been pushed out on the high seas. The menace of submarines from below and aircraft from above constitutes such a condition that the surface ship as an element of war is disappearing."

Those were the ideas that sent General Mitchell to the dog house, the ideas he held as an acting brigadier general and Assistant Chief of the United States Air Service under a nonflying chief. His 4-year appointment was not renewed, and in June 1925 he was sent to Texas in his permanent rank of colonel.

For 4 years the Army and Navy clique had been after his scalp. From the time of his return after the World War, Billy Mitchell had been getting in the hair of the generals and admirals with his criticism of what he considered the obsolescent concepts of war held by the older services.

"Nations nearly always go into an armed contest with the equipment and methods of a former war," he wrote. "Victory always comes to that country which has made a proper estimate of the equipment and methods that can be used in modern ways."

The real fireworks in the controversy started in the fall of 1920, when Mitchell told Congress that "we could destroy, put out of commission, and sink any battleship in existence or any that could be built." The admirals rushed to the defense of their babies. The Secretary of the Navy announced that he was willing to stand on the bridge of the ship while it was bombed. Congress, however, authorized the President to designate warships to be used as targets for the Air Service experiments.

Several German vessels had been turned over to the United States after the war under the condition that they should be destroyed within a certain time. The Navy was ordered to give the Air Service a chance to try out its bombs on some of them. It assigned a submarine, a destroyer, a cruiser, and a dreadnaught. The latter, specially designed, was considered by naval authorities the world over to be "unsinkable."

The tests started on June 21, 1921, when three lumbering old flying boats of the naval air service flew over the submarine, dropped only nine 180-pound bombs and split the sub in two. General Mitchell, who personally directed the demonstrations, gave his entire brigade a shot at the destroyer, starting out with pursuit ships dropping 50-pound bombs and ending with the heavy bombers' 300-pound charges, one blast of which sent the destroyer to the bottom. Against the cruiser, 100-pound, 300-pound, and 600-pound bombs were used, and against the "unsinkable" dreadnought 1,100- and 2,000-pounders. The tests were spread out over more than a month, efforts being made to keep the more heavily armored vessels afloat as long as possible without destroying the purpose of the demonstration, which was to prove that airplanes could sink battleships. At the end, all four of the targets were on the bottom of the sea.

General Mitchell's men flew ships with speeds of little more than 100 miles an hour and able to carry little more gasoline than was needed to make the round trip from shore base to target. They were dropping bombs little different from the ones used in the World War, which had ended only 3 years before. Their bombsights, while much improved over those of the World War, were far inferior to those being used in Europe today and were primitive compared to the accomplishments claimed for the secret new bomb sight of the United States Air Corps. And yet the demonstration was a complete success in the eyes of everyone but the admirals. It merely strengthened their furious determination to quiet this upstart, a purpose in which they found considerable support among Army bigwigs.

One reason for that, of course, was that Billy Mitchell was not a West Pointer. He was an 18-year-old freshman in George Washington University at Washington, D. C., where his father was a Senator from Wisconsin, when the Spanish-American War started. Billy Mitchell enlisted in Company M of the First Wisconsin Infantry in May 1898. He was a lieutenant before his company reached Cuba.

He served in the Philippines during the insurrection, went back to school long enough to get his degree, and then returned to the Army. After many notable accomplishments, he learned to fly in 1914, and as a major was sent to France the same year as a United States military observer.

When the United States entered the war in 1917, Mitchell was promoted to colonel, helped Gen. Mason M. Patrick build up a United States air service at the front, and later, as a brigadier general, became chief of all United States flyers at the front.

Mitchell was no swivel-chair general. He flew constantly over the front, won the Distinguished Service Cross for repeated acts of extraordinary heroism in action, a second time for bravery beyond that required by his position as chief of air service. He won also the Distinguished Service Medal, Croix de Guerre with five palms, Commander of the Legion of Honor (French), Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George (British), Commendatore S. S. Maurizio e Lazzaro, medal for merit, and Grand Officer of Italy.

It was lessons that he learned at the front that started General Mitchell on his crusade for a powerful, unified, and independent air service when he got back to the United States. And it was his insistence on independence for this war-proven third arm of the Nation's fighting forces, added to his showing up the vulnerability of their battleships, that added the final fuel to the flame of the admirals' and generals' wrath. They might not think much of the Air Service, but they wanted what there was of it for their own. If it had not been for the faith of General Pershing in his flying general, Mitchell's hide would have been tacked to the Army and Navy Club door long before it was. As long as Pershing was Chief of Staff, "General" Mitchell was safe. But the time came when Pershing was no longer in position to protect him, and "Colonel" Mitchell was on his way to Texas.

Mitchell was in exile, but his voice gained strength in the Texas air. He had been there only a short while when the tragic wreck of the dirigible Shenandoah and other naval aviation disasters elicited a real blast from him. It was that famous long statement in which he included the charge: "These accidents are the direct result of the incompetency, criminal negligence, and almost treasonable administration of the national defense by the Navy and War Departments."

Colonel Mitchell expected court martial after his article was published, and he got it. But he also got his ideas before the country. Convicted, he was suspended from the Army for 5 years without rank and without pay. President Coolidge tempered the sentence by permitting him to retain his rank and allowing him half pay. Mitchell chose to resign from the Army. But as gentleman farmer in Virginia he kept up the fight.

"The bodies of former companions and buddies molder under the soil in America, Asia, Europe, and Africa, many, yes many, sent there directly by official stupidity. We would not be keeping our trust with our departed comrades were we longer to conceal these facts."

Up to the time of his death Mitchell kept the faith, crusading for a stronger air force. As late as 5 years ago, a year before his death, he wrote on The Next War in the Air, and said an enemy air force could operate from an Alaskan base, quickly attack a triangle bounded by New York, Chicago, and Washington, put seven transcontinental railroads out of commission, destroy reservoirs, and disrupt power plants.

Two or three air cruisers, he said, attacking each of seven cities in the triangle, would make 20,000,000 persons homeless.

All of Mitchell's ideas have not been realized, but many of them have. His faith in the airplane in warfare has been tragically proven justified. The United States at long last is building the world's greatest air force. Nonfliers have been eliminated from command over fliers. All Naval Academy graduates who can pass the physical examination are instructed in flying, and only 9 of the almost 3,000 officers of the Army Air Corps are not fliers. But the United States does not yet have a unified and independent air corps similar to those of Germany, England, and France.

CLIFFORD F. BUTCHER.

During the delivery of Mr. WILEY's speech,

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President——

Mr. WILEY. I now yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I should like to thank the able Senator from Wisconsin for his statement concerning the able and brilliant General Mitchell. He was my personal friend and collaborated with me in drafting the first bill introduced in Congress providing for a department of the air service. I introduced this bill on February 28, 1919. With the permission of the Senate, I now send to the desk and ask to have printed in the RECORD a bill which I have prepared proposing to pay to the family of Brigadier General Mitchell the salary to which he was entitled and from which he was deprived by reason of being court martialed by a lot of brass hats and little two-by-four small potato nubbins, small men who never deserved even to be considered or mentioned in the same breath with the great general. I should like also to have printed in the RECORD a statement by the distinguished aviator, Maj. Al Williams. I thank the able Senator from Wisconsin.

The President pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 4168) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the widow of Brig. Gen. William Lendrum Mitchell the amounts of Army pay and allowances of which he was deprived as a result of his conviction by a court martial in 1925 was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The statement presented by Mr. LUNDEEN is as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News of June 12, 1940]

CONGRESS SHOULD RESTORE BILLY MITCHELL'S RANK

(By Maj. Al Williams)

It was a sunny afternoon at Bolling Air Field. A charming, dignified woman was leading her son from one Army plane to another.

BILLY MITCHELL, JR.

The boy—keen-eyed, straight-standing—would tarry. He nad to have answers to his questions about these sleek fighting ships. With patient enthusiasm the mother followed his gestures, as if she knew why the lad would not be satisfied with childish answers.

Enlisted mechanics passed to and fro, many of them youngsters, fresh from training schools, others grizzled old-timers. Now and again, they looked at the mother and son—and smiled. They knew the questions children ask about planes. Pilots were arriving and departing—and many of them, too, were very young.

A major and a lieutenant passed down the "line" of ships. Glancing at the mother and son, the major stopped short, turned quickly, left his companion, and strode toward the visitors. Saluting smartly, he said, "Pardon me, Madam, but aren't you Mrs. Mitchell?"

"Yes," came the reply. "Rather, I was the wife of Gen. Billy Mitchell."

The major's eyes brightened.

"I thought so," he said, "I served under the general in France, in Washington, and in the bombing off the Virginia Capes. And who is this young man?"

A warm smile lit the mother's face, and she answered simply, "This is Billy Mitchell."

The son of the "Stormy Petrel"! The son of the first flying general ranking officer of the United States. The son of that idol of every true flying man, who sacrificed everything in an effort to give the United States just what it needs so urgently today—air power. The son of that Billy Mitchell who defied, with words and burning truths, the traditions of the old Army and Navy—the same traditions that the flying legions of Germany are now destroying.

"STORMY PETREL"

Years ahead of his time, General Mitchell fell before the political machinations of the men of little vision who saw service prestige instead of American air power. He flew fearlessly at the head of his fighting formations—never to be imitated to this day by any ranking officer of the wingless breed who bitterly envied him and who maneuvered the court martial of the gallant flying general. Billy Mitchell flew fighting and racing planes, while they flew training planes for flight pay.

UNITED STATES DEBT TO GENERAL MITCHELL

The United States owes a great debt to General Mitchell. He did his part, and more, though we let our bureaucrats offer him the choice between resignation or discharge from the Army. If only he had been heeded we would have had the air power that Hitler owns today.

Is it not the duty of Congress to restore General Mitchell's name, full rank, to the Army files and present a medal of public appreciation to the son of the "Stormy Petrel"? Billy Mitchell, Sr., has passed on. His spirit and his name live in Billy, Jr. The public, not knowing that General Mitchell died in 1936, is flooding his home with mail, congratulating him on the vindication of all he said; so much of this mail that it has to be delivered in trucks.

In the name of America, Mr. President and Congress, move quickly to do official justice to the indomitable spirit that lives on in every real airman—and in his son.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, may I ask that the interruption and matters presented by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota may appear in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Yes; I should like to have that done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

After the conclusion of the Senator from Wisconsin's [Mr. WILEY'S] speech,

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have listened with interest to the forceful and eloquent address of the Senator from Wisconsin, and I am happy to asscciate myself with him in paying tribute to a great American—Gen. William L. Mitchell. He, like others who have been pioneers in new fields, was misunderstood and, many believed, unjustly treated by his Government. He served with distinction in the military arm of our Government and was recognized as a man of courage and ability. However, like many great men, he encountered opposition and was thwarted in his efforts to develop a most important branch of national defense.

Without being critical, I feel constrained to say that in all branches of the Government and, for that matter, in the field of private endeavor, too many persons and groups belong to the cult of the status quo—those who are not sensitive to the progressive forces operating throughout the world. In the military branch of the Government we have discovered that there has been inertia and a rather slavish devotion to the past. Perhaps it is human nature to resist changes and to look with distrust upon policies or measures which are not in harmony with the past.

The world is not static, but dynamic. It is true civilizations rise and fall and evolutionary progress is checked and retrogressive moments developed. The triumphs of yesterday do not prescribe limitations which should arrest further progress and greater triumphs. It is true that the pages of history record retrogression and periods of intellectual darkness—periods of inertia—indeed, of retrogression—but out of the darkness emerges light; there is a renaissance and the encumbrances that have retarded progress are cast aside. In the military field there have been periods of inertia, and military leaders have been controlled by old-fashioned and, indeed, reactionary policies as a result of which they were unable to meet new developments and methods of warfare.

History records the defeat of armies and naval forces because of newer methods and techniques in the field of warfare. That fact is emphasized in the present European conflict. Mechanized armies win against the bravest military forces who oppose with weapons of yesterday. The submarine and the airplane have wrought mighty changes in the field of war. There was opposition to the development of the submarine as there was to the development and utilization of the airplane for military purposes.

For a number of years the importance of the submarine was not appreciated, and too much reliance was placed upon huge battleships and battle cruisers. Those in charge of military and naval operations in our own as well as in other countries, looked with unconcern if not suspicion upon the airplane. This new force or agency was regarded with unconcern, and there was opposition to the development of airplanes as an important part of military defense. Germany has demonstrated that the bombing plane and other aircraft are most important if not vital factors in all military operations both upon land and upon the sea. The success of the Nazi operations, upon land and sea have been largely due to the great development of the airplane.

It has been my opinion for several years that we were too indifferent to this new factor in the field of war. I was a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate for a number of years immediately following the World War, and I became convinced of the vital necessity of developing aviation and of constructing submarines. I reached the conclusion that there should be greater coordination of both the military and naval forces; that there should be a Department of National Defense under the control and direction of a Secretary of Defense, appointed by the President.

Bills which I offered in the Senate provided that in the Department of Defense there should be three secretaries known as the Assistant Secretary for the Army, the Assistant Secretary for the Navy, and the Assistant Secretary for the Air Force. I believed in the coordination of the various agencies of the Government connected with the national defense of our country, and I particularly emphasized the importance of the functions of the Secretary of the Air Force, and urged the development of a powerful and effective air force to operate both upon land and sea.

I became acquainted with General Mitchell when I was a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and my interest in aviation and the development of a powerful air force for national defense was intensified by reason of his enthusiasm and earnestness for the adoption of measures that would make for the protection of our country. I believed that he was not understood or appreciated by the country, which he so gallantly served, and I was critical of the opposition which he encountered from those in military and naval circles who should have given him support in the fight which he was making for the development of an adequate air force.

It seemed to me that those in the Army and in the Navy Departments of our Government were rather reactionary and too indifferent to the lessons of the World War and particularly to the importance which aviation and the submarine would play in modern warfare.

I recall an occasion when arrangements were made to demonstrate the importance of airplanes in military and naval operations. A ship was anchored, as I recall, off the coast of Virginia and a bomb was discharged from an airplane and the effect upon the vessel was very great and furnished convincing proof of the vulnerability of ships when attacked from the skies by airplanes. But General Mitchell was criticized, and in my opinion, unfairly dealt with because of his insistence that our Government should take cognizance of this new force imperatively required for national defense. He, like many other pioneers, met opposition and suffered at the hands of those who should have applauded him and given support to him in the development of a vital and important branch of the military service of our country. I am sure that his service to his country is receiving due recognition.

CREDIT RESOURCES OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3998) to increase the credit resources of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, communicated to the Senate the resolutions of the House unanimously adopted as a tribute to the memory of Hon. Ernest W. Gibson, late a Senator from the State of Vermont.

The message announced that the Speaker had appointed the following committee on the part of the House of Representatives, acting in conjunction with the committee appointed on the part of the Senate, to attend the funeral of the deceased Senator: Mr. PLUMLEY and Mr. PITTENGER.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 6328. An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by section 34 (c) of the Customs Administrative Act of 1938 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV., title 19, sec. 1001, par. 1529 (a));

H. R. 9654. An act to extend for an additional year the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937 and the taxes with respect to sugar; and

H. R. 9765. An act to provide for exercising the right with respect to red-cedar shingles reserved in the trade agreement concluded November 17, 1938, between the United States of America and Canada, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 1827. An act to allow moving expenses to employees in the Railway Mail Service;

H. R. 5982. An act for the protection against unlawful use of the badge, medal, emblem, or other insignia of veterans' organizations incorporated by act of Congress, and providing penalties for the violation thereof;

H. R. 8668. An act making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9958. An act to authorize the purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of stock of Federal home-loan banks; to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended; and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Finance:

H. R. 6328. An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by section 34 (c) of the Customs Administrative Act of 1938 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 19, sec. 1001, par. 1529 (a));

H. R. 9654. An act to extend for an additional year the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937 and the taxes with respect to sugar; and

H. R. 9765. An act to provide for exercising the right with respect to red-cedar shingles reserved in the trade agreement concluded November 17, 1938, between the United States of America and Canada, and for other purposes.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS AND A JOINT RESOLUTION

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the following bills and joint resolution:

On June 19, 1940:

S. 2013. An act to amend the Code of the District of Columbia to provide for the organization and regulation of cooperative associations, and for other purposes.

On June 20, 1940:

S. 163. An act directing the Secretary of the Interior to issue to Albert W. Gabbey a patent to certain lands in the State of Wyoming;

S. 1326. An act for the relief of Janet Hendel, nee Judith Shapiro;

S. 1328. An act for the relief of Lena Hendel, nee Lena Goldberg;

S. 2598. An act for the relief of Kurt Wessely;

S. 3196. An act to amend the act approved May 24, 1938, entitled "An act for the relief of the Comision Mixta Demarcadora de Limites Entre Colombia y Panama" and for the relief of Jose Antonio Sossa D;

S. 3245. An act for the relief of Maria Teresa Valdes Thompson;

S. 4026. An act providing for the reorganization of the Navy Department, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 214. Joint resolution authorizing the recognition of the two hundredth anniversary of the founding of the University of Pennsylvania by Benjamin Franklin and the beginning of university education in the United States, and providing for the representation of the Government and people of the United States in the observance of the anniversary.

REPORTS OF THE FINANCE COMMITTEE

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6328) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by section 34 (c) of the Customs Administrative Act of 1938 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 19, sec. 1001, par. 1529 (a)), reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1913) thereon.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9765) to provide for exercising the right with respect to red-cedar shingles reserved in the trade agreement concluded November 17, 1938, between the United States of America and Canada, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1932) thereon.

EXPEDITION OF NAVAL SHIPBUILDING

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Automatically, the calendar under rule VIII comes before the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9822, which is a bill to expedite the national defense.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 9822) to expedite naval shipbuilding, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, with amendments.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest that the chairman of the committee make an explanation of the bill, so that we may know its terms and its implications.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the bill is an exceedingly important measure. It is perhaps the most important and far-sweeping bill that has been presented to the Congress at this session or any other session since the World War. The very name of the bill suggests its importance, "To expedite national defense." The bill in general either repeals or modifies or changes practically every restriction upon which the Congress through the years has legislated, for the purpose of safeguarding the Public Treasury by requiring competitive bidding upon contracts made with the Government.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, may we have order in the Chamber?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order. An important matter is being discussed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the bill primarily modifies or repeals all those safeguards which we have set up for the purpose of protecting the Public Treasury in the expenditure of vast sums of money. It is for the purpose of expediting the building of naval vessels, and the building of the necessary aircraft for our defense, in order that with the greatest possible expedition our Navy should be enlarged, and, so far as vessels under contract are being built, this bill would provide for their completion earlier than the dates called for in the contracts.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. A question occurs to me, Is it possible to protect our Navy and our Army and our air forces so that they will not be transferred to some other power? I wish to call attention to just a short sentence I uttered 2 days ago and a news report which has just come in from Europe. Two days ago I stated:

> Anything that we sent to France a short time ago is Hitler's today. And when you saw the picture in the Star the other night showing thousands of 75-millimeter guns on the decks of a 30,000-ton French liner going over to England with our artillery—I take it, practically all our 75's—I have no assurance that that artillery will not be Hitler's in a very short time.

Now let me read the last news dispatch which has just been placed on my desk—this is a bulletin from the Times-Herald of Washington, D. C.:

> TWENTY THOUSAND UNITED STATES MOTORS REPORTED CAPTURED
> NEW YORK, June 21.—A Rome radio broadcast picked up in New York by Columbia Broadcasting System said today the official German News Agency, D. N. B., reported German forces "captured 400 planes which had just arrived from America and 20,000 motors, complete with plans for mounting." The broadcast said the D. N. B. dispatch came "from the front."

I certainly hope that is not correct. I hope it is a false report. If it is true, we are now engaged in arming Mr. Hitler. We sent these war munitions and war materials over there to France, and I opposed that policy. Our defenses belong to America and not to Europe. I cannot find it in my heart to vote the money of the taxpayers of the United States to build more ships, arms, and war material, and immediately transfer them to foreign flags; turn them over to Europe. We have had wars with several European powers. Why send any of them our arms and ammunition, ships, or air fleets? Where is there any Americanism in that?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield at that point?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I merely wanted to say that I read the same story the Senator from Minnesota has read, and in two other papers the number of engines was given as 2,000. I think "20,000" is probably a misprint, but the principle for which the Senator is contending would be the same. I do not believe there are 20,000 American airplane engines abroad yet, because I do not believe there have been that many in the country, but I do think the 2,000 figure is probably accurate, and for whatever the correction is worth, I thought I might suggest it to the Senator.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I thank the able Senator for that possible correction, and let us hope the number is 2,000. But let those of us who are on the ramparts of the Nation guarding this America—our America, our country, our native land—protect our Navy and our Army and air force from being dispersed over the earth.

Our duty is not to arm any European nation against any other European nation—that is not our duty. Our duty is to America, our own people, our own economy, our unemployed, our own domestic problems. That is our duty. In a word, Mr. President, our duty is to keep America strong over here—here in the mighty Western Hemisphere.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think the Senator will be satisfied when the bill is explained in detail, together with the amendments offered, that the Committee on Naval Affairs has inserted in the bill every conceivable precaution against the limitation or reduction in size of our Navy. I cannot answer for the Army. The committee of which the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], and the other gentlemen of the committee have spent 2 to 3 weeks, day and night, endeavoring not to restrict the extraordinary and unusual powers proposed to be granted, because we feel the necessity for them; but to put every possible safeguard into the bill and see that the taxpayers are not obliged to pay more than is absolutely necessary, and to see that there is not in the future any attempt made to lessen our defenses so far as the Navy is concerned.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the whole Senate and the country have very profound respect for the viewpoint of the able Senator from Massachusetts with respect to any subject touching upon naval defense. He has earned that position of authority in public opinion. Before the Senator leaves the point raised by the able Senator from Minnesota I wish to submit this question to him: It seems to me that I read in the paper a few days ago a very thrillingly vigorous denunciation by the able Senator from Massachusetts against the dissipation of our new fighting facilities through transfer to others, and since the question has arisen, even though it is not directly related to the bill, I am wondering whether the Senator would be willing to say here what I think he has said elsewhere as to his viewpoint upon this fundamental matter in respect to any hope we may have of building our nucleus into an adequate defense.

Mr. WALSH. I feel it my duty, if the Senate so desires, to answer the Senator's inquiry fully and somewhat in detail.

During the consideration of the pending and other naval bills the able Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] sought repeatedly to get information in reference to the disposition by the Navy and by the Army of Government-owned aircraft. We found upon inquiry that the Navy had not disposed of any of its contracted-for aircraft, except in one instance, namely, to Finland. I am speaking now of information which we had up to about a month ago. Additional information became known a few days ago.

We did learn that there had been a much larger and much more extensive canceling of deliveries of contracts for aircraft to the Army. The planes which were needed in Europe by the Allies had been more largely land planes or Army planes than Navy planes, so it did not appear in the beginning to be so much of a Navy problem.

Last Thursday afternoon the able Senator from California, in the presence of a naval officer, inquired about the rumor that destroyers in our Navy were being transferred, or that negotiations were under way for the transfer of these naval vessels. We were informed by the officer of the Navy who was present, and to whom the inquiry had been directed, that nothing had been done in the way of releasing destroyers.

Thereupon I and other members of the committee—among whom was the distinguished and able Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who has been a tower of strength to me in the committee in this whole matter—decided by vote to make inquiry of the President as to just what property of the Navy, surplus property or other property, had been disposed of.

There was present in the room a naval officer when this executive vote was taken. The next morning, before any letter could be transmitted or information given, I was called on the telephone by the Acting Secretary of the Navy and informed that 11 motor torpedo boats and 12 motor submarine chasers, making a total of 23 vessels, had been disposed of. It is needless to say that I was shocked. It was the first intimation that had come to me or any member of my committee about this matter. I called up the chairman of the House committee and asked if he had any information, and he said he had not heard about it.

Thereupon I called the committee together and sent for the naval officer who was in the room the day before, and also for the Acting Secretary of the Navy, and the committee catechized them at length as to what property of the Navy had been disposed of, and also what contracts for speeding up the building of naval vessels or for the building of aircraft had been modified or changed so as to release these vessels and airplanes to the Allies.

We then learned for the first time that for 3 months negotiations had been going on for the transfer or release of naval property of one kind or another—and I will speak more in detail of the property—of which no Member of the Congress had the slightest information or knowledge.

We learned that the negotiations began with the release about 3 months ago of a contract with the Du Pont Powder Co. for powder for the Navy. We inquired from the Navy if they could afford to release that powder, and they said they could. They said they had a powder plant of their own now in operation, and that plant was producing sufficient powder for our naval uses.

The able Senator from Maryland made inquires as to the situation of the Army with respect to powder, and I shall now pause to have him state what he understood to be the situation with regard to powder in the Army.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Massachusetts is covering the whole thing much better than I can. The Navy has a different kind of powder than the Army has. The naval powder plant is at Indianhead, Md. The Navy requires less powder than the Army does, and there is sufficient powder on hand and available and in the process of manufacture to take care of present and future needs of the Navy.

With respect to powder in the Army, the situation is not so favorable. We have had very few powder plants in operation in this country since the World War. A large powder concern wanted to close down one of its powder plants because it was losing in the neighborhood of $300,000 a year in the manufacture of powder, but the Ordnance Department of the Army appealed to the company to keep this plant open, and the plant has been kept open, at a considerable financial loss. These figures are accurate, I may say, and are given to me by the Ordnance Department. So we have some Army powder available, but there is a shortage of powder among the Allies and in the United States. I understand the Allies are building powder plants of their own to supply that deficiency, and, under a bill brought in from the Committee on Appropriations the other day, our own powder plants will be enlarged, I think, by an appropriation of $34,000,000.

The truth is that we will not have enough powder to equip and sustain a million soldiers for 14 months. That is the situation with respect to the Army, but the Navy is pretty well equipped with powder.

I have no hesitancy in making that statement publicly on the floor because I asked the Army authorities if our lack of powder was pretty well known to foreign countries, and I was told that they knew as much about it as we did. So I do not feel that I have done anyone an injury by showing the pitiful condition of our powder supply at this time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, we inquired about what material other than powder had been disposed of, and we found that various items of surplus naval material had been disposed of. Perhaps the law operates very well in normal peacetimes, but unfortunately there is a law which permits the Navy to transfer property to the Army, and there is probably a similar law which permits the Army to transfer to the Navy property that it may use. So some property has been transferred from the Navy to the Army, and later from the Army transferred elsewhere.

The next step was to learn that there had been 50 naval planes which were really in use by the Navy sold or turned in for new planes to manufacturers, who in turn were to sell them to the Allies, under an agreement or contract with the Navy Department that other planes with the latest improvements at a later date would be delivered back to the Navy. From my inquiry I learned that there was no loss financially to the Government in that transaction, but I assume—I do not know that I should assume it, but apparently the contractor or manufacturer of airplanes sold them to some foreign government, at what price I do not know, but he is bound to return an equal number to our Government, without additional cost, or just a normal amount——

Mr. TYDINGS. Ten dollars.

Mr. WALSH. Ten dollars. The value of those planes I found out from the Navy Department to be as follows:

Aircraft transferred on exchange basis:

Forty-nine SBC–4 airplanes, complete, valued at $2,281,163.19.

Ten R–1820–34 spare engines, $82,558.10.

Eleven spare propellers for SBC–4 airplanes, structural spares, $254,031.60.

A total of $3,141,104.25.

In answer to another question as to what the initial cost of the 50 airplanes was, I received these figures:

Five at $39,546.90.

Twenty-three at $46,850.79.

Twenty-two at $47,892.12.

The difference is due to the fact that the airplanes were purchased under three contracts, one considerably earlier than the others.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. While it may be true that there is no financial loss involved to the Government in this transfer, there is a considerable loss of time, is there not, involved in the matter of the planes being replaced?

Mr. WALSH. The committee inquired with respect to that, and the answer was that there would be at least 6 months' delay, extending to 9 months.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So if a situation were to arise in South America, or Central America, or at the Panama Canal in which we needed those planes, we would be strictly out of luck for the period within which they could not be replaced; is that not true?

Mr. WALSH. One of the reasons why I protested this matter and others was the matter of secrecy; not that it had been surreptitious, as it has been stated in the press, but because of secrecy. Second, because of the inconsistency of our asking the contractors to speed up their manufacture of planes when contracts for planes were being canceled and delays brought about accordingly. It is only fair to say that the Navy officials very strenuously insist that in the end we shall get better planes as a result of this deal, and that there will be more modern improvements. I wish to be fair about this and present their viewpoint. I think I ought to say that since this matter has become public there is a universal feeling—and I am pleased to note it, even in the Navy—that it was a mistake not to inform the committees, at least, of these transfers or changes in naval contracts.

With respect to airplanes, I ought to say that the information was given to the public, and was in the press, so it was not given at any time to our committee. I think I am correct in that statement.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. The press had carried a story about 50 planes. So far as I know, they were the only property actually in our possession, which we were using, and for which we had pilots, which was released. Is not that correct?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I shall be glad to yield in a moment.

With respect to the other properties which I shall discuss, there were changes in contracts, postponing the time of delivery, in order that the Allies might be helped.

Let me say that so far as I am concerned I have no objection whatever to private industries in this country, or persons of great wealth, giving their money and their goods and doing everything possible to help the Allies win the war; but my concern is, how far can our Government go in permitting war materials to go to the Allies without impairing its own defenses? I do not know of any better expression to use than one used recently in a letter to me:

> Who ever heard of a defenseless country having war surpluses?

I think that expression covers the situation. If we are fully equipped, if we have plenty of material, we may then take some action, with the full approval of Congress, to help the Allies.

I now yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I know the Senator would want this bit of information inserted in the RECORD, with the very cogent explanation he has made as to what the Navy offered as reasons why the planes should be turned in, in order that nothing may be withheld from the Congress. Without attempting to defend the Navy Department, I should like to have the Congress know that the Navy Department officials stated that when they set up schools for the more rapid training of additional aviation personnel they had no one to fly these particular planes, because the men who had flown them had been taken as instructors in the new air school, and that therefore, as the planes were not being used at all, it seemed a good time to turn them in and obtain new and improved planes, inasmuch as it is the policy of the Navy Department to keep modernizing its planes all the time.

That was the reason given to the committee. I do not say that it is a good or bad reason. I simply offer it to supplement the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. That was not the earlier reason given.

Mr. TYDINGS. That was the last reason.

Mr. WALSH. That was the reason given yesterday. It escaped my mind.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That alibi certainly is not advanced with regard to the sale of the latest type of naval vessels, is it?

Mr. TYDINGS. I merely wanted to clear up the matter about the planes first.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand; but the Navy Department itself does not advance that alibi with regard to the very latest type of naval vessels, which have not yet even been delivered to the United States Government.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. While the Senator is on the subject of the 50 naval planes, let me call attention to the fact that when the committee held hearings on this particular bill some 2 weeks ago a highly placed naval officer testified, if I correctly recall, that there was no plan or intention on the part of the Navy to make a transfer of the kind which has just taken place. Day before yesterday the same officer, in response to our inquiry as to why the transfer had taken place, informed us that he had been requested by a higher authority to make a survey of property with a view to a transaction of this kind, if the property could be spared.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. When the able Senator speaks of 6 months and 9 months, I assume he is speaking on the basis of information furnished the committee. I have taken the precaution to talk with some of our greatest experts in aviation. I have personally talked with Maj. Al Williams and others on the matter, and they tell me that these planes and other planes which we have transferred are the latest and best planes and bombers we have, and that they probably cannot be replaced within 18 months. That is not protecting our country. The Naval Affairs Committee is not to be blamed, but someone must take the responsibility for giving away our defenses. Someone in high position is surely to blame. The press gives the impression that Secretary of War Woodring has vigorously protested this policy. If this be true, he deserves great credit in sacrificing his position for his conviction.

Mr. WALSH. I did not get the impression that they were the latest and most modern planes. Representative MAAS of the House, who is a reserve officer in the Marine Corps, says they are the latest and most modern bombing planes we have in the Navy. The Senator is correct in the statement that 18 months are required to build a bombing plane, which is one of the most expensive and valuable types of planes. I obtained the impression—although I do not think we went into the details of just how valuable the planes were—that the Navy did not consider them the most valuable, or necessarily the most important military planes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. As a matter of fact, the officers told the committee that in the course of time, war or no war, the planes would be turned in in exchange for more modern planes; and that inasmuch as they had nobody to fly them, there could be no better time to turn them in than right now. I, of course have not checked up on that statement.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, let us come now to the next important item about which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] inquired—the 23 naval vessels. The press has had much to say about them, emphasizing my own indignation and that of the committee of the attempt to surrender them.

On a certain afternoon last week we had before us a naval officer. We talked about destroyers, and he vehemently said that the Navy would never give up its destroyers; that we would not be equipped for war for two years, and that the Navy would not approve of such action. We complimented him, and said, "That is a fine spirit, and we are glad to know of it." He remained silent as to anything else. He was not asked any questions about anything else. But the next morning he reported to his superiors that the committee was uneasy about transfers of naval property and supplies of one kind and another, and that he thought the Department ought to report to the committee in reference to the mosquito-fleet vessels.

The next morning I received a call from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Compton, in which he informed me that the day before the Navy had modified its contracts with the shipbuilding company at New Jersey, so that the 23 vessels, when completed—the first one being completed in about 2 months—could be delivered to the Allies, and that our Government would delay acceptance or delivery to it of the 23 vessels.

The committee sent for The Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and also the naval officer referred to, and we catechized them in reference to the whole matter. We then for the first time discovered that negotiations for transferring material had been going on for 3 months. Negotiations for the mosquito fleet had been in progress for 3 weeks, and we felt that it was only by the merest accident that we had made the inquiry the night before and had received this information. I think it is only fair to say that the officers of the Navy did not give to these vessels the importance and value given to them by some members of the committee.

There is a rather interesting history in that connection. It will be recalled that during the Ethiopian War it was discovered by the British Navy that Italy had a large number of small, fast-moving boats, which could speed over the water rapidly, fire a torpedo, and then disappear. It came to the attention of our Navy, the English Navy, and other authorities. In the bill of 1938 we provided $15,000,000 for experiments with small vessels having a speed of 40 knots, such as motor submarine chasers and motor torpedo boats. The Navy had put out to competition among all the builders of ships in the country requests for models of vessels of this type which would be useful. As a result we have been building 16. They are of various types. They are all experimental. Some of them are constructed partly of aluminum. Some are of wood, and some of steel. These vessels are still in process of try-out, and the Navy has not decided upon any particular type to manufacture for its fleet.

It did get from the English a model of this type of vessel, which we purchased, but rather than delay the completion of the 16 various experimental types a contract was made in December last for 24, 12 of each of these vessels of the English type, with some improvements which our own naval officers were able to suggest.

These vessels are the ones, 23 of them, which were involved in this transaction, which, I am happy to say, is now ended, and, in my opinion, the contracts for their delivery to other than our own Navy will not be changed or modified. I will make further mention concerning that in a few moments.

In my opinion, their value lies in that they are harbor defense boats. The theory of their usefulness is that there will be a large number in the harbors of Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, San Francisco, New York, and other ports, and they will be able to detect the presence of submarines. There is a very fine instrument on submarine chasers whereby the presence of a submarine can be detected under water, and the torpedo boat will be useful in firing torpedoes and getting away quickly from an enemy raider of the commercial type or possibly even from a warship of one kind or another. It is this type of vessel that the press reported a few days ago was used by the Italians in sinking a French cruiser.

As I have said, the contracts required a building program of from 9 months to a year or more. The first boat under this contract was to be delivered in October; so, of course, none of them could be delivered to the Allies until then, anyway. Then they are delivered in succession, and it will take, perhaps, several months more before the 24 shall be completed.

After the matter was made public, and the committee received the above information, at the committee's request, I asked the Judge Advocate General's Office of the Navy Department to inform us as to all laws relating to the disposition of naval vessels and naval surplus supplies. I have a communication from him before me, and ask that it be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 14, 1940.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In compliance with your request, and that of the Committee on Naval Affairs, for information as to the laws governing the sale of naval vessels and naval materials, the following brief digest of the applicable statutes is submitted below, viz:

NAVAL VESSELS

The act of August 5, 1882 (title 34, U. S. C., sec. 491), directs the Secretary of the Navy to have periodical examination made of all naval vessels by boards of naval officers, which boards shall make written report to the Secretary of the Navy as to which of said vessels are unfit for further service, stating the grounds and reasons for their opinion. If the Secretary of the Navy concurs in the opinion with said report, he is required to strike the name or names of such vessels from the Navy Register and report the same to the Congress.

The act of March 3, 1883 (title 34, U. S. C., sec. 492), authorizes the sale of vessels stricken from the Navy Register under section 491, supra, after appraisal, provided the Secretary of the Navy deems it for the best interests of the United States to sell them. After appraisal the vessels are required to be advertised for sealed proposals for a period not less than 3 months with specified requirements as to guarantee, etc. The act provides for the sale of the vessels to the person offering the highest price therefor above the appraised value, but permits a departure from the manner of the sale, and for less than the appraised value, on written authority of the President.

The act of August 29, 1916 (title 34, U. S. C., sec. 493), authorizes the sale of any or all auxiliary ships of the Navy classified as colliers, transports, tenders, supply ships, special types, and hospital ships 18 years and over in age, that the Secretary deems unsuited to present needs of the Navy at a price not less than 50 percent of their original cost.

NAVAL MATERIAL

The act of August 5, 1882, as amended by the act of June 15, 1938 (title 34, U. S. C., sec. 544, Sup. V), provides that no old material of the Navy shall, after August 5, 1882, be sold or exchanged if it can be profitably used in the construction or repair of vessels, their machinery, armor, armament, or equipment. When such old material cannot be profitably used it must be appraised and sold at public auction after public notice and advertisement shall have been given according to law under such requirements and regulations, and in such manner as the Secretary of the Navy may direct.

This act authorizes the sale of surplus scrap metals of the Navy to schools and colleges for vocational training at the prices established for issue to naval activities.

The act of June 30, 1890 (title 34, U. S. C., sec. 543), authorizes the sale of condemned naval supplies, stores, and materials by public auction or by advertisement for sealed proposals for the purchase thereof.

The act of July 9, 1918 (title 40, U. S. C., sec. 314), authorizes the President to sell by the head of any executive department war supplies acquired during the World War, including the sale to any foreign state or government engaged in war against any government with which the United States is at war. The sales of guns and ammunition under the authority of this section is limited to other departments of the Government and to foreign states or governments engaged in war against any government with which the United States is at war and to members of the National Rifle Association and other recognized associations organized in the United States for the encouragement of small-arms target practice.

House Joint Resolution 367, recently approved by both Houses of the Congress, authorized the construction of war vessels for South American republics in the United States navy yards, and the manufacture and sale of armament, equipment, and antiaircraft, artillery, and ammunition to such governments.

MOTOR TORPEDO BOATS

With reference to the question of motor torpedo boats, it is the opinion of the Navy Department that a motor torpedo boat is a naval vessel within the purview of the laws applicable to the sale of naval vessels.

However, it is desired to invite attention to the fact that in the case of motor torpedo boat, No. 9, which has not yet been delivered, no payment thereon has been made to date, and no payment will be made until delivered to the Government. This motor torpedo boat will not become a naval vessel, of course, until such delivery.

In the case of other motor torpedo boats under contract, no delivery has been made to this Government, and under a change in the contract it is proposed to approve the deferred delivery of certain of these motor torpedo boats.

With reference to the question of the return of war supplies such as airplanes, vehicles, engines, etc., to the contractors as part payment for new material of the same character, this authority is found in title 10, United States Code, and in supplement 5, United States Code, title 10, relating to the Army, as follows:

"PAR. 1272. Motor vehicles, aircraft, etc.: Motor-propelled vehicles, airplanes, engines, and parts thereof may be exchanged in part payment for new equipment of the same or similar character to be used for the same purpose as those proposed to be exchanged (May 12, 1917, c. 12, 40 Stat. 43).

"PAR. 1271a. Same: Machines and tools pertaining to construction, etc., of ordnance to matériel: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to exchange obsolete, unsuitable, and unserviceable machines and tools, and parts thereof, pertaining to the manufacture or repair of ordinance matériel for use in the national defense, for new machines and tools of the same or equivalent general character (May 11, 1939, c. 122, 53 Stat. 739)."

The supplies between the Army and the Navy may be interchanged under the authority of paragraph 1274, title 10, United States Code, as follows:

"PAR. 1274. Interchange of supplies between Army and Navy: The interchange without compensation therefor, of military stores, supplies, and equipment of every character, including real estate owned by the Government, is hereby authorized between the Army and the Navy upon the request of the head of one service and with the approval of the head of the other service (July 11, 1919, c. 9, 41 Stat. 132)."

Sincerely yours,

LEWIS COMPTON.

The CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

Mr. WALSH. I cannot take credit for it to myself, but a Member of the House of Representatives [Mr. CASE of South Dakota] cited the day following a law which makes illegal the act of sending naval vessels out of the country while we are a neutral and subjects to severe penalty anyone who would be a party to such an act. That law, I think, ought to be read now. It was passed on June 15, 1917, and is as follows:

SEC. 3. During a war in which the United States is a neutral nation, it shall be unlawful to send out of the jurisdiction of the United States any vessel built, armed, or equipped as a vessel of war or converted from a private vessel into a vessel of war with any intent or under any agreement or contract, written or oral, that such vessel shall be delivered to a belligerent nation, or to an agent, officer, or citizen of such nation, or with reasonable cause to believe that the said vessel shall or will be employed in the service of any such belligerent nation after its departure from the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 6. Whoever in violation of any of the provisions of this title shall take or attempt or conspire to take or authorize the taking of any such vessel out of port or from the jurisdiction of the United States shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years or both, and, in addition, such vessel, her tackle, apparel, furniture, equipment, and her cargo shall be forfeited to the United States.

Upon obtaining information as to this law I asked the Judge Advocate General's Office if there had been any modification or change or repeal of this law, and he informed me there had not been and that it is in effect at the present time.

I think it is only fair to say that those who were proceeding to modify this contract for the purpose of transferring certain ships did not know of this law, and if they did, of course, they are subject to a penalty; but I am told that the Attorney General has given no opinion to the Government upon this matter.

Mr. VANDENBERG. They are subject to a penalty whether they knew about the law or not, are they not?

Mr. WALSH. Ignorance of the law excuses no man. But I think it is important to know that the discovery of this law, in my opinion, will dispose of the whole matter, and there will be no attempt made to cancel the Government's contract for these vessels.

That embraces the story in reference to the disposition of naval property. I know nothing about what has been done by the Army.

I think I should call attention to a matter to which I dislike to refer, but I am impelled to do so because of what I feel is a growing tendency that ought to be stopped; and I, as a member of the majority party, want to help to stop it rather than have the opposition party blame us or lay the charge of indifference against us. When I asked for that information in a letter there came a return letter which I should like to put in the RECORD but cannot for a reason I will state later. However, I received from the Navy Department all the information I requested. I have not given it all to the Senate. I have given that which appeared in the evidence before my committee. The return letter was marked "Confidential," which I interpret to mean that I should not disclose it, and that the Congress, and the people of America should not have this knowledge. I was shocked on another occasion in our committee by an officer of the Navy, a very intelligent and well-meaning officer—I do not make any personal charge against him—who, when I said "We want an amendment to this bill that will require reports to be made to Congress on this matter," replied to me, "My reaction to that is that it is interfering with the Executive authority." I say to you, gentlemen, no truer or more profound words of warning were ever uttered on this floor than those of the Senator from Arizona a few days ago against bureaucracy. There is something instinctive in men who get into these bureau positions, none of them answerable to the electorate, which causes them to think they are not responsible to the Congress. I believe the naval officers who have proceeded to act in the manner which has been described here really felt they had no obligation to the Congress, or the people of the United States; that the Congress exists only to put its hands into the pockets of the American people, and turn the money over to departments or bureaus, and we are to ask no questions. I think the Navy and Army have, perhaps, been less chargeable with such an attitude than some other departments of the Government; I have the highest respect for the Navy and Navy officers; but I tell you, gentlemen, I have been greatly disturbed to learn that officials of our Government entertained the feeling that we are interfering with their prerogatives; that Congress ought not to ask questions; that it is possibly impertinent for us to make inquiries—perhaps I should not say that, but I think they are surprised that any committee of Congress should do so. Their attitude seems to be "Give us the money and let us go ahead." That has made our problem in connection with this bill very much harder, because in the measure we are letting down the bars completely, though we have tried, as best we could, to provide some safeguards which will appear later, such as the condition that reports shall be made to Congress of the transactions which may take place. I do not mean to apply this statement particularly to the Navy, but I do want to protest the growing sentiment in some of the departments that Congress exists merely to provide money for various bureaus, but not to check up on them, to follow up their transactions, or to seek to challenge their expenditures or methods. They are unmindful that they are agents of the Congress; that their powers are defined by the Congress; and that Congress can strip them of their powers at any time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not desire to pry into matters that took place in executive session of the Naval Affairs Committee, but I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, if he is at liberty to answer the question, to tell us whether he has been able to ascertain to what extent the officers of the Navy are responsible for the sale of ships and the determination of the naval policy, and to what extent they have been ordered to do so by higher authority and have simply obeyed in their capacity as officers of the Navy subject to the orders of the Commander in Chief. I should like also to ask the Senator, if he is at liberty to answer the question, whether the naval officers and naval officials who appeared before the Naval Affairs Committee stated that this was on their own initiative or on orders of the Commander in Chief.

Mr. WALSH. I will answer the question, because I feel that every Member of this body has a right to know what I know, and a right to know what the other members of the committee know, even in executive session. Had not the matter involved in the questions and the suggestions of the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Missouri been disclosed, I would have moved an executive session so that this matter could have been discussed, but because of the fact that it has been all opened up in the press and distorted in various ways, I felt that that was not necessary.

Now I will answer the Senator from Missouri. I asked the Acting Secretary of the Navy on what authority he had taken the action he did in reference to these vessels. By the way, one naval officer questioned the use of the word "vessels." He said these were boats, not vessels. So we have boats going around with devices to detect submarines, and we have boats that are not vessels going around, equipped to discharge torpedoes.

I called this naval officers' attention to the fact that in my report to the Congress on the bill to build vessels, the Navy had enumerated among the naval vessels that were being built the very vessels to which I referred. I forgot to add that when these 23 vessels leave the country, if they do, there will not be another modern vessel of that type here in case we are engaged in war. We have not built any vessels of that type in 20 years. We would be stripped of every single vessel for doing that particular defense work, whatever its value may be.

I now come back to the Senator's question.

I asked the Acting Secretary of the Navy, "On what law did you rely to do this?" He very properly answered, on the general law that we had given them, under which the Navy Department and the War Department and practically every other department have a right to modify or change contracts. Now, Senators, see how careful we shall have to be in our legislation. They have a right to modify or change their contracts. So, all these transactions have been based, not on any legal authority—for they have none—to dispose of any property except surplus, but upon the fact that they have authority to modify or change contracts. Who in God's name, in Congress or in the country, thought, when such a power was given, that these contracts for our own protection would be modified or changed in order to assist one side or the other, or all sides, of belligerents at war?

The Acting Secretary of the Navy said that was the reason and the law. Then I asked, "Did you consult with anybody, or did anybody request you or urge you to cancel these contracts?" He said, "No." Then I said, "You yourself are taking full responsibility for this act?" "Yes, sir," he said. I said, "And you say on your own responsibility that this was done without consulting the Commander in Chief or anybody else except the Secretary of the Treasury, who is the negotiator with the representatives of the Allies in the disposition of the surplus and other property?" He said, "Yes." I must say that he took full and complete responsibility for the whole matter.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I asked the Senator the question because of the fact that a few days after this testimony of the Acting Secretary of the Navy before the Naval Affairs Committee, the secretary to the President gave out a statement in which he said that the President of the United States himself had been fully and directly responsible for this transfer, and that he had made it on the recommendation of the Navy Department and the Treasury Department. I do not know what the Treasury Department has to do with ordering the Navy Department and the War Department around, but that was the statement given out from the White House. In view of the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, it seems to me that either the Acting Secretary of the Navy or the secretary to the President has been somewhat less than frank with the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate and with the people of the United States on an extremely important matter.

I asked the Senator this question because it was in evidence before the Military Affairs Committee when I was a member of that committee something over a year ago that the Secretary of the Treasury had gone over the head of the War Department, and, over the protest of the Chief of Staff and the Secretary of War, had arranged for the sale of certain airplanes.

It seems to me that when we go to blaming the War Department, the General Staff of the Army, and the General Staff of the Navy for things they have done, we ought to be very certain that we are blaming them for something for which they are responsible, because, of course, we always have to remember that when the representatives of the General Staff of the Army or the General Staff of the Navy come before a committee of Congress and say, "The opinion of the General Staff is this," or "The opinion of the General Staff is that," the opinion of the General Staff is the opinion that the General Staff is told to have by the Commander in Chief of the Army, if he chooses to tell them what opinion to hold.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am a little confused by a statement the Senator from Massachusetts made a little while ago. I understood him to say that, in his opinion, the Senate and the country were entitled to information with regard to the disposition which is being made by the Navy Department of instrumentalities of defense. I also understood him to say that the Department took the position that this was confidential information, and that in reply to his letter of inquiry he had received a letter marked "Confidential."

I now ask the Senator whether or not he has given the Senate all the information in his possession with regard to the details of the disposition of these implements of war by the Navy Department, and, if not, to give the Senate what reasons he may have as to why the representatives of the people and the people themselves are not entitled to a full disclosure of what is happening to their instrumentalities of national defense.

Mr. WALSH. I have presented to the Senate all the information that was divulged at the committee hearings. I have not given all the information in the letter to which I referred because I did not receive it until yesterday, and I felt that before making it public I ought to write to the Secretary of the Navy, which I intend to do, and ask him why he requested that the information be kept confidential, and what is the objection, if any, to my making it public to the Senate.

I will add that I have discussed the major things that are in the letter, because they were presented to the committee. There are other items, not of the category of the airplanes or the ships to which I referred. I do not know whether or not the Senator approves of that course; but certainly I cannot use here a letter marked "Confidential."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not for a moment ask that the Senator shall violate any confidence; but I do wish to enter my vigorous protest if there is anybody in the Government who believes that the representatives of the people and the people themseslves are not entitled, as a matter of public information, at this critical time in the Nation's history, to know what disposition is being made of the instrumentalities of national defense, whether by the Army, or by the Navy, or by whatever Department or agency may have control over the instrumentalities of national defense.

It seems to me that this is a fundamental issue, an important issue; that there may be separation of powers, but certainly that separation of powers does not go to the extent of denying the legislative branch of the Government full information upon these matters, especially when we are voting additional billions of dollars to build up our national defense, and are engaged in the process of enacting tax legislation to lay that burden upon the people of the country.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to say that when our committee called before it the Acting Secretary of the Navy, he very frankly and fully answered every question asked him by the committee; but the whole thing prompted the committee to ask and have in writing from the Navy Department itself a list of everything that had been done in this field since January 1. I shall put in the RECORD my letter making these inquiries, and I thought I would request the Secretary of the Navy to release the confidential character of his reply to me.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. In connection with this discussion, it might be well to point out that the committee questioned the officers who appeared before us with particular reference to the sale and disposition of larger vessels—that is, submarines, subchasers, and the like—and that one of the officers distinctly stated that it was against the policy of the Navy Department to dispose of any vessel or equipment that would require in excess of 6 months to build. He made it plain to us that the Navy did not contemplate the disposition of any naval vessel now in use or that was necessary for our defense. He stated that one of the reasons that prompted the negotiation for the transfer of these small boats was because they were in the experimental stage. They are very small boats, ranging from 42 to 72 feet in length, and can be built within 6 months; and he pointed out that another reason that prompted him to agree to the disposition of 20 of these small boats was that the Department had no immediate use for them, and they could be replaced within 6 months. He also stated that the concern which built these boats in New Jersey erected a factory for the purpose of building these 22 or 24 boats, with a view of demonstrating whether or not the boats could be built on a mass-production basis.

He pointed out that after the factory was in full operation the manufacturer could build these boats and turn them out very rapidly. I repeat, it was brought out by an official of the Navy Department who appeared before us that under no conditions would the Navy agree to dispose of any vessels of any kind which would require beyond 6 months to build or replace.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. Let me answer the Senator from Louisiana. I hope the Senator does not mean to insinuate that I have refrained from making a frank statement.

Mr. ELLENDER. Not at all.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator was merely amplifying my statement?

Mr. ELLENDER. I was amplifying it, with a view of bringing out facts which were probably overlooked by the able Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is correct in part.

Mr. ELLENDER. I wish the Senator would correct any misstatement made by me.

Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. HOLT, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to myself. I wish I had the report of the testimony here; I have it in my office and I intended to read it. The Navy Department called the vessels "boats", first of all. They did not give the emphasis to value which I myself had, and which other members of the committee had. They did say what the Senator from Louisiana did not say—that one of the values of the sale was that it would lead to a better mass production after the 24 were built.

I wish to say, in conclusion of this matter, that I have given the Navy credit for having more sense and more patriotism than to spend $6,000,000 for 24 ships which are not of value and importance to the Navy.

Mr. ELLENDER. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not think it would be fair to the chairman of the committee, now that the point has been raised, to have anyone suppose that there has been anyone on the Committee on Naval Affairs, much less the chairman, who has failed to be alive to the present situation. I am sure that I voice the sentiment of every member of the committee when I say that the chairman of the committee, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], has been extremely diligent in seeing that the law was not evaded. On his own initiative he has explored every avenue of suspicion and of reasonable rumor to see that there was no truth in false reports, and through correspondence and instructions to witnesses and what not he has done everything in his power to see that the ships of the Navy, which we have built for defense, were not turned over to anybody so as to weaken our own forces. Indeed, he has gone far out of his way to accomplish that purpose. I think I speak for the entire committee in making this statement. During the whole progress of the naval program he has been an admirable chairman from the standpoint of defense of the public welfare and deserves the commendation of the people of the United States.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I should like to say, in regard to the statement made by the Senator from Maryland, that I quite agree that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has done splendid work for the Navy, and I have a great deal of confidence in him. My recollection, however, as to what the Navy Department officials said about giving up ships of the Navy is that they stated that not with their consent would any ships be given up if it would take more than 6 months to replace them—6 months, not a year and a half.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I was about to remark, if the Senator will pardon me, that the statement of the Senator from Louisiana, namely, that the Navy would give away anything that could be replaced within 2 years' time, would be small comfort and no protection to the United States.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I desire to say that I did not have any intention at all of criticizing the able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and I cannot imagine what I said that could lead anyone to such a conclusion. I have high regard for the able Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I did not so interpret the Senator's statement.

Mr. ELLENDER. My only object was to bring out some of the facts as I understood them.

Another point was brought out by one of the naval officers who appeared before us as one which prompted him to agree to this transfer was the fact that these boats were equipped with 18-inch torpedo tubes, and that the Government desired in the future to equip all such boats with 21-inch tubes, so that they could get this additional equipment and better boats without any further outlay. I am amazed that such an incident could cause such unfavorable discussion. These small boats are in the experimental stage, are not needed at present, and can be replaced in a very short period of time. They are now in the process of construction, and the first one will not be completed until October 1940.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. I merely want to make a brief observation along the same line. This morning I heard on the radio that a great squadron of war planes of the United States Army had left for Canada. I called up the press section of the Army, and all I asked was, "When were those planes delivered to the United States Government?" That was the only question I asked. I have a stenographic copy, I may say, of the entire conversation, both ways. I asked them when they were delivered, and they said they could not give me that information; that they were prohibited by order from so doing. I went as high as I could in the Office of the Secretary of War, and they all said that the information could not be given. One of the colonels asked me, "What do you want to use it for?" when I asked him when the planes were delivered to the United States Government. Of course, there was no answer to that.

The question is, Why should a Member of the United States Senate be prohibited from knowing whether these planes are obsolete or not? All I asked was, "When were these planes sold and delivered to the United States Government?" I was told on the highest authority of the War Department that that information was kept secret on orders. The question is, By whose orders has it been kept secret from the people?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in connection with the statements of the Senator from Louisiana and others, I should like to read a letter on this subject I received some days ago, which is not marked "confidential." The committee received it after the Secretary appeared before the committee and when I asked for certain information. The letter states:

In compliance with your request, I am submitting the following information concerning motor torpedo boats and motor submarine chasers under construction at the Elso Works, Bayonne, N. J., with contract dates of delivery of same:

(a) Eleven motor torpedo boats, $225,000 each; 12 motor submarine chasers, $212,000 each.

(b) Original contracts called for delivery of the motor submarine chasers first, the first boat to be delivered within 216 days and all 12 boats to be delivered within 300 days after the date of contract, which was December 13, 1939.

That would be 10 months.

The contract for the motor torpedo boats was signed the same date and deliveries were specified to begin within 300 days after date of contract and to be completed within 290 days.

That is over a year for those vessels.

As a result of some delay in obtaining the experimental Government-furnished sound equipment for the motor subchasers, the Department is now negotiating for a modification in the delivery of these boats which will result in the delivery of the motor torpedo boats before the motor submarine chasers. At present it is expected that the first of the motor torpedo boats will be delivered to the Government about August 1, 1940, and that deliveries will follow at the rate of one boat per week.

Sincerely yours,

LEWIS COMPTON.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I could not hear very well what the Senator was saying. Did I understand him to say that none of these boats had been transferred to the Government?

Mr. WALSH. None have actually been transferred to the Government. They are all under contract, and under a law which exists the Government has the right to modify or change the contracts up to the date of delivery.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. And under a parity of reasoning, they would have a right to reject them?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make an observation for a moment?

Mr. WALSH. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have been listening to the discussion, and I wish to express my entire confidence in and admiration for the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

As to all this talk about telling the people, that we have to tell the people about everything, so far as I am concerned I am willing to trust the Committee on Naval Affairs as to any secret or executive hearings they may have, if they are satisfied. Someone on the committee will certainly find it out if there is anything wrong or crooked. I would not require that every detail as to naval administration be brought up in the Senate Chamber and chased all around over the Chamber every few minutes. I am perfectly willing to trust the Committee on Military Affairs as to the details of secret understandings of the War Department, and so long as they are attending to their job, someone will find out if there is anything crooked.

I think we are doing too much talking about our state of unpreparedness. Someone on this floor rises every day and proclaims to Mr. Hitler, Mr. Mussolini, and everyone else who wants to hear that we are unprepared, that we have no Navy, that we have no Army, that no one wants to fight, and that we will not do anything about it. I think that is absolutely hurtful to our self-defense.

Of course, our Army is not on a war basis, but it is a larger Army than we have ever had in peacetimes during the history of this republic. I believe that our Navy today is as good as any navy that floats on the sea, and we are adding to it. So far as I am concerned, I am for the Senator's two-ocean Navy bill, I am in favor of lifting the Army to 400,000 or 500,000 men, and I am in favor of calling out the National Guard for training purposes right now, if the Army authorities think they need them.

I wish to declaim against this constant yelping in the Senate, in the press, and in the House, that we are not prepared and cannot get prepared. America can be prepared, and when she is prepared no emeny on earth can land on these shores or can successfully attack the United States of America.

I want the country to know that we are arming, and we are doing it as rapidly as we can. There is no magic by which we can create a Navy by pushing a button. There is no magic by which we can create an Army by pushing a button. I want the people of the United States to know that this Navy will cost us money, it will cost us sweat, and it will cost us discomfort, and that we are going to put on them the necessary burdens to do what we want done.

I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for permitting me to interrupt him.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator from Texas for his observations. I think it might have been necessary to stimulate our people to greater efforts by talking about the inadequacy of our forces and the limitation of our defense, if the time for sacrifice had come. But I agree with the Senator from Texas that we should not emphasize that inadequacy to the extent of giving comfort or courage to potential enemies, so they may believe that now is the time to strike because of our weakness. I do think it was helpful in the early stages of our program, to have the country realize the need of prompt, diligent, speedy building up of our national defenses.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish to thank the able Senator from Massachusetts for the patience with which he has responded to the many questions which my original inquiry seems to have inspired. I do not want to keep the Senator away from a discussion of his bill too long, but now I should like to ask him one more question in his capacity as one of my most favorite experts. I want to know if we sent planes and munitions to Britain and France in our own ships, and under convoy—which I assume means convoyed by our Navy—whether the Senator thinks that would be an act of war.

Mr. WALSH. In my humble opinion it would be an act of war.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should think there could be no other conclusion. The Senator, I assume, would not favor that sort of a suggestion at the present time.

Mr. WALSH. I certainly would not. I can conceive of nothing more dangerous or destructive to my country or its people than to undertake now a course of action such as indicated in the question, and which, in my opinion, would eventually lead to war. I can conceive of nothing more ruinous or destructive to our country than that.

I think I ought to say in this connection that it has been a source of strength to me and to the country to know of the attitude of the Congress; that the Members of Congress have not been swayed or moved by the few extremists who indirectly have been urging war.

Professor Elliott, speaking at the Harvard University commencement yesterday, said in effect:

So far as I am concerned that part of the slogan, which says "short of war" I would eliminate, and give everything to the Allies. He would strike out "short of war."

I think I ought to say also that in my conversation with the officers of the Navy and with the Chief Executive, there have been constant declarations of this program being for our defense, and not for war purposes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I will add this to what the Senator has said. The thing which he condemns as an act of war, and which I think would have to be condemned as an act of war, is the third suggestion offered by Mr. Henry L. Stimson as his immediate program 2 days before he was appointed Secretary of War.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this matter is uncomfortable. I did not seek these disclosures that have been made here, and I want to say again that I made up my mind that if such a question were to be asked me, before this matter was in the press, for I knew it last Friday, and my committee knew it Friday—of course it is impossible to keep things from the press—I would move an executive session and then let the Senate decide how much it wanted to give to the public. So I wish to relieve myself from the introduction of this discussion.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I wish to express my personal appreciation for the light which the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts has been giving to his associates and also to the country.

However, I wish to say further in response to the suggestions of the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] that it seems to me that the greatest danger we are facing now is a return to smugness and complacency in our own country. The reason I say that is because the colleague of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, speaking on the floor of the Senate yesterday, said that America was not getting the 400,000 soldiers sought to be obtained.

As to the question of unpreparedness, I think it was stated earlier today that all the foreign nations know our condition, so whatever is said about unpreparedness on the floor of the Senate does not give any help or aid or comfort to them. They have those facts.

What I should like to see is that the United States would become so prepared—and to that end every instrumentality we have must be kept here—that no country on earth or combination of countries would dare to tackle us.

There is only one argument in the world today—it is too bad to have to say this, but Hitler's revolution has demonstrated it—there is only one argument in the world today, and that is the argument of force. We must meet force with force, or, as the saying goes, fight fire with fire.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. PEPPER. My friend could have included me, had he cared to do so—and I would have given him my approval in advance had he done so—among those who thought that the best defense of America involved some affirmative action. But I have some misgivings as to the wisdom of those in this Chamber who have indicated their sentiments today that the best and the safest and the surest way to defend America was to draw some imaginary line around this particular country, and say that we will build it so strong that nobody else can cross it, because if I have seen anything at all in the last year in Europe, I have seen that people who have adopted that policy are paying a terrible price for it. I saw the French build the best system of defenses that the world has ever seen, at an expense of $500,000,000, and settle down into a defensive psychology behind what they thought was an impregnable wall of forts and fortresses, and today, 5 weeks after an attack was made upon that supposedly impregnable system of defenses, the French Republic lies prostrate in process of being ravaged by the dictator who is anathema in the eyes of every Christian and true Democrat.

So when the French people forsook the policy of action as the policy of defense, they established a principle for which they paid with their own blood and their own sovereignty.

Mr. President, there are those in Congress who have hung to some outworn tradition of defense, and who have said that we cannot help the British to stay alive and be our first line of defense, because if we do we will violate some technical principle of defense, or we cannot help France from being destroyed as a part of our defense because we will violate some traditional concept of defense of America; we cannot help Belgium or Holland to resist this dictator who is trying to conquer the world for his own purposes because we will be going outside the scope of our legitimate defense.

All we can do in the opinion of those who would practice that sort of defense, is to sit down here on our own doorstep and wait until we see him coming around the corner of the road, and when he passes the curb and approaches the front door, then they will wonder where they left the shotgun, and if they have any shells, and if there is anything they can do about arousing their neighbors to the fact that they are about to lose their homes and their liberties and perhaps their blood.

So, Mr. President, I am glad that these debates are taken down and to be preserved, that history may look at them and observe the shortsightedness of the people's representatives about the people's defense.

There is no one in the Senate that I know of who wants to take this country to war. I just talked in the cloakroom a few minutes ago to an American boy who lives in Asheville, N. C. He lost one leg in the World War. What was he here for? He was here to try to arouse the Congress to a consciousness of danger. He told about the military tradition there was in his family and how in the Argonne he lost a leg in the war in 1918. He was not here clamoring against action. He was here saying, "I gave a member of my body for a cause that I deemed honorable in 1918."

If we sit down here supine, as some would have us do, we shall lose our own liberty. We cannot even do anything in South America. This country and that country will be taken over by Nazi spies and Nazi columns. We will sit here and say, "No, we cannot do anything because we cannot see them upon the horizon from our shores, and if we look beyond the Rio Grande, they are not there, and they are not upon the borders of Canada." And the isolationist says, "Defend America at the place where America is least capable of defense."

So, Mr. President, I advocate an affirmative form of defense, and I say that if we have even half good judgment, if we exercise even half good sense, now that all the rest of the world has collapsed, we will quit this mealymouthed quibbling over an outworn military tradition that the only way to defend yourself is to wait until the other fellow hits you, and then perhaps it is too late, and we will try to preserve the real first lines of American defense in ways that we can properly do. If we do it under a false psychology or philosophy of defense, we shall pay a terrible price for it, as have others who have followed such a philosophy.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think we all appreciate the point of view of the Senator from Florida, which is shared by some others in the country. As I understand the position of the Senator from Florida, it is that the attitude, policies, and military program of the totalitarian states are such that we ought now to anticipate that they are coming to us, and that before there is an overt act on this continent on their part we ought to send supplies—even naval and military supplies, and everything short of men—to the Allies.

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. That is a position which the Senator has a right to maintain. Others in America maintain the same position.

I should like to state my position. I have not stated it in the Senate heretofore. My position is:

First, peace for America, preservation of the lives, property, resources, and institutions of America, with no overt act by our country which will invite any nation engaged in the European war to disturb that peace.

I do not anticipate that every man who has a quarrel with another is my enemy. Nations may have quarrels with other nations without quarreling with us. But if they are belligerent, if they are ruthless, if they are unreasonable, we should prepare to meet them when they come at us. But I do not believe we should invite attack, or give provocation for attack.

Second, we should build up our national defenses speedily and thoroughly, so that if any potential enemy, any military totalitarian force in Europe, seeks to attack us, we shall be ready to meet it, combat it, and destroy it before such an enemy sets foot on this land.

Third, all the private interests in this country, all the manufacturing, business, and financial interests, may do what they please and go as far as they wish in giving aid to the Allies; but because I fear that the giving of military aid by the United States Government would be moving in the direction of war, because I fear that it would be an overt act, and an invitation to hatred which would be planted in the souls of the children of the totalitarian states for generations to come, I want my Government itself, its own property, its own finances, its own Navy and Army, to be kept clear of the European war. If that be unfair to my country, if that be treason, then I must take the consequences of it.

I repeat, the Senator has a right to his opinion. It is an opinion which is entitled to be presented and considered. However, some of us are emphatic in the belief that we must exercise caution in our governmental attitude, and in using the authority of our Government. We believe that there is a dividing line which means the difference between peace and war. I say it is too risky, too dangerous, to try to determine how far we can go in tapping the resources of our own Government and furnishing naval vessels, airplanes, powder, and bombs. It is trampling on dangerous ground. It is moving toward the edge of a precipice—a precipice of stupendous and horrifying depths. I do not want any American boy to feel that by an official act of mine I have given one iota of encouragement to the haters of democracy, the unreasonable and relentless forces unloosed in Europe, to come upon us and engage us in war.

I believe that it is possible to live in some degree of peace, even with a tyrant, or with a nation whose policies are unsound and undemocratic. We have done so for 150 years. There have been Hitlers before. In his day Napoleon's name was a stench in the nostrils of all decent people in the world. The story is told that mothers, to frighten their children mentioned the name of Napolean, insteads of ghosts. The same spirit is true today. It may be possible for even a Hitler or a Mussolini to be restrained from declaring war upon us by our unlimited resources for defense, and the passionate devotion of our people to liberty and freedom. I do not want to give Hitler or Mussolini any ground for saying, after the war is over, "France and England, you were honorable. You bared your breasts to our bayonets. You smelled the smoke of battle. You were honorable foes. But other countries, which said they were neutral and which passed neutrality laws, threw cannon balls over the neutrality fence at us. We have little respect for them."

If we are going to attempt to crush the philosophy of the totalitarian states which we hate—in order to be consistent—why not undertake also the extinction of the communistic philosophy of the Soviet Republic? Russia has already taken over part of Poland and Finland and is now threatening Lithuania.

Why not undertake the extinction of the Japanese philosophy which is based upon a determination to dominate the whole of the Orient and which now has China bleeding and prostrate?

Ah, gentlemen, if you are preparing to undertake the policing of the world in the name of justice, you are committing your country and future generations to a policy of waging endless war throughout the world.

The governments whose philosophies we detest may turn upon us but let us not invite or provoke it. Let us rather arm to the teeth to protect ourselves and our liberties.

Mr. President, if we want war, let us make an open declaration of war. Let us refrain from surreptitious acts which we like to think of as "short of war" but which all sensible people in the world know to be acts of war. There is little sentiment in this country in favor of the United States entering the war. So far as expressions in the Senate and the House are concerned, not a single Member of Congress has dared to say he would vote today to put this country into war. Therefore I say let us be careful not to provoke war, not to invite it, not to go to the point where it is inescapable. This great Nation, with its millions of people and its great resources, is the only light of democracy left in all the world, the only beacon of hope, for the preservation of civilization and humanity. To risk its destruction now, in the military condition in which we know we are, would be appalling.

It would be slaughter of the manhood of the country to put us into war today, in the light of what every Member of this body knows about the condition of our Army insofar as preparedness is concerned. I do not want to do it. I will not do it. I will walk out of this chamber and tender my resignation, if necessary, rather than put my country into a European war—a war which was provoked—falsely, if you please—upon the claim that Germany was robbed by the Allies as a result of the treaty which was made at Versailles, at the end of the last European war.

If one of the principal causes of the war in Europe is not the Versailles Treaty, it is at least a death struggle between irreconcilable systems of economy and political philosophies, engendered and promoted by mutual claims of hypocrisy, deceit, and greed.

I do not defend the ruthless, aggressive attitude of Germany. I can, however, understand that the state of mind among the German people and their officials may be explained in part by the belief that a treaty was made in which they were robbed of their possessions and of their people and the right to control them. I can understand that psychology. Not to understand it is to fail to understand the background of the war in Europe, which is not of our making, but one which is largely based on grievances, rivalries of Old World origin. If 25 years ago we had had a war with Japan and California had been taken over by Japan, would there ever have been a day or an hour when we would not have prayed for the day when we could take California back? In such a situation, if our democratic institutions should fail to act quickly, it is quite possible that another demagogue or tyrant would appear upon the horizon and say, "We want California back. The time has come. We have been and are now prepared to seize the property which was taken from us."

Mr. President, our position is not the position of Germany. In Germany there exists a spirit of revenge, a bitter determination to get back what was taken away from her. Are we forgetful of human nature? Are we unable to comprehend the difference between our position and the European belligerents? If two men quarrel and one man is severely injured and even goes to the hospital, in time the two men may shake hands and be friends. But if at the time of the quarrel the one who is responsible for the injuries to the other puts a pistol at his head and says, "Give me your pocketbook and a deed to half your lands," the other will never forgive him.

Mr. President, I am not defending such an attitude; but this war is the result of a treaty which has been denounced again and again on the floor of the Senate. Both sides claim to be the victims of injustice—one an oppressive treaty, the other deceit and gross irresponsibility of dictators.

To his dying day the brave, great, noble soul from Idaho, who sat across the aisle, denounced that treaty, and again and again he said it was provocative of war, that it would mean war. Did we sign that treaty? Have we any obligation under that treaty? Are we compelled to enforce it because those who are participants in it have reopened it by declaring war upon each other? That is what it amounts to. They have brazenly scrapped it; they have ruthlessly torn it to pieces and said, "We are not going to stop our military preparedness until we get what you took from us." Does anyone think a just treaty will be negotiated if the totalitarian states win? Most emphatically, no. The treaty of the present war will simply be the beginning of another war.

Under those circumstances, in heaven's name, why can we not keep away from their war?

When have the German Government or the German people ever done anything to us, as a nation, that should cause us to go to war? When have the Italian Government or the Italian people ever said anything against our Government or our people or usurped any of our resources or committed a single unfriendly act against us? Our only grievance is that she did not wage war on the side with which we sympathize. Why, then, should we feel it incumbent upon us to participate in a quarrel which they have, a quarrel which we think is unjust, which we think is indefensible, and which we think is injurious to all democratic forms of government in the world? Why should we, by act or deed, officially—officially—seek to engender hatred, animosity, and hostile feeling and step by step proceed upon a course of action that might lead us into this war? Have we lost conception of the awful, awful, awful consequences of war to America?

Is there any boy or man of military age asking us to go to war or to go one degree beyond what we conceive to be the protection of our country against invasion and war?

Are the mothers of America who must send their sons to fight talking war in this country today? Whence does the agitation come? It comes from a limited number of men of property, not from the men or women who have nothing to give their country but their heart's blood, their lives—worth more than all the dollars of the affluent, all they possess—their own bodies, their own souls. Are we thinking of them? Upon them will fall the real trials and blood sacrifices. Or are we answering the call of those who seek intervention because of social attachments, international relationships, or financial obligations? I realize many are honest and sincerely believe that it would be a calamity to the world for the democracies of Europe, England and France, to fall in this great crisis. I do not hesitate to say that if this agitation from the men of property as against the men of no property continues in this country there will be developed a radical spirit which it will be very difficult to check. Many letters from men and women come to me from millionaires and multimillionaires, pleading with me in their communications to help to the limit the Allies. They are, or at least their organized leaders are, deceiving the public under the slogan "Aid to the Allies to the limit short of war." Mind you, I do not charge all who urge this as being willing, if necessary, to go to war, but certainly the leaders promoting this propaganda have in mind the developing of the war spirit.

Professor Elliott speaking at Harvard yesterday told the real story of what these leaders have subscribed to when he urged compulsory military training, and said:

> For myself, today more than ever, I ask, Why short of war?

What is meant by "short of war"? At least Professor Elliott knows what a cloak and misrepresentation it is of the real objective.

Does "Aid short of war" mean tapping to the limit the resources and productive capacity of private source here in America? To that we all subscribe. Or does "Aid short of war" mean giving away implements of defense, built and building—and imperatively needed for our own protection? Does "Aid short of war" mean that our Government should go half way into the war and then expect to stay half way out? Frankly, do not many of those who urge "Help the Allies short of war" mean what appears frequently in letters addressed to Senators, "Help the Allies by all means short of war—but even with war if necessary"? No letters from these advocates plead with Senators to desperately attempt to keep the youths of America from the slaughter pits of Europe.

Oh, the tragedy of it, that a powerful group of men of property should be challenging the peace desires of the millions of poor people who toil and labor and sacrifice and to whom war would compel them and their children for generations to come to eat the bread of poverty. Will the sons of the rich go into the trenches or will they go into the intelligence or commissary corps, where there is no real fighting? Who will bare their breasts in this fight but the plain people who have no personal friends in the Senate or in the House or in high position? I plead for them, that they be spared the awful horrors of war until it comes to our door. I protest the efforts and propaganda that is leading to their slaughter in a European war.

I repeat, the second obligation is of equal importance: Get ready, let us have speed, action, so that we will be ready if enemies are seeking to declare war upon us, an innocent people. They have not the excuse of a Versailles Treaty in warring upon us. I say, let us prepare; that is our real business.

I appreciate the fact that my fellow Senators and my countrymen have given me during the last few months the privilege and honor of shaping and forming and drafting measures to help expedite action so that we will have an impregnable navy.

If I have been sensitive and keen about the least interference with our defenses, it is because of two reasons: First, I want to have our defenses so complete and so powerful that they will prevent any violent-minded enemy from successfully attacking us; and, second, I do not want our forces deprived of one gun, or one bomb, or one ship which can aid that American boy whom you and I some day may have to draft. I want every instrument, I want every bomb, I want every shell, I want every plane, I want every boat ready and available, so that I can say when and if it becomes necessary to draft him, "Young man, you have every possible weapon of defense your Government can give you."

Excuse me; I have departed from the subject of this bill; but I thought perhaps it was an opportune time for me to express my views of what I think my country ought to do at this crisis.

If there are no questions, I will proceed to discuss the bill. Section 1 of this bill——

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	Lee	Schwartz
Andrews	Donahey	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Ashurst	Downey	Lucas	Sheppard
Austin	Ellender	Lundeen	Shipstead
Bailey	George	McCarran	Slattery
Bankhead	Gerry	McKellar	Smith
Barkley	Gillette	McNary	Taft
Bilbo	Green	Maloney	Thomas, Idaho
Bone	Guffey	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Bridges	Gurney	Miller	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Hale	Minton	Tobey
Bulow	Harrison	Murray	Townsend
Burke	Hatch	Neely	Truman
Byrd	Hayden	Norris	Tydings
Byrnes	Herring	Nye	Vandenberg
Capper	Hill	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys

Chavez	Hughes	Pittman	Wheeler
Clark, Idaho	Johnson, Calif.	Radcliffe	White
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Colo.	Reed	Wiley
Connally	King	Reynolds
Danaher	La Follette	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In the course of my colloquy with the able Senator from Massachusetts, I quoted from a statement made by Mr. Henry L. Stimson. In fairness to Mr. Stimson, I think the entire statement should be printed. I was reading from an editorial in the Wall Street Journal this morning, which, strange to say, comes to the conclusion, as to the gentleman who has just been recommended for Secretary of War, that—

> What Mr. Stimson advocates amounts to United States entrance into the war.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this editorial may be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks. Then I express the earnest hope, in fairness to Mr. Stimson, that before the Senate Military Affairs Committee acts upon his nomination it will call him before the committee, so that the Senate itself may have a full and authentic record as to precisely what his views are in respect to these desperately important matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorial will be printed in the RECORD.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal of June 21, 1940]

MR. STIMSON SHOULD NOT BE SECRETARY OF WAR

On Tuesday, June 18, two days before his nomination to be Secretary of War, Henry L. Stimson made a radio address entitled "America's Interest in the British Fleet." Here follows the text of the conclusion of Mr. Stimson's address as transcribed by the National Broadcasting Co., over which the speech was transmitted:

"To put the matter concretely my recommendation would be that the following steps should immediately be taken:

"1. We should repeal the provisions of our ill-starred so-called neutrality venture which has acted as a shackle to our true interests for over 5 years.

"2. We should throw open all of our ports to the British and French naval and merchant marine for all repairs and refueling and other services.

"3. We should accelerate by every means in our power the sending of planes and other munitions to Britain and France on a scale which would be effective; sending them if necessary in our own ships and under convoy.

"4. We should refrain from being fooled by the evident bluff of Hitler's so-called "fifth column" movements in South America. They are on the face of them attempts to frighten us from sending help where it will be most effective.

"5. In order to assist the home front of Britain's defense we should open our lands as a refuge for the children and old people of Britain whose liability to suffering from air raids in Great Britain is a constant inducement to surrender to terms which she would otherwise resist.

"6. We should, every one of us, combat the defeatist arguments which are being made in this country as to the unconquerable power of Germany. I believe that if we use our brains and curb our prejudices we can, by keeping command of the sea, beat her again as we did in 1918.

"Finally, we should at once adopt a system of universal compulsory training and service which would not only be the most potent evidence that we are in earnest but which is at the present moment imperative if we are to have men ready to operate the planes and other munitions, the creation of which Congress has just authorized by a practically unanimous vote.

"In these ways, and with the old American spirit of courage and leadership behind them, I believe we should find our people ready to take their proper part in this threatened world and carry through to victory, freedom, and reconstruction."

What Mr. Stimson advocates amounts to United States entrance into the war; the assumption of an active role as a belligerent.

We stoutly affirm Mr. Stimson's right to speak for any policy in which he believes. He is an experienced and able statesman, and his views deserve respect.

However, we believe that Mr. Stimson's views, insofar as they would lead us to war, are far out of line with what the majority of the American people want.

On that ground we hold that the Senate of the United States should refuse to confirm the nomination of Mr. Stimson as Secretary of War.

We believe that it would be a calamity to put Mr. Stimson in the position where he could open this country to the danger of participation in the war which the American people oppose.

We say this with full recognition of Mr. Stimson's unquestioned integrity and fine ability.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In the same connection, I greatly hope that the ex-Secretary of War, Mr. Woodring, will be requested to appear and testify, and to explain whether the Associated Press has correctly quoted him that the reason why he was forced to resign was—

Because he opposed "stripping our defenses to aid the Allies."

Mr. President, I think it would bear somewhat upon the nature and extent of the qualifications of Mr. Woodring's successor if the reason why the successor is chosen to fit certain specifications is that his predecessor was discharged for these reasons; and I express the hope that Mr. Woodring may also be a witness.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I desire to ask the Senator from Michigan if he does not think some of the questions posed in the Associated Press dispatch to which he has referred might be resolved if the White House were to see fit even to give out the letter of resignation of the ex-Secretary of War, which in ordinary course is done, and not hide behind the subterfuge that it is "too personal."

Mr. VANDENBERG. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. I desire to say to the Senator from Michigan that the Military Affairs Committee met this morning, and determined to have Colonel Stimson appear before the committee after the Republican convention, because that is the earliest time at which we can have in attendance the distinguished members of the committee who belong to that party.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me for a brief statement?

Mr. WALSH. If it is a brief one.

Mr. PEPPER. The chairman of the committee, instead of explaining the bill, made a fundamental declaration of policy, and I should like a brief opportunity to reply to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Florida for that purpose?

Mr. WALSH. My speech was the result of the declaration of military policy made by the Senator from Florida. He first opened the discussion of the subject.

I really should like to dispose of the bill; yet I do not want to be discourteous to the Senator. When the bill is open to discussion the Senator will have an opportunity to speak. It is not now open to discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor, and apparently declines to yield.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Florida, of course, has a right to take the floor when the first amendment is under discussion. Before I yield, I ask to have printed in the RECORD, in connection with my remarks, part of a speech delivered by A. Frank Reel, a Boston attorney, at the Thirty-sixth Annual Convention of the Maine State Federation of Labor at Portland, Maine, on June 13 of this year, on the subject Labor's Duty Is To Help Keep Us Out of War. In my opinion it is such an admirable address that I should like to have part of it printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the part of the address will be printed in the RECORD in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The part of the address referred to is as follows:

LABOR'S DUTY IS TO HELP KEEP US OUT OF WAR

If I were smart, I'd stop here; I'd give you a pretty peroration and sit down. And you would applaud and say, "There's a friend of ours. He's a good labor lawyer. We'd better get in touch with him to help us on our legal problems." If I were smart, I wouldn't say what I'm going to say, because it's not the popular thing and it runs counter to the hysteria of the moment.

But I can't talk about labor's future and not talk about the war. And I'm not smart, because I feel this thing too deeply. When I speak to you now I speak not merely as a labor lawyer, not merely as one who loves the labor movement and works passionately for its success, but I speak to you as a young man, single, free, untrammeled, physically fit—in short, grade A cannon fodder, even as are so many of you or so many of your sons. That's why I think I have a right to speak to you as I shall.

Labor's first duty is to help us keep out of the war in Europe in the event that it continues much longer. Today we are deluged with propaganda—radio, press, pulpit—urging us to all steps "short of war" to "defend America by aiding the Allies," etc. That's all very well, providing, of course, we realize that if we keep on taking step after step toward the shore line, we're bound to get our feet wet. The voices I'm talking about are those that are urging us to declare war on Germany and Italy. And those voices grow in number and intensity every day, and their sound will swell to a roar if and when the Nazis invade England.

Perhaps one of my troubles is that while I'm young enough to be a soldier, I'm not so young that I can't remember the last war. Ever since Abraham Lincoln immortalized the phrase in his Gettysburg address, we Americans have imbued our consciousness with the desire to feel about those who have died wearing our uniform that "these dead have not died in vain." And yet, as we ask the question about those thousands of American boys who fell in 1917 and 1918, is there any doubt as to the answer? Horrible though the thought may be, are we not now forced to say: "They did die in vain?"—they died in vain.

Why did they die? Why did we go into that last war? We still don't know, but we do remember the reasons that were given us. Did those soldiers die to save the world for democracy? Then they died in vain, for the world has seen less democracy in the past 10 years than at any time in the last ten decades. Did they die so that their war might end all war? Horrible mockery—and of course, in vain. Or did I hear President Conant of Harvard say: "Let's forget the 'moral issue' and remember only the 'realistic appraisal' "? All right. Did they die to save France and England? Then who can say that their death was justified, for if we had not gone into the last war and even if the Kaiser had won, wouldn't France and England be better off than they are today? Or did those boys die to prevent an eventual invasion of America to save the Western Hemisphere from rule by the Kaiser's son? Then glance at our $5,000,000,000 defense program, and know that even if that was the reason, they died in vain. No, we must realize, first, that there is hardly a man of intelligence in the United States today who will not admit that our entry into the first World War in 1917, with all of Woodrow Wilson's sincere idealism, was a stupid and ghastly mistake.

I do not say that the issues of this war are exactly the same to the belligerents as they were in the last war, but I do say that rather than join in a hysterical chorus, it is well for us to realize that the arguments being fed to the American people in favor of our entry into the war bear a striking resemblance to fevered talk of the first 3 months of 1917.

Practically all of us want to see Hitler and Mussolini defeated. Almost all of us would rather see the Allies win than to let the dictators triumph in any manner. Personally, I hate Hitler and Mussolini and everything they stand for, and Heaven knows I have as much reason to hate them and their vicious systems as any American who ever lived. Yet I know that Hitler and Mussolini are not accidents. And I know that the world's present horror does not exist merely because a certain bad man moved from Austria into Germany a few years ago.

I believe that Adolf Hitler—more than any one man—is responsible for this terrible war. But if you ask me to look back—not 5 years—but 10 years—and to tell you who is responsible for Hitler, then I say the blame must be shared by the other side in this conflict. And that brings us back to the end of the last war—and to the probable end of this one, no matter who wins. For this world has not learned what it should have learned—that you cannot grind down and exterminate a strong people—whether they be Englishmen or Frenchmen or Germans—or Americans. You can drive them far, but do not be surprised if, in their desperation they give up their freedom and their destiny to a maniacal gangster.

I know that you men and women of labor reflect as much as any other group in the country the so-called change in sentiment that has come over the American people in the last few months. But why have we changed our minds? Last fall, after the war had started and after the invasion of Poland, the United States Congress strengthened our Neutrality Act by insisting on "cash and carry." There was no doubt about our repeated insistence on neutrality, and the fact that we would not go to war in Europe. What has happened since then to make us change our minds? Is there a moral reason for a change of heart? Hitler marched into Denmark, Norway, Holland, and Belgium, but these invasions were war. Hitler's crimes were committed long before war strategy directed his movements; they were committed before "cash and carry" became law. The invasion of the neutral countries this spring was frightful—but it is war—and war is hell. War means that you must kill or you will be killed—and it's not a football game that is to be played according to pretty rules. Millions of innocent people are tortured—on the other side—to save your own side. Bombs are more dramatic, but no less frightful than starvation. The Allies were fighting what they call a "war of attrition," and that means starving every man, woman, and baby in Germany; there is no "evacuation" from starvation "objectives." Make no mistake, if we go to war we're going out to try to kill—by slow horrible starvation—every man, woman, and baby in Germany and in Italy because that's the kind of bloody business that war is.

And so I say that when we analyze this "change in sentiment" we'd better realize that it's not on any moral basis. We're afraid. We're afraid Germany will win and come over here. There is reason for that fear, and so we are preparing to defend ourselves. That is as it should be. We're all in favor of the defense program. You and I would fight and die to defend America. But let's stick to defense, and let's not get hysterical.

Let me read you a few sensible lines from an editorial in yesterday's Boston Globe:

"On this earth in the year which we reckon as 1940 the creature called man has got hold of scientific forces, perhaps prematurely, which he applies through machines. These machines can create wealth and they can destroy life, which means that they can be utilized to seize the wealth already acquired by other peoples, and this is exactly what is happening—a melee among the mechanized nations for the possession of wealth and power. Mussolini as good as said so 48 hours ago when he pushed Italy into the meat grinder.

"In all this there is nothing new; it has happened often; it has been foreseen and predicted, even to the present situation of the two hungry Fascist powers attempting to plunder two big empires, the British and French.

"Alarm, which is just now very vocal, raises a practical question, whether the apparent danger were better warded off by our fighting in Europe (as we have done within a generation) or by guarding well our own hemisphere."

The editorial writer and I both say that the answer should unequivocably be the defense of our hemisphere. It is a big job, but America has never known the meaning of the word "impossible." Let there be a coalition of victorious dictators; let them even solve the problem of trying to subjugate unwilling and starving peoples; let them manage to restore their spent and wasted resources; let them cross 3,000 miles of water; give them all of these miracles; they still will find here a Nation of 140,000,000 free men, the greatest mechanics in the world, unlimited food and fuel, and a determination to keep the Americas safe for democracy.

This is labor's job—not only to prepare physical defense, but to prepare moral defense, to rebuild and strengthen our democracy. That means more labor-union members—not less. It means higher standards of living, less unemployment, a more even distribution of wealth. Yes, it means watching out for and driving out "fifth columnists." We despise "fifth columnists" because they are people whose first love is for some other country. The Communists, for instance, think first of all of Russia and follow its orders. If there ever were any doubt about that, it was dispelled when they changed their "line" coincident with the signing of the Hitler-Stalin pact, and overnight stopped shouting for "collective security" with the great democracies and adopted a spurious isolationism that will shift back again if and when Stalin signs up with Sir Stafford Cripps. The same is true of our local Nazis—whose first love is Germany. But just as dangerous, because far less obvious, is the "fifth columnist" whose allegiance runs first to the Union Jack.

I know and studied under some of the Harvard professors who have of late been sounding off in public urging us to declare war on Germany, and who, from the safety of their academic chairs, have already been questioning the courage of any inquiring student. These men live much of their lives in England; they vacation there, they teach there, and it is quite understandable that they regard an invasion of Britain with almost as much distaste as they would an invasion of the State of Maine, whereas an occupation of Ethiopia or China or Finland arouses only their pity.

Along with these "fifth columnists," go the traitors who under guise of promoting national unity, would sabotage the social gains of the New Deal—and those who impugn the patriotism of anyone who dares to fight for better living standards. These are dangerous men, for their words over the radio and in the press carry the authority due learned patriots. As Professor Zipf pointed out in a recent letter to a Boston newspaper, "The original Trojan horse that doomed Troy did not goose-step through the gates, but entered as a holy, sanctimonious offering to the gods."

Discontent is the dung that fertilizes American fields for the "fifth columns." We must defend America by aiding the Americans.

Let us remember that it is one thing to fight negatively against dictators whom we hate; it is another thing to fight affirmatively in defense of that which we love—a happy homeland and a free people. If the time must come when you and I will offer our lives in defense of these shores, I pray that it will not be in defense of a land where one-third of the people are kept ill-clad, ill-housed, and ill-fed, where ten millions of them are unable to find work, where mobs burn homes and lynch human beings, but that it will be in defense of a people who have realized the dream of Thomas Jefferson and who have justified the faith of Abraham Lincoln. That will be the future of which "the patriot's dream—who see beyond the years"—when our "alabaster cities gleam—undimmed by human tears." Perhaps when that dawn breaks our successful democracy will cast a light so dazzling that it will open the clouded eyes of those who follow the dictators. Then weary mankind will lay down its arms, really beat its swords into plowshares, and once again will start the slow upward climb toward a true Christianity.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from New York. Then I will yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. MEAD. I am very much interested in the bill which is before us, and particularly the portion of it on page 4, lines 6 to 19. I ask the able chairman of the committee if those provisions limit to 7 percent the profit in the manufacture of airplanes and airplane parts.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the question is an involved one. I have a substitute for those provisions which I am going to offer. In brief, though, an attempt is made in the bill to limit profits to 7 percent. I assume the Senator has no objection to that.

Mr. MEAD. I should like to have this idea considered in connection with that limitation:

In the manufacture of airplanes and airplane parts a tremendous outlay of money is necessary in the expansion, the development, the experimentation, and the engineering costs. If those costs are to be considered, and then if the higher tax imposts are to be levied, and then if 7 percent is to be the outside margin of profit, it will be most difficult for us to attract capital into the production of airplanes.

For instance, take the case of a manufacturer in my home district: In the engineering and experimentation in connection with a new model, the company spent $800,000. If we consider that outlay—and it is continuous and continuing in connection with all new models, and must be encouraged, because the airplane models of 1936 and 1937 would not be worth anything in a war in 1940—and then if we consider, in addition to that toll, the higher taxes contained in the tax bill which we have just passed, together with the fact that the manufacturers are limited in the competition for contracts—some of the contracts, I understand, are competitive, and some are negotiated—I am a little bit fearful that we shall cut the margin so thin as to retard rather than to expedite the mass production of planes.

I am not interested in profits. I am not concerned with the manufacturers even making 7 percent. I am vitally concerned in the first place in the production of planes sufficient for our national defense; and I was wondering if the committee had that matter in mind.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, it would take from 10 to 20 minutes to explain those provisions. If the Senator wants me to do it now, I will; but I am anxious to do the courtesy of yielding to the Senator from Florida. I wish the Senator from New York would wait until we come to that part of the bill. It is quite an involved problem. There are in the bill three methods of contracting for airplanes, and there is a different measure on the profits of each method.

Mr. MEAD. Very well. I shall be very glad to wait until the Senator comes to that point in the bill. I will conclude by saying that I am interested only in the mass production of planes for our defense.

Mr. WALSH. I now yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The parliamentary inquiry is prompted by the fact that for some time I presided over the Senate when the Senator from Massachusetts was ably explaining this bill and being very courteous to Senators. I happen to know that there are other Senators who have important and some of them privileged matters which they desire to have taken up.

The question is, May the Senator from Massachusetts yield to another Senator for the purpose of making a statement, or for the purpose of making a speech, as has been done quite frequently throughout the day?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The parliamentary rule, as all Senators well know, is that a Senator may not yield the floor except for a question; but it is a rule more honored in the breach than in the observance. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator that with an amendment pending, any Senator has a right to the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. It is quite correct that with an amendment pending any Senator has a right to the floor; but has any Senator requested the floor from the Senator from Massachusetts in his own right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No Senator has been recognized except the Senator from Massachusetts, who still has the floor. The question is upon agreeing to the first amendment to the bill which is before the Senate.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator intends to yield the floor, I desire to be recognized on a privileged matter.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. I must yield on a privileged matter, as I understand the parliamentary rules.

Mr. TRUMAN. I have a privileged matter which I desire to have brought up.

Mr. WALSH. I yield, if it is a privileged matter.

ALTERATION OF CERTAIN BRIDGES OVER NAVIGABLE WATERS—VETO MESSAGE

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, there is a veto message on the table which I desire to bring up. It relates to House bill 9381.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States to the House of Representatives, and a message from the House relative thereto, which were read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, H. R. 9381, a bill to provide for the alteration of certain bridges over navigable waters of the United States, for the apportionment of the cost of such alterations between the United States and the owners of such bridges, and for other purposes.

The bill contains a number of provisions that are very similar to some of those in the General Bridge Act of March 23, 1906 (34 Stat. 84). However, it would establish a new policy by which the United States would be required to bear a portion of the cost of alterations or changes in bridges over navigable waters used and operated for the purpose of carrying railroad traffic, or both railroad and highway traffic, where such alterations or changes are found to be necessary by the Secretary of War for free and unobstructed navigation. Under the new policy which the bill proposes, the bridge owner would be required to bear only such part of the cost of such alterations or changes as may be attributable to the direct and special benefits which will accrue to him, as determined by the Secretary of War; and the United States would be required to bear the remainder of such cost. The provisions of the bill are substantially the same as those contained in S. 1989 from which I withheld my approval on August 11, 1939.

As was stated in my memorandum of disapproval of S. 1989, the General Bridge Act of March 23, 1906, authorizes the Secretary of War to require the alteration of any bridge which, in his opinion, may at any time unreasonably obstruct navigation, the cost of such alteration to be borne entirely by the owner. This has been a condition precedent to the construction of bridges over the navigable waters of the United States and the owners are fully apprised of the condition before the construction work is undertaken. The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that where a bridge is an unreasonable obstruction to navigation, the removal of such obstruction may be required without compensation from the United States, and such removal cannot be regarded as a taking of private property within the meaning of the Constitution. To require the Federal Government to pay the cost of alterations which do not directly benefit the bridge owners would impose upon it heavy financial liabilities. It is the duty of the Government to preserve and protect the navigability of our navigable waters, and when any person, association, corporation, or other body is authorized to build a structure over any such stream, the United States should not be required to bear any part of the cost of alterations which are necessary to avoid obstructions to navigation.

I am, therefore, returning the bill, H. R. 9381, without my approval, as it does not appear that any adequate reason exists for imposing upon the Federal Government the additional burdens which the bill proposes.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 10, 1940.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 19, 1940.

The House of Representatives having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 9381) to provide for the alteration of certain bridges over navigable waters of the United States, for the apportionment of the cost of such alterations between the United States and the owners of such bridges, and for other purposes, returned by the President of the United States with his objections, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, it was Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. TRUMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I think this matter is of sufficient importance that we should have a quorum present, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield for that purpose?

Mr. TRUMAN. I expect to call for a quorum before the vote is taken. I should like to make a statement of the situation before the Senator asks for a quorum.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I think this matter is of such importance that I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. TRUMAN. I do not yield for that purpose at the present time.

Mr. DANAHER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DANAHER. Is not the suggestion of the absence of a quorum in order at any time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; it cannot take a Senator off his feet.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, this is a matter which has been under consideration by this body for 2 years. Last year the Committee on Commerce of the Senate held elaborate hearings on a bill identical with that which has been vetoed. It passed the Senate by a unanimous vote after the report of the Committee on Commerce. It passed the House under the same conditions. The President vetoed the bill at the end of the session last year. It was reintroduced this year in the House of Representatives. I made a special call upon the President one Sunday at his request, and went into the details of his objections, and thought they had all been met. I sent the following letter to the House committee:

> While I may not, because of the rule of protocol against quoting the President as to exactly what he said to me, yet I can with propriety certify the clear understanding I gained from a personal interview with him. Therefore, I certify that House bill 9381 is in complete and perfect accord with my clear understanding, so gained, of just what the President wanted in this matter.

Mr. President, this is a part of the transportation policy laid down by the President's Committee of Six and Committee of Three which went into the whole railroad problem. It was included in the omnibus railroad bill which the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and I refused to introduce. That bill was divided up into four or five parts, one of which this is.

When, in the interest of navigation, a bridge owner is required to rebuild or widen or heighten a bridge over a navigable stream, the bill requires the Federal Government to pay that part of the benefit which does not affect the owner of the bridge. The owner of the bridge is to pay all the rest of the charge against him for the benefit he may receive. If he does not receive certain benefits, then the Federal Government has to pay those benefits. If it is a new bridge, he has to pay the whole cost. If it is an obsolete bridge, one which has to be replaced in the interest of the owner, he has to pay the whole cost. It is only if a bridge owner is required to replace a bridge in the interest of navigation that the bill would apply.

I think this is an eminently fair measure. I think it is in shape so that the interests of the general public are amply protected. I do not desire to take up too much time of the Senate. If Senators will read the complete statement on the subject by Mr. LEA, chairman of the House committee, found at page 8647 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, they will find that it covers every detail in regard to the bill.

I sincerely hope the Senate will vote to override the veto of the President.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I rise to support the position taken by the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN]. This bill is an eminently fair and equitable measure. The Government of the United States, which means the people of the United States, does own navigable waters. When a bridge is erected across a navigable stream, or any other navigable water, permission must be obtained to erect it. After the bridge has been built, if it is sufficient for the purposes of the builder, and there comes a change for some other reason other than the builder's reason, there is no equity in requiring the original builder of the bridge, if it is still safe, and if it is still adequate, to meet the costs of the change.

For example, it has been suggested that the so-called long bridge across the Potomac River here be raised several feet, wholly for scenic purposes. There is no substantial navigation there, although the Potomac is a navigable stream. The railroads find that bridge adequate for their use. Should they be required to pay the expenses of raising a bridge which is perfectly adequate for their purpose, the raising of which does not affect them a particle?

Mr. President, that is all there is to the bill. It has been before the committee for 2 years, as the junior Senator from Missouri has stated. It has been unanimously approved by the committee. It unanimously passed this body. The War Department made some objections which caused the President to veto the bill last year, and before the bill was passed this year every effort was made, and it was thought successfully, to meet the objections the President had raised.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator be good enough to answer a question or two merely for information? My first inquiry is as to the present law. Suppose a bridge were erected over a navigable stream with the consent of Congress. Could the War Department order the raising of that bridge, and, if so, could it throw the entire cost upon the owners of the bridge, under the present law?

Mr. REED. I wish I could give a complete answer to the distinguished Senator from Colorado as to the status under the present law, but I fear I cannot.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the General Bridge Act of 1906, the Secretary of War, if a bridge turns out to be an obstruction to navigation, may require its reconstruction or removal, the entire cost to be placed on the owner.

Mr. ADAMS. Suppose a bridge had been built 30 or 40 or 50 years ago, and then, by reason of changes in the character of the use of the stream; that is, for instance, suppose there had been a navigation development, the owner of the bridge would, under the bill, be paid if he were required to adapt the bridge to the changed conditions?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct. I may say to the Senator that the act of 1906 was passed upon by the Supreme Court, which held that it was not a taking of property to require the removal or reconstruction of the bridge at the entire cost of the owner.

Mr. ADAMS. That is, that a crossing by a bridge is merely a revocable license, I assume.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I think that is practically the case. Of course, bridges cannot be built over navigable streams without the consent of Congress and in pursuance of plans approved by the Secretary of War.

As to the Senator's question about the change in the use of the stream for navigation purposes, I think it is probably true that, with some few exceptions in certain sections of the country, the navigation of these streams has declined very largely; I mean the type of boats that used to go down the rivers and under these bridges has in many cases been entirely eliminated, and in some cases certainly lessened.

So, taking the country as a whole, and the navigable streams as a whole, certainly the inland streams, I should venture the suggestion that there is much less traffic likely to be interfered with by a bridge than there was 30, 40, or 50 years ago.

Mr. ADAMS. What is the formula for the apportionment of the cost under this bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. The formula is rather indefinite. I think the Secretary of War——

Mr. TRUMAN. May I read the formula?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. TRUMAN. The bridge owner must pay—

> 1. For direct and special benefits to him;
> 2. For any benefits he receives due to a saving in the repair of the bridge, old or new;
> 3. For the maintenance cost of the bridge;
> 4. He must pay that part of the cost attributable to the requirements of traffic by rail or highway.

Mr. ADAMS. Who determines the apportionment of the cost?

Mr. TRUMAN. The Secretary of War.

Mr. ADAMS. Is the finding of the Secretary of War subject to review?

Mr. TRUMAN. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the act provide for a review?

Mr. TRUMAN. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator have any idea as to what would be a practical and accurate apportionment of the cost?

Mr. TRUMAN. I have not. There has been no estimate made of that situation because it depends altogether on the size of the bridge and what is to be done about it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I rise only to add, in support of the junior Senator from Missouri, that there is no partisan division in connection with this matter. It is not a matter of politics. It is only a matter of equity in adjusting the present bridge conditions to the present time, and permitting improvements to be made, but not requiring the cost of improvements to be made solely at the expense of the bridge owner when the bridge owner is in nowise interested and receives no benefit.

I think the President, in vetoing the bill, was governed by advice from subordinates who were not sufficiently informed. The House very promptly passed the bill over his veto. I hope the Senate may do the same thing.

Mr. DANAHER. I wish to suggest the absence of a quorum before we proceed to the vote.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his point of no quorum for a moment?

Mr. DANAHER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish merely to make a short statement. The measure is similar to a bill the President has heretofore vetoed on the ground that it will involve an obligation which is indefinite, of course, on the part of the United States, to pay a very large part of the expenses of remodeling or reconstructing railroad bridges over the navigable streams of the United States. I am not making this statement in order to influence any Senator. I make it merely to explain my own vote, and other Senators may take such attitude as they think wise.

Ever since 1906 we have been operating under the law to which reference was made a moment ago by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS]. My information is from what I regard as authentic sources—although I imagine it is an estimate—that the passage of this bill would involve an annual cost of $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 to the United States.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TRUMAN. The total expenditure for razing and changing bridges over navigable streams since 1906 has been $48,000,000. It is estimated that the Federal Government's share of the cost would be about $10,000,000. Such changes may not be made again in 10 or 15 years. I think it is an equitable arrangement.

Mr. BARKLEY. No one knows in what condition these bridges are or how many of them would have to be removed or reconstructed over a period of years. It may be that many of them are on the verge of needing reconstruction now, regardless of their effect on the navigability of streams. Anyway, it is speculative. No one can be accurate as to how much it will cost. But the speculative estimate, I might say, from an authority that I regard as at least entitled to considerable weight would be an average of $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 a year. I do not know whether or not that estimate is correct.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TRUMAN. I think that is entirely out of line. The only two bridges in contemplation which I know anything about are one in Alabama and one at Sabine Pass in Texas.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no information about those bridges, and I do not know how many would need attention now or in the future, but, for the reasons I have expressed and for the reason that the President has twice vetoed these bills, and that we have no very accurate information as to how much it might cost per year over an indefinite period, I do not feel that I can vote to override the veto at present.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to withdraw my suggestion of no quorum. The Senator from Vermont assures me that a roll call will be asked for anyway on this particular matter, and it is agreeable to me to withdraw my suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the suggestion of the absence of a quorum is withdrawn.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a yea-and-nay vote is required. The Constitution provides for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. A yea-and-nay vote on the question is required.

Mr. AUSTIN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Was consent given to the withdrawal of the suggestion of the absence of a quorum?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States notwithstanding?

Under the Constitution the yeas and nays must be ordered, so the Chair directs the clerk to call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART]. I am advised that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] is detained in one of the Government departments on matters pertaining to his State.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senators from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS and Mr. SLATTERY], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] are necessarily absent.

Mr. McKELLAR. My colleague [Mr. STEWART] is detained on important public business. I am advised that if present and voting he would vote "yea." He has been unable to secure a special pair.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS] has been called from the Senate on official business. If present, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] is absent on official duties.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is necessarily absent on the business of the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 65, nays 17, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote the yeas are 65 and the nays are 17. Two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative, the bill (H. R. 9381) is passed, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10055) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. TAYLOR, Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. LUDLOW, Mr. SNYDER, Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia, Mr. TABER, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, Mr. LAMBERTSON, and Mr. DITTER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

STRENGTHENING OF THE NATIONAL DEFENSE—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted the following report, which was ordered to lie on the table.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9850) to expedite the strengthening of the national defense, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That (a) in order to expedite the building up of the national defense, the Secretary of War is authorized, out of the moneys appropriated for the War Department for national defense purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, with or without advertising, (1) to provide for the necessary construction, rehabilitation, conversion, and installation at military posts, depots, stations, or other localities, of plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto (including Government-owned facilities at privately-owned plants and the expansion of such plants, and the acquisition of such land, and the purchase or lease of such structures, as may be necessary), for the development, manufacture, maintenance, and storage of military equipment, munitions, and supplies, and for shelter; (2) to provide for the development, purchase, manufacture, shipment, maintenance, and storage of military equipment, munitions, and supplies, and for shelter, at such places and under such conditions as he may deem necessary; and (3) to enter into such contracts (including contracts for educational orders, and for the exchange of deteriorated, unserviceable, obsolescent, or surplus military equipment, munitions, and supplies for other military equipment, munitions, and supplies of which there is a shortage), and to amend or supplement such existing contracts, as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes specified in this section: Provided, That the limitations contained in sections 1136 and 3734 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, and any statutory limitation with respect to the cost of any individual project of construction, shall be suspended until and including June 30, 1942, with respect to any construction authorized by this Act: Provided further, That no contract entered into pursuant to the provisions of this section which would otherwise be subject to the provisions of the Act entitled "An Act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes", approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 41, secs. 35–45), shall be exempt from the provisions of such Act solely because of being entered into without advertising pursuant to the provisions of this section: Provided further, That the cost-plus-a-percentage-of-cost system of contracting shall not be used under this section; but this proviso shall not be construed to prohibit the use of the cost-plus-a-fixed-fee form of contract when such use is deemed necessary by the Secretary of War.

"(b) The Secretary of War is further authorized, with or without advertising, to provide for the operation and maintenance of any plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto constructed pursuant to the authorizations contained in this section and section 5, either by means of Government personnel or through the agency of selected qualified commercial manufacturers under contracts entered into with them, and, when he deems it necessary in the interest of the national defense, to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of, any such plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, appurtenances thereto, and land, under such terms and conditions as he may deem advisable, and without regard to the provisions of section 321 of the Act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412).

"(c) Whenever, prior to July 1, 1942, the Secretary of War deems it necessary in the interest of the national defense, he is authorized, from appropriations available therefor, to advance payments to contractors for supplies or construction for the War Department in amounts not exceeding 30 per centum of the contract price of such supplies or construction. Such advances shall be made upon such terms and conditions and with such adequate security as the Secretary of War shall prescribe.

"SEC. 2. (a) During the fiscal year 1941, all existing limitations with respect to the number of flying cadets in the Army Air Corps, and with respect to the number and rank of Reserve Air Corps officers who may be ordered to extended active duty with the Air Corps, shall be suspended.

"(b) The President may, during the fiscal year 1941, assign officers and enlisted men to the various branches of the Army in such numbers as he considers necessary, irrespective of the limitations on the strength of any particular branch of the Army set forth in the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended: Provided, That no Negro because of race shall be excluded from enlistment in the Army for service with colored military units now organized or to be organized for such service.

"SEC. 3. All existing limitations with respect to the number of serviceable airplanes, airships, and free and captive balloons that may be equipped and maintained, shall be suspended during the fiscal year 1941.

"SEC. 4. (a) The Secretary of War is further authorized to employ such additional personnel at the seat of government and elsewhere, and to provide for such printing and binding, communication service, supplies, and travel expenses, as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act: Provided, That until December 31, 1941, the Secretary of War may, if he finds it to be necessary for national defense purposes, authorize the employment of supervising or construction engineers without regard to the requirements of civil service laws, rules, or regulations: Provided further, That notwithstanding the provisions of section 6 of the Act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 555; U. S. C., title 5, sec. 652), the Secretary of War may remove from the classified civil service of the United States any employee of the Military Establishment forthwith upon a finding that such person has been guilty of conduct inimical to the public interest in the defense program of the United States and upon the giving of notice to such person of such charges: And provided further, That within thirty days after such removal such person shall have an opportunity personally to answer such charges in writing and to submit affidavits in support of such answer.

"(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, the regular working hours of laborers and mechanics employed by the War Department, who are engaged in the manufacture or production of military equipment, munitions, or supplies shall be eight hours per day or forty hours per week during the period of any national emergency declared by the President to exist: Provided, That under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, such hours may be exceeded, but compensation for employment in excess of forty hours in any work week, computed at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate, shall be paid to such laborers and mechanics.

"SEC. 5. The President is authorized, with or without advertising, through the appropriate agencies of the Government (1) to provide for emergencies affecting the national security and defense and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including all of the objects and purposes specified under any appropriation available or to be made available to the War Department for the fiscal years 1940 and 1941, (2) to provide for the furnishing of Government-owned facilities at privately owned plants, (3) to provide for the procurement and training of civilian personnel necessary in connection with the protection of critical and essential items of equipment and material and the use or operation thereof, and (4) to provide for the procurement of strategic and critical materials in accordance with the Act of June 7, 1939, but the aggregate amount to be used by the President for all such purposes shall not exceed $66,000,000. The President is further authorized, through such agencies, to enter into contracts for such purposes in an aggregate amount not exceeding $66,000,000. An account shall be kept of all expenditures made or authorized under this section, and a report thereon shall be submitted to the Congress at the beginning of each session subsequent to the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress: Provided, That no contract entered into pursuant to the provisions of this section which would otherwise be subject to the provisions of the act entitled "An Act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes", approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 41, secs. 35–45), shall be exempt from the provisions of such Act solely because of being entered into without advertising pursuant to the provisions of this section.

"SEC. 6. Whenever the President determines that it is necessary in the interest of national defense to prohibit or curtail the exportation of any military equipment or munitions, or component parts thereof, or machinery, tools, or material or supplies necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation thereof, he may by proclamation prohibit or curtail such exportation, except under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe. Any such proclamation shall describe the articles or materials included in the prohibition or curtailment contained therein. In case of the violation of any provision of any proclamation, or of any rule or regulation, issued hereunder, such violator or violators, upon conviction, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment. The authority granted in this section shall terminate June 30, 1942, unless the Congress shall otherwise provide."

And the Senate agree to the same.

EXPEDITION IN NAVAL SHIPBUILDING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9822) to expedite naval shipbuilding, and for other purposes.

AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, no one could have been within hearing of the debate which has transpired in this Chamber since 11 o'clock this morning without feeling within him a tremendous degree of revulsion. No one could listen to so authentic a revelation of facts as came from the lips of the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee without feeling—yea; without knowing—that this thing which we call our democracy has become quite as nothing, in the name of an emergency declared by a single American citizen.

As we listen to revelations of sales in violation of the spirit of the law, we listen to those who seem to leave the responsibility for such actions upon the doorstep of some admiral in the Navy, some general in the Army, or some member of the Cabinet, when the responsibility and the penalty—if penalty there is to be for violation of law—belongs upon one pair of shoulders alone—the shoulders of the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States.

Let us be frank with ourselves. Any admiral, general, or member of the Cabinet who would not do what is being demanded in support of the foreign policy which has been laid down by the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief, would have happen to him precisely what happened yesterday to the Secretary of War, Harry Woodring, one of the few individuals in this Government to whom it has been grand to be able to tie during the more recent months—one who has had the temerity to stand out against the trend and to save for our own country what it had in the way of national defense.

We know what happened to the Secretary of War. We cannot, of course, yet know what immediate emergency occasioned his resignation, but if the letter of resignation written by the Secretary of War yesterday ever becomes public property, as it should, we shall know a little more of why he was required to resign—why he was forced to resign. There is some little evidence of reason to be found in this morning's newspapers. The Washington Post prints on its front page a dispatch from Topeka, Kans., under date of June 20, by the Associated Press, under the headline:

Forced out for trying to save defenses, Woodring is quoted.

The dispatch reads:

TOPEKA, KANS., June 20.—The Capital said tonight that Harry H. Woodring told friends in Topeka 3 weeks ago a "small clique of international financiers" was seeking to force him out as Secretary of War because he opposed "stripping our defenses to aid the Allies."

The Cabinet officer, who resigned suddenly today to make way for President Roosevelt's appointment of Henry L. Stimson, a Republican, made his assertion June 1 after his arrival to receive an honorary degree from Washburn College, the paper said.

It added that Woodring asked that the statement not be published until after his resignation.

Now, quoting Mr. Woodring:

"I'm an advocate of adequate defense, but I will never stand for sending American boys into Europe's shambles," the former Kansas Governor was quoted. "There is a comparatively small clique of international financiers who want the United States to declare war and get into the European mess with everything we have, including our manpower.

"I'm not going to stand for it, and I'm not going to resign until forced to do so.

"They don't like me because I'm against stripping our own defenses for the sake of trying to stop Hitler 3,000 miles away. Eventually they will force me to resign, and I'll be darned glad to come back to Kansas, where the people have their feet on the ground and are not easily swayed by demagogues and subtle propaganda."

Then in parentheses:

(The White House yesterday declined to make public Woodring's letter of resignation, declaring it was "too personal.")

Of one thing I am absolutely confident, namely, that letter of resignation recited what, in effect, is reported in this dispatch from Topeka, Kans.; and, Mr. President, when the Military Affairs Committee of this body conducts its hearings upon the candidate whose nomination has been sent here to fill Mr. Woodring's place, I shall be much surprised if Mr. Woodring and his staff, placed upon the stand and asked the proper questions, do not reveal that, among other things, the Secretary of War has been required or asked to accomplish is the surrender of national defense secret No. 1, that all-valuable bomb sight, which every Member of the Senate for months has been assured was being guarded with the utmost secrecy.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I wonder if it is safe to assume that in the small clique of these international bankers there would be found Mr. Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury. Perhaps his guide and mentor would be Bernard M. Baruch?

Mr. NYE. It does not matter particularly who is found there. If it be Mr. Morgenthau, it should be remembered by us all that Mr. Morgenthau is only doing what the Commander in Chief has asked and required him to do. I am sure that the President of the United States will not run away from a responsibility which is his simply because it may ultimately be found that an ambassador of his choosing or a Cabinet member of his choosing has done things that finally are proved to be unpopular. But I am sick and tired of listening to attempts to place the blame upon officers in the Army and in the Navy who have only been doing what the Commander in Chief required them to do.

I share the sentiment of those who have so eloquently portrayed the need for national unity, and I will go the full route in the accomplishment of national unity if by it is meant national unity for the security and safety of these United States of America; but if "national unity" means that every one of us must stand by and support the very definite policy of this administration of intervention in Europe's war, then, I say there will not be any so-called national unity.

It is also said, with great force and conviction, that we must not permit politics to play any part in our consideration in these hours. No, not as respects national defense and national security, but if there be politicians in this country who are going to make intervention the American policy, then, I say others are entitled to speak upon that subject, even though it be a political issue.

There is not, of course, any politics in the appointment of the two gentlemen who were recently named to the Cabinet of the President of the United States. Two or three months ago there was talk of the possibility of the appointment of Colonel Knox. The appointment, I presume, was not made then because it might have been considered political. The appointment was delayed until the opening of the Republican national convention, to avoid there being any ground whatsoever for a charge that there was a political consideration involved in these appointments.

I want to join, Mr. President, with those who have already given notice of their determination to give battle to the confirmation of these particular appointments when confirmation is asked of the Senate, and, so that the record may be very clear in that regard, I desire to repeat the suggestion I have already made, that the Military Affairs Committee not overlook its duty, its responsibility, of calling the retiring Secretary of War, and, if need be, the General Staff of the Army, to ascertain whether or not the resignation of Secretary Woodring is not directly traceable to his refusal to append his signature to orders surrendering some more of our national-defense preparation, and, specifically, as to whether or not this great secret of our Military Establishment, the bomb sight, was not involved in that consideration.

Mr. President, I do not care about the political tinge, or the political label of Mr. Knox or of Mr. Stimson. Let them be Republicans or let them be Democrats. At this moment that is not a consideration that I care a hang about; but I do care that in an hour such as this there have been sent here the names of two men for places in the Cabinet of the President of the United States, the two most important military stations, the names of two men who are avowed interventionists, the names of two men whose utterances have been so definitely and directly in support of American pursuit of a policy that might most readily land us in the middle of the European war. We do have a right, Mr. President, to be concerned about those appointments. I am rather disgusted when I hear men say "Well, if the President wants this man or that man in his Cabinet, who are we to say 'yes' or 'no' to him? He is entitled to whomever he wants."

Of course, I suppose some will argue it is in thorough keeping with the Constitution of the United States, which saw fit to give the Senate a voice in determining who should and who should not be within the President's Cabinet.

Stripping our defense, in the name of national defense, a little here and a little there. Oh, it was not going to be much to begin with, but I wish the Senate to remember that the first inkling we had of the policy which was being pursued by this administration came about by reason of an airplane crash in California when a Frenchman, secretly buying planes of American production, met up with that accident. "This is not serious," we were told at the time, "only a few planes are involved; it will not interfere with our defense; no one is going to let it stand in the way of any American orders for airplanes. Do not let this alarm you." That is what we were told then, but we have seen what has happened since; more and more and ever more, until within the ranks of our Military Establishment leaders tremble for fear of what might be our lot if a war were forced upon us on this side of one or the other of the two oceans.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator speaks of the French observer or expert who was in the plane which met with accident in the West. That man's activities may have some connection with the 400 completed planes reported in today's press as having fallen into the hands of Hitler's army; and there is a dispute as to whether 2,000 motors or 20,000 motors also fell into German hands; there may be a difference of a zero in the dispatches. It is, in fact, reported that at least 2,000 complete motors, with plans for installing them, fell into the hands of Hitler's army. This may all have come out of the activities of the one French expert discovered in the plane accident in California.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, speaking for my own part, it seems to me it does not matter whether the number was 20 or 2. It all comes to the same thing; and I am very happy that the Senator from Minnesota saw fit to have incorporated in the RECORD today the evidence which he has placed there.

Does it occur to Senators what a terrific power accrues to a President of the United States who first of all will declare an emergency to be confronting the country? First of all, he, and he alone, shapes the foreign policy of these United States, which in itself is a tremendous power. It is the power—if it is desired to carry it far enough—to make war.

A very splendid work recently done by that most eminent historian of our times, Charles A. Beard, entitled "A Foreign Policy for America," in that respect has said:

> Fraught with peril in itself, official foreign policy is always conducted by a few persons. It is well within the truth to say that the lives, the liberties, and properties of countless millions are today within the keeping of 10 men. In this respect democracies may differ little from dictatorships. Of necessity, foreign affairs in all countries are usually secret. In democracies as well as dictatorships two or three men, even one man, may make decisions, magnify incidents, create situations in which the nominal power of popular legislature to declare war becomes an empty form, and the power of the press futile.

And so it is, Mr. President. While we may feel very secure, since the final power to declare war rests here with us, no one will deny that it is within the realm of possibility for a Chief Executive so to shape a foreign policy that he one day confronts the legislature with circumstances which that policy has invited, and virtually leaves the legislature with no alternative other than a response to the request of the Executive for the declaration of war to which his policies have led.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. Just one moment.

Mr. President, add to that power the power of dictating our foreign policy, and add to that power the power which goes to the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy, and let it be exercised as it has been exercised in support of a foreign policy made by one man, and who are we to stand and shudder about a dictatorship which may some day be fastened upon us?

Mr. President, I am going to say this afternoon things that I have hesitated a long time to say; but they are things that had better be said now, lest we surprisingly reach the hour when it is not going to be the smart thing to say even things approximating what ought to be said now. But in what I shall say I insist I have prepared my words with care. I am wholly unafraid of any kick-back that might result from what I am to say this afternoon; and in what I say I pray that the Members of the Senate will not let there be read into my words the least bit of sympathy for the cause of Adolf Hitler or the cause of the Italian Duce. The whole interest to which I devote myself in this hour is the interest of my own country; and if a man cannot be pro-American without being pro-British or pro-French, or pro-something else, it is a sad state of affairs.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President——

Mr. NYE. I now yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. HOLT. History records that countries may get into war without declaring war; that it is possible for one country to provoke an incident as a result of which another country declares war on it. That is the very great danger today—in other words, provoking incidents abroad which will cause other countries to declare war on us.

Mr. NYE. Quite so. I think the Senator from West Virginia and I are in entire agreement that our country already has taken steps which have been somewhat accepted in some foreign countries as being steps of war on our part. They are inviting retaliation in the way of words and language which all but constitute declarations of war against us in retaliation.

Mr. President, this is most definitely not the time to be equipping, as some of our colleagues would equip, a ship of dictatorship for a President who has brought the United States to a perilous situation or even a crisis. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] a few days ago rose here in his place and laid down a program, the whole program being nothing less than the assignment by the Congress of the United States of its powers into the hands of the Executive. The Senator from Florida was advocating, by his recommendations, a complete dictatorship.

This is not the time to be responding to prayers of that kind, for this is a real crisis to which the Executive has led the United States and its 130,000,000 people. To the contempt of the totalitarian states—which we already had anyway, and about which I care nothing, for I care not a continental what they may think of our way of living, which, after all, is ours, and which we intend to preserve if we can—to their contempt we have deliberately added their avowed hatred at no profit to ourselves and at less profit to those whom we talked about saving from their threatened wreckage. Worse than that, we have brought upon ourselves the suspicion and the growing hates of European democracies which the Presidential policy has sought to aid. They, too, are beginning to hate us, and they have some reason to hate us.

Rather than devote a single thought to the granting of Hitler powers to the President, we shall do exceedingly well to realize that we may have to live with a new Europe one of these days—a Europe which comes once again out of the age-long wars there for dominance; a Europe with a changed dominating power. We shall do well to realize that we have to find ways to try to get along with a new order on the other side of the world, by chance; an order we may not like, but an order which may last, like it or not, whether it lasts long or lasts only for a limited time, depending upon the will of Europe itself.

Accepting what may result in Europe, it is high time that we faced the truth. Our President, however heavily armed with dictator powers, can never, never, never hope to win for these United States the confidence which has been surrendered by him in his conduct of our foreign policy during these months of European threat of war and the conduct of the war itself. Germany and Italy hate us with a depth that knows no bottom because of pronouncements by American officials, name calling, and helpful steps to their enemies in this war. England and France are going to hate us with equal or even greater depth unless we do now what we are not going to do—namely, adopt as our own their bankrupt war. Already there are signs of this, notably in France, where there is increasing feeling that the United States helped England and France into this war, helped them out on a weak limb, and now decline to do what they were led to believe we would do. There is feeling that we have not lived up to our commitments.

Commitments? If there have been understandings or commitments to France and England, they are to be found in the open record of Congress of the steps short of war voted by Congress to help them; and they will be found, if not there, then in the closed record of diplomacy by the President and his ambassadors. Surely the steps taken by Congress, however unfortunate they may have been, like the repeal of the arms embargo, have not at any time carried any assurance, or even an implication, that we might go to steps further than those short of war to aid them.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I regret to say that I am certain that commitments were made by the administration, by our ambassadors, and by our State Department which led these foreign countries to believe that we are going to back them up. Why did they do that? What were they thinking of, America or Europe? Are they or are they not American officials?

Mr. NYE. I think we all entertain the same feeling of regret over what we are driven to conclude and driven to see day after day, and what I am afraid we are going to see in a most humiliating light at a very early hour.

Getting back to my line of thought, if we are to be hated by those our policy has sought to help, and hated by Germany and Italy as well, we can place the blame for it only on the administration of President Roosevelt, whom some would now cloak with the powers of a dictator to combat the forces of opposition which that President himself has in large part created.

In this administration's conduct of our foreign policy the United States has been caused to abandon its policy of nonintervention and accept in its place one of any-and-all-steps-short-of-war in aid of a European cause. This departure in policy has been taken, too, by one who was elected President as a noninterventionist, even as an isolationist.

The cause of isolation is said to have been proved a failure. It has not been given a chance during this world emergency even to be tried as a policy. Even laws intended to strengthen the isolation policy have been set aside at the request of or ignored by the President. If isolation has failed, it has failed only because it has not been tried under fire. But the cause and wisdom of isolation will again be recognized, it will be honored, it will be praised as never before. Indeed, it is fast on its way back as a policy that can best save America from misfortune, perhaps from disaster.

What is isolation? It is nothing more than nonintervention in other nations' wars. President Roosevelt a few months ago, while he was still an isolationist, clearly defined isolation with these words:

> We are not isolationists except insofar as we seek to isolate ourselves completely from war.

Mr. President, it was before the last election that that definition was given. "We are not isolationists except insofar as we seek to isolate ourselves completely from war."

About the same time the President was also telling how to accomplish this isolation. He said:

> We can keep out of war if those who watch and decide have a sufficiently detailed understanding of international affairs to make certain that the small decisions of each day do not lead toward war and if, at the same time, they possess the courage to say "no" to those who selfishly or unwisely would let us go to war.

Dr. Charles A. Beard, in his very recent work on a foreign policy for America, has found and reported the clear mind of Henry Clay on the question of American foreign policy. He, too, believed in isolation. Clay had been approached in support of "material aid" for Hungary in her conflict with Austria. Clay's response was that by giving official aid to Hungary we should abandon "our ancient policy of amity and nonintervention" and that by taking such a step we would also justify European monarchs in surrendering their policy of forbearance, and in turning upon us in an hour of weakness and exhaustion for the purpose of crushing us "as the propagandists of doctrines destructive of the peace and good order of the world." Clay went on to say:

> By the policy to which we have adhered since the days of Washington * * * we have done more for the cause of liberty in the world than arms could effect; we have shown to other nations the way to greatness and happiness. * * * Far better is it for ourselves, for Hungary, and the cause of liberty, that, adhering to our pacific system and avoiding the distant wars of Europe, we should keep our lamp burning brightly on this western shore, as a light to all nations, than to hazard its utter extinction amid the ruins of fallen and falling republics in Europe.

What prophecy! What prophecy of this very hour! If ever there was reason to cling to the policy of isolation, if ever we needed to avoid hazarding the cause of liberty to "its utter extinction amid the ruins of fallen and falling republics in Europe," that time is the present, as we witness those European republics falling.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I wonder whether the Senator can recall a single outstanding statesman in American history, from the founding fathers who established this Government down to the present, who pursued any other policy than the one just quoted. The statesmen of our country stood boldly for the Washington-Jefferson-Jackson-Henry Clay policy, the policy which carried America onward to glory and greatness, to America's role of nonintervention in the quarrels and boundary disputes of Europe.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, it would seem that a close study of our history must of necessity reveal that here and there have been real, genuine patriots who have not heartily agreed with that particular policy.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Can the Senator name one?

Mr. NYE. I cannot. I was about to say that, on the whole, I should be utterly unable to name one were I required to this afternoon.

Mr. President, this administration abandoned isolation, abandoned the cause of nonintervention—threw it out the window—departed from the policy which great Americans praised from the very beginning of the days of these United States, and adopted in its stead a foreign policy which leaves in its wake a mess, a mess for whatever part of Europe is tied to it, and a mess for our own country, if not disaster.

But this is not the time for recrimination, I dare say. It is not the time to be pointing out how the laws of the United States have been nullified, how the laws of the United States have been ignored and violated, as we have heard discussed here for hours this afternoon. This is hardly the time, perhaps, to be talking about those things. This is a time to be talking about our own danger, the danger which the acts of this administration have brought to this country. We can pass by any possible argument about any wish or any effort to get us into war. Far worse than trying to get us into war is any effort to get us into a lost war. It is not a choice between war and peace we have to worry about at the moment. It is worse; it is defeat, for it is our foreign policy that has brought disaster upon France. I repeat that it is our foreign policy that has brought disaster upon France. To continue now that same policy, directed by the same administrator, is to risk disaster ourselves.

What, after all, has been the substance of the President's policy? Simply put, it was "help as needed" for the Allies. From the very beginning it was obvious that this could work out only with a generous allowance of time. As it proved, the time was insufficient so far as France was concerned. But England still remains, and the President's policy still remains.

For that reason, if for no other, we must stay in session—not to keep peace or avoid war, dear though those causes may be to Americans. Dearer yet is our country, and we cannot see it carried by the President's policy to where he—and he above all others—has carried France.

What has really happened, not alone in these last terrible 5 weeks but in the months of war since September and in the months of nominal peace that preceded them? We do not know all the facts, of course. Many of them are the most guarded secrets of the administration. But we do know some, some that are the most vital, and we can form a shrewd estimate of the others. If we had the time and the security, we could sit back and wait for the academic analyses of the documents yet unpublished; for the military reports still to be made. But we cannot wait for the future, because the future itself will be made by what we do now.

One thing seems certain. The President promised military support to France. That, to my mind, is beyond question. I do not know in what form that promise was made. I do not know whether it was by telephone, by personal word, by letter, through Mr. Bullitt. I do not know the mechanics of the promise. I do not know its phraseology. It may have been guarded language, to use now as an escape. It may have been "weasel phrased" or "mealymouthed." But whatever it was, it convinced the French Government, and that is what counts, and at this moment it is all that counts.

How am I certain such a promise was made? By open newspaper reports and by the logic of events themselves, to begin with. Above all, I can read no other conclusion from a statement of the French Government itself on Sunday just before the new Cabinet was set up.

On Sunday the French Government's official news communique stated that in view of the changed situation brought about by the President's cable to Premier Reynaud they would have to reconsider their position and the wisdom of going on with the war. And what the President had said—the only thing he said that produced a changed situation—was that he, the President, could not himself declare war.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator attach any importance to the fact that the American Ambassador to France, Mr. Bullitt, instead of his path of duty, which was to accompany the French Government when the French capital was moved, remained behind to burn all the diplomatic correspondence in the American Embassy, even including his code books, as reported by the public press?

Mr. NYE. I was not aware to what extent that had been practiced. The Senator from Missouri would be a most genuine authority upon that point.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not profess to be any authority on the matter. It has been reported in the public press that Mr. Bullitt burned all the papers in the American Embassy, even including the code book.

Mr. NYE. I understand there was some evidence by Mr. Bullitt that was not burned—unfortunately, perhaps.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator, if he will permit, that there is plenty of evidence not destroyed and still existing which may soon be discussed on the floor of the Senate. Our diplomats—often referred to as diplomats—are getting all tangled up in their own cobwebs of European and world intrigue.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, it has also been reported in the public press that when the city in which they were located was about to be taken ambassadors representing other countries burned their papers also.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I have been listening to the Senator, but he made some remarks just now which I did not catch. He said something to the effect that something was not burned. I want to know just what the Senator said.

Mr. NYE. I remarked that I was afraid that perhaps there was some evidence that Mr. Bullitt had not burned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is that not an indication that the Senator hopes he was burned?

Mr. NYE. Oh, no, Mr. President. The Senator has misunderstood me.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thought the Senator said that he had expressed some fear that the Ambassador had not been burned. I wondered what he really meant.

Mr. NYE. No. There were some documents which had not been burned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh. I did not want to misunderstand the Senator.

Mr. NYE. I am sure the Senator from Kentucky did not.

Mr. President, I now go back to my line of thought. The only thing the President had said that had produced a changed situation was that he himself could not declare war. The President's statement, to begin with, was unnecessary so far as the surface of events went, but the revealing phrase was that of the French Government that "a changed situation" was causing the French Government to reconsider its whole situation with the idea in mind of determining whether or not to go on with the war.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I am trying to get the Senator's thought, and to find out to my satisfaction——

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, it is very difficult to hear a Senator across on the other side of the Chamber, even one who speaks with as clear a voice as does the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wanted to know upon what ground the Senator was basing the grave charges which he brings today. I think the things he has stated, charging almost treason against the Chief Executive of this Nation, are most grave. I wanted to ask if the Senator had not thought, in connection with what he was saying, that an appeal was made to the President by Premier Reynaud just before that cablegram was sent.

Mr. NYE. I am quite willing that the RECORD should reveal that an appeal for additional help had been made by the French Premier, to which the President responded with the message that caused the Government of France to reconsider its situation.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wanted to say that I also read the appeal of the Premier of France, and I thought the reply of the President was called for by that appeal, and I was very glad when he stated as he did state, that there was no power to declare war except in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, once again I try to get back to the thought that I was pursuing—the President's statement about his not having the power to declare war. It was quite unnecessary, so far as the surface of events went, but the revealing phrase was that of the French Government—"a changed situation" occasioned by this cablegram from the President of the United States. It was an unmistakable statement that when the President told France last week that he could give no military aid, he thereby changed a situation. Obviously, then, at some earlier time, in some manner, he had indicated that military assistance would be forthcoming from the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY rose.

Mr. NYE. I do not yield now, Mr. President. I shall yield when I finish this particular argument.

Under what circumstances and at what time we cannot know yet, but the French appeal for aid last week indicated clearly that France desired military assistance, and felt entitled to ask for it; and when that assistance was refused by the President, France found herself in "a changed situation," and felt required to surrender. Why? In my opinion, simply because a promise of military support, which the President had given her before war started, could not be kept when the terrible moment to keep it arrived.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I have always appreciated the close logic of the able Senator from North Dakota. If I understand him correctly, the message of the President of the United States advising the French that war could not be declared without the consent of the Congress was what caused the changed situation? Is that correct?

Mr. NYE. That, confronted by this reply from the President of the United States, the French Government faced a changed situation.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. That implies, I assume, of necessity, that the French did not know until that time that it took the Congress of the United States to declare war on the part of this country?

Mr. NYE. The President must have thought that they did not have such an understanding there, else he would never have been required to state in his message that he did not have power to declare war; that that rested with Congress.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator from North Dakota think that the French Government, with an intelligent Ambassador, and a counselor staff in this country for years, was not informed about that fact, when they sit in the galleries here day by day and hear the debate? Does the Senator think that the French Government needed that assurance from the President?

Mr. NYE. I agree with the Senator that it is preposterous that any French official could have been without knowledge that in this country of ours the power to declare war rested with the Congress and not with the President.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is not now talking about French public opinion, but he is saying to the country that the French Government, the Premier and the Cabinet of France—supposedly, at least, intelligent people—had to have the statement of the President to tell them that only the Congress may declare war; and yet the Senator says that it was after they received that information in that way that a changed situation took place.

Mr. NYE. The President seemed to think that that was necessary, and incorporated it in his message. For what reason I do not know.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator say or assume—I do not want to misunderstand him—that the mere fact that the President, in the message to which the Senator is now referring, stated that he could offer no military aid, is proof, or even an indication, that at any time previous to that the President had indicated to France that he could offer military aid?

Mr. NYE. I think it is at least an indication.

Mr. BARKLEY. Upon what does the Senator base his opinion that it is an indication?

Mr. NYE. If the Senator will allow me to go on, I shall answer that question.

Mr. BARKLEY. It might as well be said that because I say today that I am hot, it necessarily follows that yesterday I was cold. The mere fact that I make a statement of a present situation certainly does not indicate that the contrary was true at any other time. It may be that the President was not only informing the French Premier, Mr. Reynaud, that he could offer no military assistance, in addition to the fact that he could not declare war, but that he wanted to be entirely frank, not only with the Premier but with the French people, when he stated to them that he could not and did not hold out any hope that he could give them military assistance.

Mr. NYE. I hope the Senator and the Senate will permit me to conclude my argument on this particular point. Then I shall be glad to stop and argue on what was or what was not done or intended to be done.

Of course, Mr. President, the promise of military aid could not be kept when France asked for such aid last week. The President knew that not only was there little or nothing to deliver in the way of armaments, but that he could hardly get a declaration of war through Congress, at least so early as this spring or summer, if ever. He always knew that; and obviously he never intended to try for a declaration of war at this stage.

That was not on his timetable when he made his promise of military support to France something like 9 months or a year ago. The declaration of war was not to be needed from Congress until this fall or next winter, with the psychological ground properly prepared in this country. But, alas for the President, the military events took no account of his timetable; and the nation to which he had promised American military support found herself suddenly in desperate need of support months before the experts had figured she would require it. Of course the President could not deliver it. He had not even his arms organized, or a Congress willing to put through a war declaration, or a people willing to back it, fight for it, and die for it.

Mr. President, before I go further I should like to read a paragraph from the dispatch of Arthur Sears Henning of June 17, under a Washington date line:

> It already is known that Bullitt promised the French that the United States would get into the war if necessary to defeat Hitler. It was to ask the President to make good on this assurance that Lord Lothian, the British Ambassador, and Count de Saint-Quentin, the French Ambassador, called on Mr. Roosevelt last Saturday. They asked him to come through with the promised declaration of war.
> Mr. Roosevelt could not deliver. He was compelled to say in his cable to Premier Reynaud that only Congress can declare war.

One week ago yesterday an individual whom I shall under no circumstances compromise came to my office and wrote a memorandum. I could not doubt this man for 1 minute. In his memorandum he said:

> It was known—

Remember, this was before the French surrendered—

> It was known that France might definitely give in within 10 days, and that when it did the Government of France would release a letter from Bullitt, written on orders of Roosevelt, to Daladier, dated last August or September, stating the full support of the United States if it went to war against Germany on the basis of the Polish incident.

Three days later the editor-in-chief of a most eminent American news service, in a confidential letter to the editors who subscribe to his service, in a release of June 18, had this to say:

> Unless combined pressures are effective in changing Premier Reynaud's plans, he will drop a bomb soon with repercussions which may reach far over here. The expected separate peace to be made by the French will call for certain categorical explanations. These will include, according to a trustworthy report from France, the releasing of a letter written by Ambassador Bullitt just before the war started, giving the French assurance of our full cooperation with them if they would support the Poles.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I shall be glad to yield in just a moment.

Mr. President, take all these things in combinations and then look back over the whole performance. Before the war started the President of the United States, by act and by innuendo, made himself the leader of the "no more Munichs" group. His Ambassador to France made a public speech to all intents pledging American aid. He was never reprimanded. Although the question of possible promises has been raised many times since, as well as the question whether Bullitt made private statements to French officials spelling out in detail what he meant by his public speeches, he himself has never answered the question, and has taken particular care to avoid having to answer it. The Senate will not quickly forget how Mr. Bullitt made his get-away from these shores last winter when the Senator from North Carolina introduced his resolution asking the Foreign Affairs Committee to inquire of Mr. Bullitt while he was here whether or not any commitments had been made in the name of the American Government. If I am not mistaken, the very next day after the introduction of that resolution Ambassador Bullitt was on his way to Europe. Yet, Mr. President, some such commitment of military assistance was made, or the dispute over Danzig and the Corridor would have led to quite a different result than has been reached.

It was no secret that there were many men in the Government and in the Army—above all, those in France—who knew that France was woefully unprepared in comparison with Germany, and that the war would be most perilous, however difficult and humiliating surrender to Germany on the Polish question would have been. But it is now obvious that the President was adamant. He would have no more Munichs, even if neither the United States nor France nor England—nor, as it turned out, all three together—were sufficiently armed to do anything else. So it is now apparent that he threw support to the war party in France in the form of some sort of promise of military assistance if—or rather when—it would be needed. It is quite clear that this happened. We know it now from Sunday's communiqué of the French Government itself; and we must see it also perfectly and clearly in the pattern of the events of months.

I now yield to the Senator from Florida, if he wishes to delve further into this particular question. I declined to yield to him a moment ago because I wished to complete the thought I was then presenting.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator, if he assumes that the American Ambassador, Mr. Bullitt, made any commitment of military aid to the Republic of France at an early time, as the Senator has indicated, does the Senator think that if the French Government had taken any such assurances seriously, if made, it would not have sought some sort of confirmation in Washington, where the French Ambassador resides, where he has entree to the State Department and to the President, and where he may come and hear from the gallery such eloquent speeches on isolation as those delivered periodically by the able Senator from North Dakota and others? Does not the Senator think that the able addresses by the Senator and by others would at least have made the French Ambassador in Washington curious enough to want to have a little confirmation of the assurances which the Senator says were made?

Mr. NYE. Most definitely he would; he got it; and we afforded that confirmation, as I shall reveal to the Senator in a moment.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator's point is like a fly that he is continually losing. He goes around slapping at it, but he seldom catches it. When is the Senator going to swat the fly? [Laughter.]

Mr. NYE. I hope the Senator from Florida will hang on to his swatter until the Senator from North Dakota lets loose the fly. [Laughter.] The Senator from Florida is anticipating, or trying to anticipate, what I am going to say; in this particular case his anticipation has been with some cause, and I tell him the fly will be over that way very shortly.

It is obvious, to begin with, that the Governments of France and Great Britain and their generals and admirals were neither completely feeble-minded nor completely ignorant. They made errors, but they alone made no such blunder as the present situation would indicate. Like the President, perhaps, they went wrong on their time scale and wrong on promises of people who had no right or power to promise.

The military leaders of France and England knew, as everyone else knew, that the Germans were superior to them in planes and tanks, and they would never have risked war, humiliating though a Polish diplomatic defeat would have been, if they had had no offset for the German superiority. They got what they thought in time would prove such an offset—American support. They were wrong, but their error was understandable.

Let us try, for a change, to forget the confusion of newspaper accounts, the distortion of mutual propagandas. Let us attempt simply to review the events, political and military, of this war to see, as a soldier might try to see, what has happened, what was planned to happen but did not, and what may still be in store for us.

When the question of war over Poland first emerged as a possibility a year ago, the Allies knew that if they chose to fight there would be hard months of apparent defeat in the opening phases of the war. But they estimated they would be able to stabilize the situation, as they themselves termed it; that is, to turn it into a war of position, where their superiority in ships, heavy artillery, and resources—above all, American resources—would gradually turn the tide. They knew they could not defeat Hitler in the field, but they figured they could hold him, and then, after he had been strangled awhile by blockade, they could take the offensive and win.

They realized, however, that there was one flaw in their position: The process of holding the Germans in the beginning might prove so costly in men and materials that they would lack the military strength to defeat the Germans even after the blockade had demoralized German economy. Was it this flaw that the President agreed to take care of? How can we conclude otherwise in the light of events?

As I have said, I do not know in what form that agreement may have been offered. It could even be of no moment whether the President himself realized he was making it—though I believe he did know. In any event, they believed he had done so, which is what counted. And, indeed, if the Allies had actually misunderstood some private communication, certainly nothing in the President's public words or in his actions could have led them to suspect it.

The program can be clearly seen now: The Allies were to go ahead and take what punishment the Germans could give them. Meantime, of course, they were to have exclusive and cooperative access to our resources. Then in 18 months or 2 years, if the strain of holding the Germans had proved too costly, American manpower was to tip the scales. And so, obviously, it was arranged, and, with the President's approval—if not, indeed, at his urging—Poland became, not another Munich but the occasion for a vast war.

I speak of the President's program and acts. Perhaps I would better speak of them as the program and acts of Ambassador Bullitt in the name of the President. But, after all, the responsibility is that of the President.

In short, we see what was to be the pattern of the World War all over again, only this time sensibly planned far in advance instead of left to the hazard of events. The President never was in sympathy with the Wilson policy of 1916. The whole thing was to be the World War, not just in political strategy but in tactics as well. The Germans were expected to attack as they did in 1914, as anyone could see that sooner or later they would have to, before they lost what military advantage they had. Then the attack was to be checked—at some cost, to be sure—and the front stabilized. Then would begin the artillery duels, in which the Allies expected to have the edge.

But events moved too fast both for the Allies and for the President. When the Germans struck, they struck with more force than the Allies had figured they could muster. Above all, they struck in a way the Allies had not expected. The Allies and the President were planning the World War, not only in relation to us but in relation to the battlefield. But the Germans were fighting this war, not the last one. The Allies expected and prepared for the famous Schlieffen plan, the great right hook to encircle Paris, with containing armies dropped off along the way to hold the still unsubdued remnants of the Dutch, Belgians, and British. Instead the Germans used a left hook. They did not, as expected, hinge in the south and swing toward Paris with their right. Instead they hinged in the north and swung for the Channel with their left, dropping off containing armies to hold the unsubdued French. They put their strong forces where the Allies were weak, and the strong forces of the Allies were flanked before they could even start fighting. And then followed Dunkerque and the colossal military disaster.

The awful defeat in Flanders must be understood, or we miss the role of the President in this situation. No such rapid German victory was estimated, or could have been estimated. In fact, it probably could not have been attained at all merely on the basis of superiority of weapons alone. To win with such speed required even more, required the tactical factor of Allied error in the battle of Flanders, which is the stuff of war to be sure, but which could scarcely have been foreseen either by the President or by the Allied commanders.

Yet once that battle had been fought, the whole picture was changed. We felt it on every hand here in our own country. The demoralization of the Allied armies and the immense loss of supplies and weapons left the Germans in a vastly more powerful position than they enjoyed on the 10th of May, when they invaded the Low Countries. It assured that the German timetable, not that of the Allies and the President, would prevail.

I repeat, it is necessary to keep in mind the consequences of that battle. Otherwise, the President's policy appears not only illegal but idiotic. No man in his senses would figure on extending long-term aid in a war that can last only 5 weeks. It is nonsense. The only period of time over which our aid could have been effective to France was far longer than 5 weeks. So we know for certain that the term of the war was supposed to be far longer than it has been. Correspondingly, we know that the crisis in the French military situation was expected to come, if it came, far, far later than it did. So we can see that the promise of military support, to be given when that crisis arrived, seemed a safe and reasonable procedure.

Now, in fact, that promise of military support to be given at a period still in the distant future not only seemed a reasonable procedure to the President, but in fact would have been so, if only Flanders had been a victory or at worst a stalemate, if the Germans could have been knocked off their timetable and forced to use that which the Allies and we were using; for by next winter, if the French military crisis had been delayed until then, military support from us would have been entirely possible.

We have suffered a humiliation in foreign affairs the like of which has never happened in all the history of these United States.

Our President, on his own responsibility, by private assurances, may have encouraged a great and friendly power to ruin. Does France stand today in all her loss and destruction, all her black and unknowable future, because her government trusted in the word of the President of the United States—a word he had no right to utter and no power to back, a word as unlawful as any deed a President could commit?

I know we shall be told by certain columnists of the press that it is not Roosevelt who led France to her ruin. I know the pattern that will be set and repeated, to drown out in the sheer tonnage of newsprint the bitter facts of this disaster. It will be the isolationists who are to blame. They did not back the President's "stop Hitler" policy, it will be said. With what did we not back any policy the President has legally followed? Have 30 votes in the Senate paralyzed the Government of the United States? With what was the President going to stop Hitler that we have injured? Have we voted down one ship or one plane? If we had not existed at all, if he had been in fact the unchecked designer of our foreign affairs, could he have raised an army since September? Could he have had transports for it? Could he have landed it today in the shattered harbors of western Europe?

Consider again the fight on the arms embargo. What was said then, over and over? And who, as it turns out, were the friends of shattered France? Over and over it was pointed out that repeal of the embargo was a symbol, and was meant as a symbol, and would be taken as a symbol.

And was it in fact anything else? Recall the circumstances. The war in Poland was over. Peace was possible—not a favorable one for the Allies, but not such a peace as the one now available. It was at that point that the President used all his powers of persuasion and pressure to get through the repeal of the arms embargo. Why? Certainly not to send arms—not then; they were not thought to be needed—and in fact it was not until the Allied disaster in Norway that there was any substantial export of munitions to the Allies. Why, then, a repeal of the embargo at the special session? Solely as a symbol. We can easily imagine the nervousness of the French, not by any means a nation of feeble intellects, after the Polish war showed something of the power of the German Army. They had the President's assurance that we would aid them. But the French, too, can read the Constitution of the United States. They, too, know that by law only the Congress can declare war. Before they embarked their country on the risks of a total war with Germany—for the French, too, love their country—did they insist on concrete evidence that the President could make his commitment good, could show them that on foreign policy he had an obedient Congress, one that in the right time and right circumstances would declare war at least as willingly as it repealed the embargo? Did they get that evidence?

And now shall we go on, with more deception, to further disaster? Will the destruction of France be insufficient to show the American people where the policy of the President leads? Will we allow him to lead us, too, into the position of France? Or shall we recognize that we, too, have been defeated; that we utterly lack the power to carry out the President's grandiose schemes?

It is no longer necessary to discuss at all the morality or long-term wisdom of these schemes. It is not even necessary to ask the American people whether they desire to carry them out. We cannot carry them out; that is all. We have not the arms, and we cannot make the arms in time, to play any role at all in this war. It will be altogether hard enough to assemble the men and the arms that we need, and need desperately, if called upon to defend ourselves here in America against the European victors, the danger of which I believe we can ourselves reduce.

Will it now become our policy to encourage England, and cause her to believe that we shall rally for her what we could not and did not rally for France? Will the President cause that belief? If he could deliver, it might be a good idea; but he cannot. We need only to look to the facts. In a few days the whole south coast of England is apt to be as unusable for British merchant ships as the east coast now is. What seaports then will be open? Only three of any consequence—Bristol, Liverpool, and Glasgow. Aside from sinkings at sea, how long can supplies be brought in after the docks of these three ports are blown up under concentrated air raids? Will the British then land their oil and food on the beaches of Wales? And how long will the British Air Service last when the Germans turn on it the treatment they have given the French, bomb the airfields of England as they had not yet done, and count off, as they have not yet done, a definite number of their own planes to be lost in destroying the British air bases?

And the fleet: Suppose airplanes cannot sink battleships. Still, the British admit airplanes can sink cruisers and destroyers. So when the German aircraft have sunk the British cruisers and destroyers, then the German submarines and destroyers can sink the battleships. And how effective can a fleet be under those circumstances? Can it both defend England and blockade Germany? Failing to do either will surely lose the war.

I should like to see a brighter prospect for England. I hope she may be able to resist the force that has already crushed the great French forces. But we here in the United States have every right—yes, a duty—to contemplate the worst that can happen.

Shall we lose our fleet and such planes as we possess in that process too—and lose them to no gain, lose them for nothing, nothing that can now be saved—lose them only to carry to the bitter and terrible end a mistaken policy that never should have been embarked upon, a policy mistaken, not necessarily because it was wrong, but because it was weak, because it did not have the strength and could not get the strength to succeed?

Is there anyone in this country today who seriously thinks a foreign policy can be conducted without cold-blooded calculation of the military factors involved? Is there anyone, then, who can suppose that the President's policy is anything but the most dangerous adventurism? Where is our strength?

If we are to defy powerful nations, shake our fists at them and threaten them, we must first be strong enough to make attacking us far too expensive a proposition. That, it seems to me, is pretty nearly the first sum and final substance of foreign policy. But we in this modern day do nothing of the kind. Instead, we make military commitments that we can only keep, if at all, on our own timetable or schedule, and we have found that we are sometimes not able to make that timetable or schedule stick.

We defy certain powers when about our only strength behind this defiance is words.

It all amounts to this: We are defying certain foreign powers. We rally with words to the defense of commercial advantage in South America, to republics whose only markets, generally speaking, are European, regardless of who rules Europe. At the same time we not only find ourselves rather poorly prepared to defend ourselves against those whom we defy, but we are even sending away such preparedness armament as is already ours.

Such a policy can come to but one or the other of two ends—either it brings us to a shocking national diplomatic humiliation, a Munich that will out-Munich any Munich ever thought of, or a disastrous war. Those only can be the ends of our present foreign policy, if we continue pursuit of policies which have been laid down of recent months. Surely it was not the intention of the President to lead to any such goal, we all know, any more than the disaster of Flanders and the surrender of France were his intentions. But those are consequences, nevertheless, those and those alone.

So much, then, for the disasters, those which have occurred and those which might well be considered threatened under our foreign policy.

Well, what are we to do about it? There is a thing that we can do, that we ought to do, that we must do, and do quickly. We must make clear the conviction of the United States that our architects of disaster are no longer serving the welfare and best interests of the United States by remaining in power. These architects have, by reason of their own conduct, and the conduct of Germany and Italy especially, established in those two countries a bitter hatred of the United States. We do not care about their hatred. We need not be afraid of them alone. If they in combination with other powers wish ever to be so foolish as to bring war to us over on this side of two great oceans they shall be served with a "blitzkrieg" the likes of which they never yet have administered. But that is not all. Our policy has won as well, as I have previously suggested, a growing hatred in those countries that we presumably have been trying to help, namely, England and France.

We can well wish for a new front, a new leadership, that will convey to all the world the knowledge that America as a whole has not departed from the foreign policies liked by Washington, Jefferson, Adams, Monroe, and Clay, an American foreign policy. The President himself might come to sense this, to realize that his policies have been tragic in their consequences, and that his continuance in office can no longer promote the national welfare.

I can think of no single act that would so clearly show the President's patriotism, which we all know he has in great abundance—nothing would show that patriotism quite so clearly as for him to retire from these years of arduous effort and turn over his office, as the Constitution provides, to the Vice President, JOHN NANCE GARNER. In this crisis of national disaster—for the defeat of France is surely that—there is no one but the Vice President who can now restore the national unity and national confidence in governmental leadership, and there is no one who could do it quite so well as JOHN NANCE GARNER. Under this new leadership we might hope, while adopting a purely American policy, to win back the confidence of Europe, heal some of the sores that have been opened by reason of our most recent conduct of foreign policy, and become an instrument available to the accomplishment of a more hopeful and enduring settlement of Europe's problems than otherwise seems to be in prospect after the present insanity there has run its course.

Mr. President, I am sure I can anticipate many, many words in answer, allegedly, to what I have said, but I hope those who are going to undertake the answer will confine themselves, in alleging what I have said, to what I have said. I hope there will be no effort to read in between the lines which have been mine, my thoughts and language which are not there.

I have in my heart but one wish, one cause to serve, that is, the cause of keeping my country out of this war, on the lone theory that when the war shall have ended there will be nothing of democracy, there will be nothing of stability, left for any country which permits itself to participate in the war. Just so surely as that we are in our places in the Senate today, win, lose, or draw in Europe, there will be victory in store for only one ideology, the ideology of one of the countries which has managed thus far to keep itself out of the war, a country some of whose citizens are considerably disturbed because we are not getting into it and making it another World War, bringing destruction, havoc, wreckage, wastage, to all the civilized lands, to the end that communism can have its one and only chance for victory upon the earth.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

During the delivery of Mr. NYE's speech,

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the Senator from North Dakota be generous enough to yield for a moment, in order that we may conclude action on the agricultural appropriation bill? The bill is very lengthy, and it is necessary to give the enrolling clerk time to enroll it. There will be no discussion whatever, and it will take but a moment.

Mr. NYE. I worked with the Senator from Georgia upon the conference report, and, heaven helping me, if he has a final agreement ready, I shall be the last to stand in the way of securing action on the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank the Senator for yielding, as well as for his faithful and efficient aid.

Mr. President, I ask that the message from the House be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 8202, which was read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 21, 1940.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65 to the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$5,733,217"; and

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$868,458."

Mr. RUSSELL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 65 and 66.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, may I ask if the proceedings which have just been taken will appear in my remarks?

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask unanimous consent that they appear in the RECORD following the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota, after he shall have yielded the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be done.

Mr. NYE. I thank the Senator.

RATES OF INTEREST ON FEDERAL LAND BANK AND LAND BANK COMMISSIONER LOANS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, there is a bill on the calendar that should have quick action. It is the bill extending for 5 additional years the reduced rate of interest, 3½ percent, on Federal land-bank and Land Bank Commissioner loans. A similar bill has passed the Senate twice. There are 200,000 notices ready to go out to mortgagors, and the mortgagors are waiting to see what the rate of interest will be. I think there is no opposition to the bill. It is Calendar No. 1730, House bill 8450. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered now. It has to go over to the House before final action may be taken on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield for that purpose?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8450) to extend for 5 additional years the reduced rates of interest on Federal land-bank and Land Bank Commissioner loans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that there is pending an amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] authorized me to withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

The Chair is also informed that the committee amendments were all agreed to on May 29. Therefore the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend for 2 additional years the reduced rates of interest on Federal land bank and Land Bank Commissioner loans."

After the conclusion of Mr. NYE's speech,

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bill and joint resolution of the Senate:

S. 3927. An act to provide for the administration of the Washington National Airport, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 260. Joint resolution to make emergency provision for the maintenance of essential vessels affected by the Neutrality Act of 1939, and for adjustment of obligations with respect to such vessels.

The message also announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 65 and 66 to the bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, and concurred therein each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9594) to amend section 12 (b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, by authorizing the transfer of funds to cover advances for crop insurance.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 544) making appropriations for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 68 to the joint resolution and concurred therein.

EXPEDITION IN NAVAL SHIPBUILDING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9822) to expedite naval shipbuilding, and for other purposes.

AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. MINTON obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to make merely a brief observation. I have no desire to get into a debate on the European war, but the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] during the early part of his remarks made the prediction, as I understood it, that whenever the letter written by Secretary of War Woodring to the President in tendering his resignation should be made public, it would disclose that the reason for Mr. Woodring's resignation was the fact that he declined to sign orders turning over to the Allies any war material under the control of the War Department, and, as I understood the Senator, he intimated that it would also disclose that Mr. Woodring had declined to reveal the secret with respect to a bomb sight. If I misunderstood the Senator, I give him an opportunity to correct me.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I appreciate the opportunity the Senator gives me. I am quite confident I did not say just that. I recall very vividly saying that I believed that if the letter of resignation were made available to the public, it would reveal that Mr. Woodring said his resignation was due to his inability to agree to the sales of military supplies abroad, and that if the matter were gone into thoroughly with Mr. Woodring and his staff, there undoubtedly would be revelation that his resignation was occasioned primarily by his refusal to append his signature to orders releasing more of military aid to the Allied cause.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator did mention the bomb sight in connection with those remarks, and I got the impression that he included in his intimation that the Secretary had refused to sign orders selling war materials, and that he had intimated also that he had refused to reveal secrets of the bomb sight.

Mr. NYE. Not in that connection.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, because I was very much impressed with what the Senator from North Dakota was saying at the time, I made a note, as rapidly as I could, of what he said. In substance, this is what he stated, that he was sure that when the facts became known about Mr. Woodring's resignation it would be revealed that Mr. Woodring was asked to surrender the bomb sight and that he would not do it, and so he was removed from the Cabinet.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is the impression I got from the Senator's remarks.

I wish to say that following the remarks of the Senator I took it upon myself to call General Arnold, the head of the Air Corps of the United States Army, and he authorized me to say that at no time, in any conference or in any deliberation or during the consideration of secrets of the War Department or of the United States Army, was any consideration ever given to the revelation of any secret bomb sight on the bombers of the United States Army.

It is rather unfortunate that here in the Senate of the United States, which is a sort of loud speaker, where everything that is said is broadcast, through the press and the radio, which comment upon happenings here, Senators should speculate about some dereliction of duty that is intimated by those who do not happen to agree with the policy of the present administration.

I do not know what was in the letter of Mr. Woodring to the President. I do not know that I shall ever know. I am a friend of Mr. Woodring. I served in the Senate with his father-in-law, the former Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Coolidge. I have sufficiently high regard for Mr. Woodring to believe that he has not in anything he has said by word of mouth, or by any letter he has written to the President, been guilty of any impropriety in connection with tendering to the President his resignation as Secretary of War.

The mere fact that the President did not give the letter out because of its personal nature ought not to be used to carry any implications as to what it contains.

Frequently letters are both personal and official, and frequently there are personal allusions in official letters which the recipients would not want to give out to the public. All of us receive letters from our constituents, for instance, on legislative or official matters. Frequently they contain some personal reference. We would not take the liberty, in fairness and justice to ourselves and to our correspondents, to make them public.

I merely wanted to say that it seems to me most unfortunate, simply because the President, in the exercise of his judgment as to the proprieties, did not see fit to give out a letter of resignation which was sent to him by the Secretary of War, a letter which was at least in part of a personal nature, and it may be of an intimate personal nature, that such a circumstance should be taken as any indication of what the letter contains or any justification for any intimation. It is unfair to the Secretary of War and to the President and to the country to use that circumstance merely to hang upon it a veiled charge or prediction as to what the letter contains or as to the reason why the Secretary of War has tendered his resignation.

It seems to me that our people are sufficiently confused, they are sufficiently worried, they are now sufficiently anxious about our situation to make it at least within the bounds of propriety that Members of the United States Senate and others in high official positions should not speak further upon mere suspicion, rumor, or intimation, to fan the imaginations of the people into flame and to cause them to wonder still more what is really happening in the Government. I believe the American people have confidence in their Government. I believe they want to continue to have that confidence in their Government. While there are honest differences of opinion among Members of this body and among all men as to wisdom of action, there could be no greater disservice performed, in my judgment, so far as the Government of the United States is concerned and so far as the people are concerned, and there could be no greater damage committed to the morale of the American people, than by innuendo and insinuation to seek to create the impression that there is something "rotten in Denmark" behind the scenes; that their agents of government, whom they have chosen and in whom they have expressed their confidence, are not worthy to perform their duties. Of course, they cannot make public everything they do. It would be preposterous to expect that in our diplomatic, military, and naval relationship everything that happens, every conversation, every memorandum, and every letter should be made public. The War Department, the Navy Department, and the State Department cannot carry on their operations in a barber shop or in a beauty parlor so that the whole world may look on and see what is happening. It is not in the interest of the welfare of our country that that should be done.

I express the earnest hope that we will not here give expression to insinuations or intimations or veiled charges of any kind unless we can substantiate them by facts. We ought not to attempt to do so until we have the facts. None of us here can obtain all the facts with respect to many of these matters. Certainly we owe it to our country and to the proprieties to wait until we have the facts before we undertake to speak with reference to them.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] was utterly sincere when he said he wanted to keep this country out of war. I am as anxious to keep the country out of war as is the Senator from North Dakota. I am no warmonger. I learned about war the hard way. I served for 27 months in the last World War, and a year of it was overseas. I do not want war because I saw war at its worst. As the father of two boys, I do not want war. In the hands of destiny today I have two hostages for peace—my sons. So I am as anxious to keep this country out of war as the Senator from North Dakota ever could be.

I am sure that all my colleagues on the floor of the Senate are as anxious to keep this country out of war as is the Senator from North Dakota. I am sure he is ready to accord us the same sincerity of purpose that he claims for himself, and I am ready to accord it to him. I am not so sure that the Senator from North Dakota is willing to accord to the President of the United States the same sincerity of purpose and the same patriotism that he claims for himself.

I think the President of the United States is a patriotic, high-minded public servant, who has no purpose to lead this Nation into war, and will not lead this Nation into war, and the Nation will not have war if war stays away from our shores. But, Mr. President, we do not always have the choice as to whether we shall have war or shall not have war.

Of course, the recent Secretary of War, Mr. Woodring, was my friend, as he was the friend of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. I have had occasion to speak in defense of Mr. Woodring, and I spoke up in his defense in the implied criticism heaped upon him by the Senator from North Dakota and his isolationist friends. So it seems a little odd to me to find the Senator from North Dakota coming at this time to the aid of the recent Secretary of War, Mr. Woodring. I can remember when the very circumstance to which the Senator from North Dakota referred, as to the sale of war planes to France, was brought to the attention of the country, and one of those who expressed great alarm about it was the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it proper to say at this time that I have received information from the War Department since the Senator from North Dakota began his speech today that the planes referred to did not go to France—not any of them have gone to France. Therefore, of course, they are not in danger of being turned over to Hitler.

Mr. MINTON. I do not know what planes the Senator from North Dakota referred to or the Senator from Kentucky now refers to, but I am referring to the incident which occurred during, I think in 1939, when a plane fell in California and injured a Frenchman who was here on a mission to purchase planes. One of the chief objectors at that time to the procedure of selling to the French people planes manufactured in this country—not by the Government, but by private corporations—was the Senator from North Dakota, and one of those who defended that plan, one of the men who was responsible for that program—and there was nothing in law, morals, or anything else that condemned it—one of the men who were in favor of it was the Secretary of War, Mr. Woodring, whom the Senator from North Dakota commends so highly here today.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. NYE. It seems to me that there ought to be a clarifying of the facts that existed at that time. Up to the very hour of the issuance of the orders which required American industrialists to extend aid to the French mission, I might say that within the Government of the United States the most violent foe of the policy which was then being undertaken to give aid and American military supplies to France and to England was the Secretary of War, Harry Woodring.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, it so happens that Mr. Woodring appeared before the Military Affairs Committee, of which I happen to be a member, and said just the opposite of what the Senator from North Dakota is now saying.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. NYE. I wish the Senator would disclose whatever he has which would reveal that Mr. Woodring, up to the time the order was issued making these advantages available to the Allies, held the view which the Senator says he held.

Mr. MINTON. Let the Senator be patient. He asked me to sit around for 30 minutes and wait on him. I waited for an hour, but he never revealed the facts which he said he would reveal. The Senator will have to wait only a moment, and I shall read from the record what Mr. Woodring and General Marshall had to say about this matter. At that time the Military Affairs Committee was investigating this matter pursuant to a resolution introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. It was not investigating the particular incident of the sale of planes in the first instance, but the whole question of selling planes and war materials to nations engaged in war.

Mr. NYE. Then the Senator is not arguing that Secretary Woodring was originally supporting the cause of making American military advantages available to the Allies, or to any countries abroad?

Mr. MINTON. Mr. Woodring was in favor of it, and he said so. I read from the record of the hearings:

> Mr. WOODRING. Well, it is our honest belief that the increased orders that are coming from foreign governments, both for arms, ammunition, and implements of war, and particularly aircraft, are creating a capacity that our appropriated funds could not possibly create. It would take millions and millions and billions of dollars of the taxpayers' money to create the capacity that is being created by these incoming orders, which give us a capacity that is undoubtedly in the interest of the national defense of this country.

And so on, at further length.

General Marshall, Chief of Staff, supported Mr. Woodring in that statement; and as the concluding questions in General Marshall's testimony I asked him if he agreed with Mr. Woodring in his observations and conclusions about the selling of materials to foreign governments. I asked General Marshall the following question:

> Senator MINTON. You agree, then, with the the Secretary of War that the purchase of arms, ammunition, and implements of war, including aircraft, by foreign countries is not in any way a threat to our protection?
> General MARSHALL. Yes, sir.
> Senator MINTON. You agree with the Secretary of War that no military secrets of war of any kind are being revealed to the purchasers?
> General MARSHALL. Yes, sir.
> Senator MINTON. And it is your opinion that this program that is now developing and being carried on due to the purchase of materials and supplies by foreign governments is definitely helping our program and decreasing the cost to this Government?
> General MARSHALL. Most emphatically I do, sir.

So when we look at the record and find out what Secretary Woodring had to say, his words before the Military Affairs Committee do not bear out the insinuations of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. NYE. Still the Senator from Indiana does not directly answer the question as to when Mr. Woodring did favor this kind of a program and when he did not favor it. Up to the time the orders were written over his head by the Commander in Chief, Secretary Harry Woodring was a violent foe of the program of making these advantages available to foreign governments.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator has no evidence of that kind, and I challenge him to put it into the RECORD today, tomorrow, or any other day. I have put into the RECORD the statement of Secretary Woodring, made upon his responsibility as Secretary of War, when he appeared before a responsible committee of the Senate investigating the very matter about which the Senator from North Dakota has been talking. We were investigating, under a resolution submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], whether or not the sale of supplies by this country to the Allies was in any way hampering the program of the United States, and whether or not the War Department was in accord with that program. Secretary Woodring appeared before the committee and testified as I have read from the record. At the conclusion of the testimony of General Marshall, who was supporting Secretary Woodring in everything he had said, I asked him the categorical questions which I have just read into the RECORD.

So we find that the record of Secretary Woodring and the record of the War Department, from the Secretary of War to the Chief of Staff himself, has always been the same. They were of one accord as to the sale to the Allies of materials, supplies, and ammunition, and especially aircraft. But the Senator from North Dakota, in his most insinuating manner, insinuates into the RECORD that the Secretary of War, Mr. Woodring, was opposed to that program, and that that was probably one of the things responsible for his retirement from the Cabinet. He insinuates into the RECORD that Mr. Woodring was opposed to sending the boys to Europe to die in the shambles of the battlefields of Europe. There is nothing in the record to show that Mr. Woodring ever said anything of the kind. The Senator insinuates into the RECORD that Mr. Woodring was probably asked to resign because he was asked to reveal to somebody the bomb sight. Yet the Senator from Kentucky called General Arnold, the head of the Air Corps, who has this secret in charge and who guards it jealously, and he told us, no longer than half an hour ago, that the secret had been revealed to no one; and yet the Senator from North Dakota insinuates it into the RECORD.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. NYE. The Senator from North Dakota did not insist that the secret had been revealed to anyone.

Mr. MINTON. Oh, no.

Mr. NYE. What I said, and what I repeat, is that in all probability the Secretary of War was asked to make the secret bomb sight available to the Allies, as other advantages have been made available.

Mr. MINTON. Again, I should like to have the Senator from North Dakota produce the evidence on that score. It is just another insinuation by the Senator from North Dakota which finds its way into the RECORD—an insinuation which is not backed by any facts or any evidence. It is just like his insinuation on the floor in a speech he made a few months ago to the effect that war would not break out in Europe unless the "go" sign were given in America.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator from North Dakota takes the position that probably the reason for the resignation or retirement of Secretary Woodring was that he was asked to reveal the bomb sight. The Senator from North Dakota has no more proof of that than he has of any of the other statements he has conjured out of his imagination this afternoon. He has built up a case. He has taken as his major premise the assumption that Ambassador Bullitt told the French Government that if they went to war for the protection of Poland we would come to their assistance and render military aid, even to the extent of a declaration of war. He had not one single word of evidence to submit to the Senate which would be accepted by the most remote justice of the peace in the country, to support that statement, yet he made that the major premise of his whole argument.

For most of the afternoon he has made use of his imagination, conjuring up stories, and saying that some mysterious person, whom he would not compromise by making his name public, appeared in his office and gave him a statement to that effect. He used a confidential statement which some newspaperman was supposed to have sent around the country, never once revealing the sources of his information. In the mind of the Senator from North Dakota, in this period of national and international trouble that may be the sort of statesmanship which he can accept as his type of statesmanship.

I think that this is a time when Members of the Senate of the United States and persons high in public life in this country should exhibit some restraint in their statements. Not a single word has been uttered by the Senator from North Dakota this afternoon which shows the slightest basis of evidence to prove any of the conclusions which he asks us to reach. The very argument he made when he said that probably the isolationists would be blamed for the fact that France suffered defeat, and the argument which he made in defense of himself and others whom he may include in that category, were a complete and positive answer to all the arguments he had been making up to that time. He asked, "Why should the Government of France recognize the ability of the isolationists to stop military assistance from the United States?" He said that France knew what we had in this country; that France knew our lack of war preparations; and that France was familiar with the Constitution of the United States; and yet he wants the press to spread the word throughout the United States today, on the basis of information the source of which he says he will not reveal, that the Government of the United States, acting through the President and the Ambassador to France, led France and England into this war, and is wholly responsible for the whole situation which exists in Europe today.

I think the time has come when there is some responsibility upon the Members of this body to recognize that they must deal with facts, and deal with them upon a responsible basis, and not depend upon their imaginations or their desires for political preferment. These are critical times, and the people of the country are entitled to have these times considered in a careful and serious way by the leaders in our national life.

Mr. MINTON. I thank the Senator from Washington. Of course, the whole speech of the Senator from North Dakota was merely one insinuation after another—one insinuation piled up on top of another. He even said the President of the United States has promised England and France a declaration of war. Who was his authority? Mr. Henning, the correspondent of the Chicago Tribune? The Senator from North Dakota may take the Chicago Tribune for authority if he desires, but I shall ask to be excused from accepting that authority.

The Senator from North Dakota said that because the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] had submitted a resolution to summon the Ambassador to France, Mr. Bullitt, to appear before the Foreign Relations Committee, forsooth Mr. Bullitt flew away to Europe, when the fact is that Mr. Bullitt had had his plans made for weeks, and had his reservations made days ahead, and he went only on schedule time. But the Senator from North Dakota insinuated that Mr. Bullitt was flying away to France to evade appearing before the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate. So it is that the Senator from North Dakota insinuates and insinuates, and tries to lead the country to believe that things which germinate only in his fertile brain are facts.

The Senator from North Dakota said the United States had led France and England into the war—led them into the war—had induced them to go into the war. What did the United States have to do with the violation of Czechoslovakia? What did the United States have to do with the "blitzkrieg" in Poland? What did the United States have to do with the invasion of Norway and Denmark? What did the United States have to do with the overrunning of Belgium and Holland? What did the United States have to do with crushing the very life out of France today? Yet the Senator from North Dakota says the United States led France and England into this war.

Mr. President, I should be ashamed to make such a charge against America as that America would lead France and England to the shambles of a great war, and to the very brink of destruction, and itself assume no responsibility in the matter. Of course America did not make any such promises. Of course, America did not lead England and France into war, and, of course, America knows that America is not going into the war of England and France until it becomes America's war; and the Senate of the United States and the President of the United States are not going to lead America into any war that is not America's war.

The Senator from North Dakota is a great isolationist. I have the utmost respect for certain sincere gentlemen who entertain views along that line; but I point out that at this juncture in the world's history isolationism has not led to peace. Certainly Holland was isolationist. Certainly Belgium was isolationist. Certainly Denmark was isolationist, and Norway, and little Luxemburg; but they were invaded, and cruelly overrun, and crushed to death. No, Mr. President; isolationism does not lead to peace. The world today knows the sad lesson that isolationism leads to war, total war; and right here on the floor of the United States Senate the greatest impetus to isolationism was given in 1919 or 1920, following the World War. Right here upon the floor of the United States Senate isolation was first sowed and nurtured and started on its way.

We went out in 1917 and 1918, 3,000,000 fellows like myself, under the cry that we were fighting a war to end war; that we were fighting to make the world safe for democracy. I believed that then. I believe it now. But I say to you, Mr. President, that while we won the victory on the battlefields of France, it was lost here in the United States Senate. Right here, Mr. President, when the League of Nations was turned down, the only constructive plan for collective security was destroyed, and right here we embarked upon a policy of isolationism, and isolationism became not only America's policy but the policy of everybody but Adolf Hitler and Mussolini and possibly Stalin, the heads of the totalitarian countries of Europe.

Today the path of isolationism has led to what? Not to peace—not even to war as we once knew it—but to total war as Hitler wages it in Europe today.

So, Mr. President, I am sure we are not to be concerned about whether Mr. Hitler would get mad if we should call him names. We certainly should not be much concerned about whether Mussolini would get mad if somebody should call him names. I do not particularly approve of the name-calling process, but I do not think it makes any difference to Hitler. I do not think it makes any difference to Mussolini. We might call them all the names in the book and we could not stop them. We could not deter them, and it would not make any difference; and we could keep our sweet mouths shut and say nothing about them, and they would pursue their own evil way in their own manner. So while it may be unbecoming of us to stand off 3,000 miles and call somebody names, I do not think it makes any difference in the international affairs of the world with Mr. Hitler or Mr. Mussolini. I do not think they were called any names in Holland. I do not think they were called any names in Belgium, or Denmark, or Norway, or Czechoslovakia, or Poland; and look at those countries today. They kept their sweet mouths shut. They even answered the Gallup poll that Mr. Hitler conducted over there to determine whether or not the little nations clustered about him were afraid of him. They all came in trembling and put their ballots in the box and said, "Oh, no, Mr. Hitler; we are not afraid of you—not much." Today we know the sad truth, that it does not make any difference what you stand for, what you believe in, what you do or do not do, if you happen to get into the path of the evil genius whose indomitable will rules a great part of the world today.

The Senator from North Dakota criticized Mr. Bullitt. He criticized this administration. He criticizes us about our preparedness, and he criticizes us about our failure to prepare. The Senator from North Dakota said that the group to which he belonged never voted down a battleship or a plane. Perhaps they did not, but it was not their fault. They voted against every one of them.

Mr. President, when Mr. Bullitt came back here in 1939, at the beginning of the year, and when Mr. Kennedy came back from the Court of St. James's and met in what was supposed to be a secret session with the Military Affairs Committees of the Senate and House, and told them of the critical situation in Europe, who was it that scoffed at Bullitt? Who was it that scorned the advice of Kennedy? The Senator from North Dakota and his colleagues who believed as he believed. Who was it that pooh-poohed the ideas of Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Bullitt that Hitler was in a position to overrun Europe and had the power to do it? The isolationists, the Senator from North Dakota and his colleagues.

Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota criticizes Mr. Bullitt for staying on in Paris. That is just what Mr. Herrick did in 1917 and 1918 when the Government of France left Paris and moved to Bordeaux. Mr. Herrick remained in Paris. That is exactly what Brand Whitlock did in Belgium when Belgium was overrun by the Germans and took Brussels, and overran practically the whole country. Brand Whitlock remained. Yet the Senator from North Dakota insinuates again that there must have been some sinister purpose on the part of Mr. Bullitt in remaining in Paris. He also intimates that Mr. Bullitt burned all the records. I suppose the Senator from North Dakota would not want him to turn them over to Hitler, who was knocking at the door, who was getting ready to come into Paris.

Mr. NYE. When did I cast any aspersions this afternoon regarding the burning of the records by Mr. Bullitt?

Mr. MINTON. Was I asleep? Am I walking in my sleep, too? [Laughter.]

Mr. NYE. I have very vivid recollection of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] making a point of that kind, but it was not a part of my remarks.

Mr. MINTON. I must appeal to the RECORD. If the Senator did not say it, and if the Senator did not insinuate it, if the Senator did not make those remarks, then I apologize, but I think the RECORD will show that the Senator did.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not recall what the Senator from North Dakota said, but I did call attention to the fact that the American Ambassador to France had not accompanied the French Government when the French Government left the seat of government at Paris, that he had remained in Paris and had burned all the diplomatic correspondence instead of removing it, including his code book. If the Senator from Indiana desires to make anything out of that suggestion, I shall be very glad indeed to have him do so.

Mr. MINTON. All I care to make out of it is that I think Mr. Bullitt acted wisely.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not.

Mr. MINTON. Then what is the argument about it?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I say I do not think the Ambassador acted wisely.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator does not think he acted wisely?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator thinks he should have turned them over to Hitler?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not. I think the Ambassador to France should have pursued the course pursued by other diplomatic representatives in France and removed his diplomatic correspondence, including his code book and himself, and accompanied the French Government, to which he was accredited, instead of throwing the burden upon an American diplomatic representative accredited to another nation, Poland, to represent the United States at the seat of government of France.

Mr. MINTON. Of course, Mr. Biddle had formerly represented us at Warsaw, and was in Paris, and had been accredited secondarily there to assist Mr. Bullitt, to help him with his manifold duties there, and Mr. Biddle had retired with the Government of France, first to Tours, and I think perhaps on down to Bordeaux. But I say again that this was not without precedent. It is the same thing Mr. Myron T. Herrick did in 1917 and 1918, it is the same thing Mr. Brand Whitlock did in Belgium. So there was nothing unusual about what Mr. Bullitt did under those circumstances.

I wish to revert again to the statement of the Senator from North Dakota that he and his isolationist friends had not voted down a single ship or a single plane. No; they did not vote them down, but if they had had enough votes they would have. In 1938, when we had before us the Navy appropriation bill, to build the program which was outlined in 1938, to establish a navy in defense of the shores of the United States, and to appropriate money for that, how did the Senator from North Dakota vote on that appropriation bill? He voted "no."

In 1938, when he cast that vote, he was accompanied by all of his isolationist friends, including the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], who at least has had the courage and the sincerity and the honesty to turn about and go in the other direction when he saw his country in danger. But the Senator from Michigan stood over in his place, and, with his great, booming voice, and his powerful eloquence—I hear him now, the great isolationist voice of the United States—when we were trying to enact legislation to protect the shores of the United States, no longer ago than 1938, standing on the other side of the aisle and shouting, "What are we going to do with this super, super Navy?" Will there ever cease to ring in the Halls of the United States Senate those words of the eloquent Senator from Michigan as he said, "What are we going to do with this super, super Navy?" And the Senator from North Dakota voted with him, to try to keep us from building up the Navy, the first line of defense of this country.

In 1939, when the Navy expansion bill was before the Senate, the Senator from North Dakota voted again against a navy for this country, and the only naval bill for which he has ever voted he voted for the other day, when we had the Navy bill before the Senate.

When we had before us on the 6th day of March 1938 the aviation expansion program, and we wanted to amend the bill so as to increase the number of planes from 5,000 to 6,000, was the Senator from North Dakota ready and willing to cast his vote for war planes to defend the shores of the United States? Not at all. The Senator voted against the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I voted in exactly the same way the Senator from North Dakota voted, and both of us voted in accordance with the recommendation made to the Committee on Military Affairs, of which the Senator from Indiana was a member, by the chief of the military air force, General Arnold, when he testified that 5,500 planes, instead of 6,000, was entirely adequate for national defense at that time.

Mr. MINTON. At least the Senator from Indiana must have credit for seeing the light, when the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from North Dakota could not. I voted for more airplanes and the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from North Dakota voted for fewer.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is entirely true; but I do not think the Senator from Indiana will deny that both the Senator from North Dakota and I voted in exact accordance with the recommendations of the President of the United States and the testimony of General Craig, the Chief of Staff, and General Arnold, the chief of the military air force, until the last minute, when the suggestion was made that we might just as well increase the limit without increasing the cost.

Let me say also that, as a matter of fact, under the policy of transferring planes to other nations, we have not anything like the number of planes we authorized, and which we were assured at that time we would have, either with 5,500 planes authorized or 6,000 authorized.

Mr. MINTON. I still say that I voted for more planes than the Senator from Missouri did. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator will permit one further suggestion, merely standing here and voting for planes does not make planes, if at the same time the Senator votes to authorize the transfer to some other country of planes which we might have and might need.

Mr. MINTON. I do not think there has been any transfer of planes that has hurt this country. For every plane that has been transferred or might have been transferred we have one on the way which is a better plane than the one we transferred, which will probably cost us a little less money.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator know anything to the contrary of the statement that was made to the junior Senator from Florida today at noon by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], who is acquainted with the productivity of the Curtiss Co. in Buffalo, who stated that when the program of allowing planes to go to Europe was inaugurated, they were turning out one plane a week, that thereafter they began to turn out one plane a day, and since that time they have been able to turn out five planes a day?

Mr. MINTON. Of course, that was made entirely possible because foreign governments were placing their orders for planes here. If the plane manufacturers had had to depend on the orders of the American Government alone, and of the commercial airplane users in this country, they could never have built up the airplane-producing capacity we have today. It was for that reason that Secretary of War Woodring and the Chief of Staff, General Marshall, and the head of our Air Corps, General Arnold, all approved of the plan of selling these airplanes to foreign countries.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and he was certainly present at the meeting of the Committee of Military Affairs in which Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, and the Secretary of War, Mr. Woodring, almost engaged in a fist fight about what had been the trend of the War Department's recommendations, and in which it was finally admitted that the War Department's recommendations originally made by General Craig as Acting Secretary of War had been overridden by higher authority.

While it is entirely true, as it appeared from the record at that time—and I do not know what record the Senator is reading from, because the Senator knows the record was "jimmied with" several different times—the Senator as an eyewitness and earwitness will recall that it was in the testimony that General Craig, as Acting Secretary of War, very strenuously opposed the transfers to any foreign power of planes that might be necessary or useful to the United States itself, but afterward at a meeting at the White House, at which the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy were present as well as General Craig, the objections of the War Department were overruled, and therefore finally at long last the War Department officials gave in, and gave their adhesion to a principle which had been ordered by the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, that is not my recollection of the record, and it is certainly not the record that was made before the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will recall, the record was made three or four different times. The original hearing, if the Senator will recall, was held in executive session, and, in spite of the fact that at the opening of every session, I had given notice that at the conclusion of the hearings I intended to move to make the record public, that was voted down, and it was necessary to start all over again, hold an entirely different set of hearings, allow everybody to come in and testify all over again, change their testimony if they wanted to, and then correct their testimony before it was published, and the original testimony, as I think the Senator from Indiana will recall, and I am certain every other member of the Military Affairs Committee will recall, was never published and never made public.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I will certainly not join the Senator from Missouri in any insinuations with respect to the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee [Mr. SHEPPARD], who conducted those hearings.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; if the Senator will permit me, I certainly do not wish to make any insinuations with respect to the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee. He acted by authority of the Military Affairs Committee in failing to make public the original testimony and in taking an entirely different set of hearings, and also in submitting to the witnesses their testimony for correction as they pleased and for deletion as they pleased. I do not think that any member of the Military Affairs Committee at that time would have accused the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of doing anything improper, but I do say that the original testimony was never made public.

Mr. MINTON. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that my recollection does not agree with his, and that, if the original hearings were not made public, it was not because there was anything to conceal. And if they were not made public, the subsequent records were made public and the hearings were wide open, and I was in favor of wide-open hearings, as was the Senator from Missouri. So they all came in and heard the story, and the newspapermen were there and reported it, and we all know that the War Department was in one accord about the sale of this material. Secretary of War Woodring, as I read from this other hearing, in March of 1940, appeared before the committee and testified that the program had his wholehearted approval. Not only did he so testify, but General Marshall testified to the same thing.

So, Mr. President, coming back to this increase in the air program, when it came to the final passage of the bill, the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Missouri were among the eight who voted against it. The Senator from Missouri said a while ago that he was voting for what the War Department wanted and what the President of the United States had recommended, but when the bill came for passage he did not vote to increase the defenses of this country by a single airplane. That appears in the RECORD of March 7, 1939. There were only 8 votes cast against the bill, and 77 votes were cast in favor of it.

So, if we do not have fewer ships today than we once had, if we do not have fewer ships today than we should have now, it is not the fault of the Senator from North Dakota. He voted against every appropriation bill for the Navy since I have been in the United States Senate. If we have enough airplanes today to defend America, it is not the fault of the Senator from North Dakota or the Senator from Missouri. They voted against the airplanes to defend this country.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did the Senator ever hear of my voting to transfer ships that were needed for the defense of the United States, according to the testimony, to any foreign power?

Mr. MINTON. No. The Senator voted for none. We should not have any to transfer to any foreign power, according to the way the Senator voted.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator does not intend to make that statement?

Mr. MINTON. Here is the record.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Wait a minute. I offered on the floor of the Senate to vote for the recommendation of the President of the United States and of the Chief of the Air Service of the Army. When the Senator from Indiana and some other Senators undertook to take an additional bite I voted against the appropriation.

Mr. MINTON. And the Senator voted against any appropriation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That statement is not correct.

Mr. MINTON. Here is the record.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I voted against that particular bill, Mr. President, because I realized that a lot of warmongers were attempting at every step to increase the authorization. I was willing to vote for any authorization that the War Department would come here and say was necessary for the national defense of the United States. I was not willing to let the Senator from Indiana and other members of the Military Affairs Committee increase the authorization above what the War Department said was necessary.

Mr. MINTON. All right. If that is the Senator's explanation at this late hour it satisfies me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, it was the explanation I made at that time on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. MINTON. Yes. Well, the fact remains that the Senator from Missouri voted for no planes, not even what the War Department authorized and asked for, not what the President of the United States recommended and asked for, and what his colleagues on the floor voted for, but the Senator from Missouri was one of the eight who voted against the entire bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Wait a moment, Mr. President. Will the Senator explain what opportunity anyone had to vote for the number of planes recommended by the War Department excepting by voting against the committee amendment on that occasion?

Mr. MINTON. Now we have this picture of the Senator from Missouri who, I know, wants to defend America. He is not a warmonger. I am the warmonger, according to the Senator from Missouri. I learned about war just as the Senator from Missouri did. I am no more a warmonger than is the Senator from Missouri. I have sons who are eligible to carry the arms of their country today, and I am not a warmonger, and I am not going to vote for war that will send my boys or the Senator from Missouri's boy into war unless it is America's war; and I will turn my back upon my boys in shame if they turn their backs upon the flag of their country that my grandfather fought and died for and I offered my life for in 1917 and 1918.

Would the Senator from Missouri say the same thing?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator from Indiana will yield, I will say the same thing.

Mr. MINTON. I am glad. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Wait a minute. The Senator asked me a question. Let me answer. I will be very glad to answer. I hope never to see the day—and I know that I never will see the day when any son of mine will be the first member of my family since the days of the Revolution, and before the Revolution in this country when the United States is engaged in war, who will not engage in the war as a defender of the United States; but, Mr. President, I will never cast my vote either to get into war or to take steps leading inevitably into war, which will involve my son and other men's sons in a war, except in the defense of the United States of America. I will never cast a vote, Mr. President, that will take us along step by step, inch by inch, and put us in the situation under the guise of measures short of war, to the point where we will be engaged in a war. And I call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to this fact—that when we arrive at that point we will then not be able to say whether we will send our Army overseas or what we will do. When we have once cast the die by engaging in a war, by sending our ships, by sending our naval vessels and our air force to the attack we cannot then say, "No, no; we will stop right here at the brink and not send our men." If that situation ever occurs and the United States is precipitated into the war, it will not be by my vote; but when it happens my boys will march out, and I will march out with them.

Mr. MINTON. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that he will be accompanied by me and my boys, if that is any comfort to him.

Mr. President, I will not cast a vote to send the Senator's boys to war any more quickly than I would cast a vote to send my boy to war—and that is not at all, unless it is America's war. But, God knows, America may not have the choice.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I do not yield to the Senator from Missouri at the moment. I shall be glad to yield later, if the Senator wishes to interrupt me.

Belgium did not have the choice. Holland did not have the choice. Denmark did not have the choice. Norway did not have the choice. Czechoslovakia did not have the choice. Poland did not have the choice. Luxemburg did not have the choice. A man who starts out with the philosophy that all democracies are decadent and should be destroyed, and that his particular race of people are the chosen people to rule the earth becomes a challenge to democracy everywhere.

I am not going to rush into the war. I am not going to go over there and seek out Mr. Hitler on the shores of another land. I only pray God that war will not seek us out over here, on our own shores. But, Mr. President, I do not want America ever to become involved in anybody's war but America's war, for the safety, welfare, and defense of America.

I saw war in Europe. I saw how towns were leveled and made a shambles. I saw the victims of the war. They were carried down the road or trundled along in this vehicle or that vehicle. Beside them came the refugees, the wounded, the suffering, and the dying, in the shambles of war which wrecked their beautiful land and leveled the houses that they called home. I do not want to see that condition come to America. I do not want America ever to know war at all, unless it be America's war. But I hope that even such a war will never be fought upon American soil.

I make but one plea. In the light of the speech by the Senator from North Dakota, I plead that we shall not stand upon the floor of the United States Senate and make unsubstantiated statements, which are not backed by the facts, insinuating that others want to lead this country into war. I confidently believe that no Member of the Senate or the House of Representatives, and no man in the White House or in the Cabinet, wishes to lead America into war. I believe we are all patriotic. I believe we all love America above everything else, and I believe we are all ready to do what we can to defend America, standing upon America's shores, defending America to the last. My sole plea is that we accord to each other the sincerity of purpose, patriotism, and high and honorable position which we claim for ourselves. I claim it for the President of the United States, as I claim it for myself and my fellow Senators.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I know that if the spy system of Hitler is functioning today as effectively as it has been functioning every other day, by this time Hitler is pretty well aware of the debate which has occurred in the Senate thus far today.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know how long the Senator intends to speak.

Mr. PEPPER. Only a few minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wanted to see if we could not obtain a unanimous-consent agreement to limit debate on the pending bill. We have spent the whole day discussing the European war, and I am not making any complaint of that, though I doubt whether we have accomplished much in the way of legislation. I should like to get on with the bill, and I should like to make an effort a little later to secure action on another bill. I think Senators might now adjust themselves to the possibility of a night session. I still hope that we may at least begin to call the calendar.

I ask unanimous consent that during the further consideration of the pending bill no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 20 minutes on the bill or any amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky that during the further consideration of the pending bill no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 20 minutes on the bill or any amendment?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, personally I have no objection to the request. I think the able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who is in charge of the bill, and other Senators should be in the Chamber. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not want to interfere with the Senator from Florida, but I will say to the Senator from Oregon that the Senator from Massachusetts told me that he could conclude anything further he had to say on the bill in 20 or 30 minutes. The suggested arrangement would give any Senator 40 minutes in all.

Mr. McNARY. I withdraw my suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, as one citizen and Senator of this country, I am indeed sorry that Hitler will receive information as to the remarks which have been made in this body today, because they will give him—I am sure completely beyond the intention or design of any Senator who has spoken—much consolation and considerable assurance; for his policy has always been to divide his enemies and attack one of them while he lulled into security another which he intended later to attack.

I remember the fable of Aesop, in which a lion designing to devour three bulls, finding them all together, thought he had better not attack them at that time; so he stirred up dissension among them. He got them vying with one another, until finally they separated, one in one corner of the field, another in another corner, and the third in a third corner, and singly he devoured them. So Hitler now has considerable reason to believe that the apostles of appeasement have already begun to establish their leadership in the United States.

Senators are already saying, "We do not see any unavoidable necessity of conflict between this country and Hitler. It may be he will not attack us. It may be there will be no war with him in which we shall have to engage. It may be he will relinquish his designs upon our country and our continent. Let us see if we cannot find some method by which we can adjust our conflicts, attain some harmony of purpose between Hitler and ourselves."

Senators have not yet begun to hear the last of that argument. They will hear it day by day as the conflict grows more crucial all over the world. If the British Empire collapses and Hitler stands dominant astride four continents, with his power the superior force in all the world, with little nations cringing in their footsteps before the wicked eye he may turn upon them, we shall hear yet other apostles of appeasement say, "There is no use in our incurring his enmity. He is a powerful man. His country is successful in a marvelous 'blitzkrieg.' Let us stay on good terms with him." If that counsel prevails like a cancer that eats out one's vitals, our own will to defend ourselves is going to be destroyed by the Chamberlains of the United States Congress and the United States of America. Every argument which the able chairman of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee made here today was made in the House of Commons by Chamberlain, and by Baldwin, and by others who thought as they did.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. No; I decline to yield.

Mr. HOLT. I want to——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. PEPPER. They were just as sincere as the able Senator from Massachusetts was today; and we who admire him and love him know that he spoke from the bottom of his heart. Does anybody question Chamberlain's sincerity?

I happened to be in the House of Commons in 1938, and I saw the telegram that was handed to Chamberlain by a messenger from Lord Halifax, who sat in the Lords' gallery and looked down upon the Commons in session. At that time Chamberlain was already speaking, thinking perhaps that he would have to advise the Commons that there was no escape from war. While he spoke, the telegram was put in his hands. It was an invitation from Hitler to come to Munich the second day after that day and sit down in consultation with him.

Does anybody deny that Chamberlain was sincere? He was trying to keep war away from Great Britain. He was trying to save the fine sons of British mothers and fathers. He was trying to keep the blood of Britons from pouring like rivers around the earth. Gracious alive! Does anyone think the Prime Minister of Great Britain would have tucked his coattails behind an umbrella and, almost cowering, have gone to Hitler's castle upon a mountaintop and humbled himself before that heartless man if he had not been trying to save the blood of Englishmen?

He is not privately a coward. Chamberlain is a man of peace, willing to give almost anything for peace. When he came back from Berchtesgaden and reported to his people I was in London, and saw the newspaper headlines, and heard the radio announcements. I saw the people standing around the bulletin boards. I saw clerks in stores so nervous they could hardly wait on customers. They did not want war. They were praying, every time they got on their knees, that a just God would somehow or other bring civilization's principles to play in Hitler's heart. They were trying to believe what he told them; that all he wanted was to put Germans back into the Reich and let Germans have the right to live together.

The British are not cowards. Their history proves that. They fought when things were well and when they were ill. But old Chamberlain, honest of heart, said, when he got out of the airplane at the airport, when he held up the agreement that he and Hitler had signed, "This means peace in our time"—the peace he loved.

He believed Hitler, and he let him have Czechoslovakia; and when Hitler got Czechoslovakia, that is when the Germans broke through to Paris. When they got Czechoslovakia at Munich, when they stole it from old, trusting Chamberlain, that is when they got to Paris. That is what prostrated broken and bleeding France today.

It was Munich. Had it not been for Munich, had the democracies come together; had the people who have decent sentiments in their hearts risen up with vigorous accord, there would not have been any trampled France; there would have been no crushed Belgium, no devastated Holland, no vassal Denmark, no enslaved Norway, nor would there be now the bloody brigands of Hitler and Mussolini who are dividing up the world in a game of loot the like of which the world has never seen.

And so these other appeasement apostles were sincere. They said, "Let us get along with Hitler." Right here in this Capitol, in January of 1938, two eminent British visitors came. I happened to be one of a group that sat down to dine with them. In that conversation they said — and they were supposed to be an influential group in Great Britain—"Perhaps if we will just let Hitler have enough, his appetite will be satisfied. Perhaps our fault heretofore has been in not giving him enough as fast as he asked for it."

They wanted peace, also, when they proposed that policy; so, Mr. President, they let Hitler break through Czechoslovakia. He trampled down their defended and fortified frontier. He took over the Skoda munition works, the greatest in the world; and some of the big tanks that broke through the line of forts in France were made in the Skoda munition works which Hitler stole from Chamberlain at Munich.

That is what appeasement got Great Britain. That is what it got Czechoslovakia. That is what it got Belgium and all the other vassal states of Europe which now cringe before the sword of Hitler. Yet when I hear the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee of the United States Senate offer a justification for Hitler today, I thought to myself, "My God! How Hitler must smile when he hears that news."

The able chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee said the Versailles Treaty was the cause of this war. Mr. President, the newspapers this afternoon tell of another armistice. It is going to be laid down in the same railroad car at Compiegne where Foch handed the terms to the German representatives in 1918. The able Senator says that those harsh terms, which later found fruition in the Treaty of Versailles, were what angered the German people, struck them to the quick, and imbedded in them an intense ambition to get revenge. If harsh treaties, harshly imposed, cause war by leading to vindictive and vengeful sentiments, let us see what an example in magnanimity, in generosity, in Christian sentiment, Adolf Hitler is going to exhibit in the terms of peace which he, with his own bloody hands, hands to the French representatives in the same railroad car, over the same table, where the Germans received those terms in 1918. Let us see how generous Adolf Hitler is, this great statesman. We shall see whether he exhibits charity or whether he does not.

But, Mr. President, let us glance at the difference between the victims of Hitler's armistice terms and the victims of Foch's armistice terms.

The Senator from Massachusetts indicated that the Germans now are just trying to right a great wrong. That is what the Germans say.

Wrongs to Germany's military honor now righted, DNB says in the afternoon paper.

DNB is the official German radio station. Well, Senators, what wrong caused Germany to march into France in 1914? Was there any old treaty of peace that had been inflicted upon the Germans by any French conqueror that gave them the cause they were trying to vindicate in 1914?

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. No; I decline to yield.

Mr. HOLT. I want to answer the Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. I decline to yield.

Mr. President, the last war between Germany and France before 1914 had been in 1871. Who imposed the terms of peace in the Palace of Versailles in 1871? It was Bismarck, the Iron Chancelor of Germany. The Germans were the victors in that war. They exacted a billion dollars in gold as an indemnity, as they occupied the heart of France.

What caused that war? Had France attacked Germany? Had Frenchmen endeavored to take some of Germany's soil? Had they taken any of her colonies? What single justification was there for the order which sent the German legions across the boundaries of Belgium and France in the summer of 1914, when citizens laughed and children played happily upon the Champs d'Elysées in Paris, unsuspecting so heinous a thing as a German attack?

Mr. President, there was no Treaty of Versailles in 1914 when the German columns crashed their way across Belgium and France. The Germans wanted something then just as they want something now. Then, after they, without justification or excuse, had trampled down a major portion of fair France, destroyed her beautiful cathedrals, killed her women and children, murdered the soldiery of the world, and driven the populations of Belgium and France as fleeing refugees into the highways and byways; after 4 long years of cruel war, after the death of nearly 10,000,000 men, men dead never to live again mortal lives, eventually the beast was beaten back to his lair, and his prey, his bloody prey, lay scattered all over the face of the earth, and the heart of humanity was wrung in anguish at what suffering the Hitler of that day had caused, then, because the victors, speaking the sentiments of retributive justice for so heinous a crime, imposed a harsh peace, now, the Germans say, "What a wrong they did us."

Mr. President, that peace was made on the soil of France. The German Army was on the soil of France when that peace was made. The war was fought on the soil of Belgium and France. Germany did not have to be rebuilt, her cathedrals were not destroyed, her children had not seen the scourge of war first-hand, her economy had not been disordered, her fields had not been drenched in blood, where the machines of war had seared every furrow with instruments of death instead of life. No, Germany had not experienced that; only France was the bleeding country which had borne the brunt of this horrible invasion.

Now Hitler is going to right the wrong, is he? I would to God he could right the wrong. I wish he could bring back the leg of that smiling boy who talked to me in the cloakroom here today. I wish he could bring back relatives and friends of mine whom I loved almost like my own life. I wish he could bring back sons of mothers who today must be wondering if we have forgotten the sacrifice they made. I wish Hitler did have the power to right the wrongs of Versailles. But the first wrong I want him to right is the wrong which sent the German soldiery, without reason, justification, or excuse, across Belgium, which Germany had sworn to save inviolate; across France, which had given him no reason to attack.

Think of the perfidy and the iniquity of his heinous effrontery, to make a spectacle in the forest of Compiegne today, as if he had any cause to complain, a beast who already has devoured millions of sons who lived in this generation. If he got justice, if other wrongs were righted, he should be drawn and quartered, and his blood spilled in every stream that runs into every ocean of the earth, so that he would be scattered as far as the orbit and the circumference of this sphere.

For men, and Senators, chairmen of committees, to stand here and talk about a nation with that creed, and leaders with that principle, actuated by that policy, as if we could grasp their bloody hand in friendship, makes me feel as if priests apostate to their faith reached out to grasp the hand of him who sold his master for 30 pieces of silver. I cannot realize that Senators could speak of the doctrine of appeasement, even in the Senate of the United States, or of making peace with Hitler. We should not make peace with Hitler if he had never even threatened our shores, if we profess to be honorable men.

Mr. President, I have a paper here in which a story is told which is of perhaps little interest to those who want to defend America. It is the Washington Post, Thursday, June 20, 1940. That was yesterday. The article reads:

REICH PUTS PRESSURE ON URUGUAY TO HALT ANTI-NAZI DRIVE—BREAK LIKELY IF GERMANS ARE DEPORTED—FEAR MONTEVIDEO MAY BE FORCED TO SUSPEND CAMPAIGN

MONTEVIDEO, June 19.—Germany is exerting tremendous political and economic pressure on the Uruguayan Government to halt what Berlin calls an unfriendly anti-German campaign, and has threatened to break off diplomatic relations if any Nazi leaders are deported.

Fear is expressed here that this pressure will force the Uruguayan Government to release Nazi leaders now under arrest and drop its plans for energetic measures against Nazi organizations.

The German Government presented a strong diplomatic protest to the Uruguayan Government Monday through German Minister Otto Langmann, demanding immediate cessation of "unfriendly agitation" against Germany. This protest is believed to have been the cause of the Government's action in urging the Chamber of Deputies to go into secret session Monday afternoon to receive a report of its investigating committee.

WOULD LEAVE AT ONCE

Minister of Interior Manuel Tiscornia told last night's secret session of the Chamber of Deputies that Julius Dalldorf, the "Little Fuehrer for Uruguay," had told him that if Dalldorf or other Nazi leaders were deported, the German minister would ask for his passports and leave the country immediately. Since Dalldorf is a member of the legation staff as press attaché it is taken for granted that this message was sent by Langmann.

Despite the Government's efforts to keep the investigating committee's report from reaching the public, the chamber voted to issue a stenographic record of the secret sessions to the newspapers.

Now listen to this:

A plot for military seizure of Uruguay, existence in the German colony here of Nazi military motorized groups operating more than 100 motorcycles, and the fact that the Nazis attribute tremendous importance to Uruguay as a base for operations in South America are three of the outstanding conclusions of the investigating committee.

One more paragraph:

The committee proved alarming Nazi penetration in Uruguayan Government offices, either by placing actual Nazi members in high positions or controlling Uruguayans who occupy positions of responsibility.

Mr. President, I shall not read the remainder of the article, but it indicates that Germany is not waiting, except for the time when she gets ready to attack the northern part of this hemisphere.

In the United States of America "fifth columnists" are exploding bombs, blowing up our defenses. I dare say they know every war plan we have, that they have seen the blueprint of every ship in one way or another. They know how long it would take to mobilize; they know all the elements of our weakness and our strength.

Are we doing that in Germany? Are we trying to set up an American Government in Germany? Are we saying, "Let the bunds live in Germany; let us wear uniforms over there and claim allegiance to the United States, and try to set up a democratic government in Germany"? How long would they last if that were tried? If we went over to one of Germany's neighbors and tried to set up propaganda machines and had a motorized cycle corps, how long would that last?

Mr. President, only democracies lie by until the hand of the avenger is ready to strike. Then we wake up and flounder around, wondering why we did not wake up earlier.

I shall not prolong this, except to say that in this week's issue of the United States News, beginning with page 7 and running through pages 8 and 9, Senators will find an illuminating discussion under the heading, "Nazis Already Invade a Latin American Nation."

A short time ago I made the statement on the floor of the Senate that Hitler had already declared war against the United States, and some Senators were shocked at that statement. The United States adopted the Monroe Doctrine, which looks to maintaining the integrity of the Western Hemisphere. Is what I refer to interfering with the integrity of the Western Hemisphere? Is it in violation of the Monroe Doctrine? Is it a penetration by force across the boundaries of this continent? If it is, it is already a violation of the Monroe Doctrine. And what have we done about it? Senators say, "No; I do not want to send my boy to shed his blood in war." They are talking about European war. What will they do about Bolivia, Brazil, Argentina, Uruguay, or some other country in South America?

Suppose the Nazis take over the Government of Uruguay. Suppose they then begin to build there an army, to build a navy, and to build an air corps. Let us say that their planes begin to cruise over one boundary and over another boundary. Are we going to send our boys down there then? Are our appeasement Senators going to say, "Oh, that is their affair now"? Remember, Mr. President, that it is farther from New York to Buenos Aires or Montevideo than it is from New York to Moscow. Will we be willing then to send any expeditionary force down to South America? We have not sent one yet, but we know that the Nazis are already in process of penetrating South America.

The appeasement champions said, "Let us not do anything" at Munich. "That is their affair."

The appeasement champions said when the Nazis took over Austria, "Let us not do anything. It is in Europe."

When the Nazis took over Belgium the appeasement champions said, "No; let us not do anything. That is on the Continent."

When Holland was ravished, appeasement champions said "Let us not do anything. That is across the seas from us."

When the Nazis took over inoffensive Denmark the appeasement champions said, "Let us not do anything. That is outside our sphere."

When Norway fell into the grasp of the tiger's claws the appeasement champions said, "Let us not do anything. That is far beyond the seas."

When the Nazis crushed France the same champions of appeasement said, "Let us not do anything. France belongs to the Eastern Hemisphere, and we live in the Western Hemisphere."

And now, if Hitler destroys the British Empire, the same champions of appeasement will say, "Let us not do anything. That is another country."

So, Mr. President, when the Nazis come to South America these champions of appeasement will still say, "Let us not do anything." When they come to Uruguay they will say, "That country is far away. Let us not do anything." When they come to Brazil the same champions of appeasement will say, "Brazil is thousands of miles distant. Let us not do anything." When they come to Colombia and Bolivia and Paraguay and Argentina and Chile they will still say, "Let us not do anything."

When they finally cross the borders and enter into Central America, and finally begin to move their columns into Mexico, and across the Rio Grande there will still be a few isolationists left, there will still be left a few champions of appeasement, there will still be left a few so-called "defenders of America," who will not be willing to do anything until the Nazis send their tanks and their airplanes and their infantry and their motorized columns across the frontiers of our own dear country.

Already we have lost our trade. The magazine to which I referred says that one-half of all South American exports go to Europe. The President is now recommending a $200,000,000 cartel to develop trade with South America. Who is paying for the exports we have lost? The farmers and the laboring men and the businessmen of the United States. I say that Hitler has made us pay.

We have appropriated over $5,000,000,000 in the last 3 weeks. Hitler made the farmers and the laboring men and the businessmen of the United States pay for it. We have imposed additional taxes on American citizens. Hitler makes them pay for that. We are already saddling ourselves with the greatest burden we have placed on the backs of our taxpayers in all our history of peace. Hitler makes us bear that burden. And the yoke that is being placed upon the necks of our people will become more and more galling.

Hitler took our trade away from us, destroyed our Monroe Doctrine, sent "fifth columnists" into every State and city of North America, sent "fifth columnists" and Nazi troops into South America, destroyed nearly every democracy on the face of the earth, destroyed or took over their fleets; and Senators, isolationists, Chamberlains, deluded appeasement champions, will say, "Americans, be calm. There is no danger. Hitler is likely to get in a good humor in a little while. Perhaps when he has eaten up the smaller nations he will be satiated, and let us alone. Perhaps his appetite will be satisfied. Perhaps even his belly will be gorged eventually."

Mr. President, a few years from now, when our standard of living has been thrown back to that of 1835, when we have compulsory military training, when our whole economy is regimented, when freedom is lost in America, we may turn around and ask, "Who lost it for us? Who took it away? Who let this man steal it from under our noses?" And the finger of America will point at just one class of men, the men who could have seen but would not, the men who were honestly deluded—yes, Mr. President, they will eventually be recognized by the citizenry of America, by poor lone mothers of America, weeping for their sons, hoping they will come back from South America, from the jungles of the Amazon. They will be weeping, weeping, wondering if their sons will ever come back from where the real war mongers, who are now the appeasement champions, sent them to rot and to die.

So, Mr. President, let history judge who are the warmongers of this Congress and who are the defenders of this dear country of ours.

COERCION OF CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I dislike to interrupt the debate which is going on to talk about a mere matter of legislation pending in the Congress of the United States, but I desire to read into the RECORD a bulletin which appears in the afternoon's Evening Star. I read:

> The Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee reported today that there was an abundance of evidence that many Missouri State employees had been coerced indirectly into contributing to the senatorial campaign of Gov. Lloyd C. Stark.

I know nothing about political conditions in the State of Missouri. I do know that there is a bill pending in the House of Representatives, which was passed by this body after some few weeks of debate, on the 18th day of March, if I am not incorrect in my memory, which would tend in some degree to afford relief against such conditions.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator give the name by which that legislation is popularly known?

Mr. HATCH. I should prefer that the Senator from Washington would do that.

Mr. HATCH subsequently said: Mr. President, in connection with the legislation pending in the House of Representatives which I mentioned a moment ago, when I read the bulletin which appeared in this afternoon's Star the sole information I had on the subject was just what the newspaper stated. Since then the chairman of the Senate Committee Investigating Campaign Expenditures, who is now in the Chamber—and I was looking for him—came to me and told me that the chief trouble and difficulty the committee has in instances which he says are correctly revealed by this bulletin is that there is absolutely no legislation which will enable the committee to do anything other than to give publicity to its findings.

I am sure the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] will concur in that statement, and will also concur in the thought that it is necessary for the Congress, either at this session or at some other time, by adequate legislation, to go as far as it can and do as much as it possibly can under the Constitution to prevent such things as this happening.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GILLETTE. I am very glad to corroborate the statement just made by the distinguished Senator from New Mexico about the bill to which he refers. The Senator who now graces the chair, presiding over the Senate (Mr. MILLER in the chair), as a member of the special committee, and the vice chairman of it, knows that it is true that we would find our work immeasurably aided if the legislation which has been fostered, introduced, and sponsored by the Senator had passed the House and were now the law of the land.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wish to say to the Senator from Iowa that I had no thought of calling this special legislation to the attention of the Senate. What I wanted to call to the attention of the Senate was the evil which this bulletin reveals.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bill and joint resolution of the Senate:

S. 2047. An act to divest prize-fight films of their character as subjects of interstate or foreign commerce, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 279. Joint resolution to amend section 4 of Public Resolution No. 54, approved November 4, 1939, entitled "Joint resolution to preserve the neutrality and the peace of the United States and to secure the safety of its citizens and their interests."

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9850) to expedite the strengthening of the national defense.

The message further announced that the House still further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 35, 36, 37, 38, and 39 to the bill (H. R. 9007) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 6572. An act to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, to provide for marine war-risk insurance and reinsurance and for marine risk reinsurance, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9899. An act extending the jurisdiction of the Civil Aeronautics Authority over certain air-mail services, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED OR PLACED ON CALENDAR

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred, or ordered to be placed on the calendar, as indicated below:

H. R. 6572. An act to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, to provide for marine war-risk insurance and reinsurance and for marine-risk reinsurance, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 9899. An act extending the jurisdiction of the Civil Aeronautics Authority over certain air-mail services, and for other purposes; to the calendar.

EXPEDITION IN NAVAL SHIPBUILDING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9822) to expedite naval shipbuilding, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLT obtained the floor.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. During the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Indiana some controversy arose as to what had actually happened in the Committee on Military Affairs during the investigation of the sale to France of planes designed for the American Army somewhat over a year ago.

I simply desire to call attention to what actually happened. The entire testimony before the Committee on Military Affairs was taken in shorthand. My motion to make that record public was voted down. Then, despite the tremendous surge of popular opinion in favor of making the record public, the record never was made public, but a new hearing was held, in which the witnesses were supposed to repeat what they had said in the first hearing. Even the second hearing did not completely and adequately report the testimony before the Military Affairs Committee.

I hold in my hand the record which was finally given out, after two or three tries, after all the witnesses had testified two or three times and two or three times had been afforded the opportunity of correcting and deleting their testimony. I hold in my hand the record of the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs of the United States Senate, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, on H. R. 8379. I invite any Member of the Senate or any citizen of the United States to examine that record and note the large number of instances in which stars and asterisks are printed. I happen to note one instance on page 210, two on page 211, three on page 212, one on page 213, and various other instances in which stars indicate that the essential testimony, to part of which I referred this afternoon, has been deleted in the publication of the testimony. I call to the memory of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], whom I happen to see sitting immediately before me, some of whom are members of that committee, certain facts and testimony of the very greatest importance, which does not appear in the published testimony.

The Senator from Indiana has referred to the attitude of the Secretary of War, the Honorable Harry H. Woodring. In my opinion, Secretary Woodring was a very able and extremely efficient Secretary of War. He worked in closest harmony with the officers of the General Staff and the officers who had responsibility for the military defense of the United States. From the testimony which I heard as a member of the Military Affairs Committee and what I read in the public press, I am of the opinion that Secretary Woodring has been sacrificed—for political purposes, of course, because a coalition Cabinet was desired—but much more fully, because of his objection to giving away instruments and weapons essential to the defense of the United States. There is no point in the Senator from Indiana, the Senator from North Dakota, myself, or anybody else expressing his opinion as to what the position of the Secretary of War was. I apprehend that his position with regard to the conduct of the War Department in the past few years may be best expressed in the letter which he wrote to the President of the United States in resigning. I have no personal knowledge of the letter, and all I know about it is what I have seen in the stories which have been printed in the newspapers, one of which was ostensibly on the authority of the Secretary of War, Mr. Woodring, some time ago.

Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that a very unusual procedure has been followed in this case. Ordinarily the whole correspondence in connection with the resignation of a Cabinet officer is given out from the White House as a matter of course. In this case the Secretary to the President stated that the letter of resignation of the Secretary of War was too personal to be made public. Personal to whom, Mr. President? Certainly the Secretary of War, if he had assigned any particular personal reason, such as illness in his family or personal illness, would have had no objection to the letter being made public. As a matter of fact, it does not appear that the Secretary of War had any objection to the letter being made public. It seems to me that possibly we can best arrive at the position of the outgoing Secretary—I will say the kicked-out Secretary, who I think was a very great Secretary—by an examination of the letter which he wrote the President when he resigned.

Something has been said by several Senators today about the desirability of making public that communication. Let me say, Mr. President, that if it is not forthcoming it is my intention, before the Senate adjourns tonight, to introduce a resolution requesting the President of the United States, if not incompatible with the public interest, to make public the letter in which the Honorable Harry H. Woodring resigned as Secretary of War.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I merely wish to add to the RECORD that while he was Chief of Staff, General Craig also agreed with the policy of selling airplanes and other materials to foreign countries. I read from General Craig's testimony before the Military Affairs Committee on the subject on the 28th of January 1939:

General GRAIG. In reply to the Senator's inquiry regarding the advantage we would derive from selling planes abroad, I think, and have thought before, that it is the soundest kind of proposition for the United States to seek the placing of its airplane products in foreign countries. It would settle the question that has been brought up about maintaining work on a permanent basis in our factories. It settles the question, which is a terrible bugaboo, of obsolescence of planes.

And so forth.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield to me to permit me to ask the Senator from Indiana a question?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from Indiana does not contend, of course, that that conversation had any reference to the sale of planes actually in the possession of the United States Army?

Mr. MINTON. Not at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not know whether or not the Senator was present when I asked General Craig a question before the committee, which question does not appear in the record, I freely admit, but which I am sure certain Members of the Senate who were members of the Military Affairs Committee at that time will recall. I told General Craig that I was not interested in the opinion of the General Staff; that I myself had once been a member of the General Staff, and that I knew that the opinion of the General Staff was the opinion of the Commander in Chief, which he told the General Staff to have, but that I was interested in his opinion. General Malin Craig was a great Army expert, a man for whom I had great respect, under whom I myself had served. I asked General Craig the question:

Do you believe in selling any planes to foreign powers which appear to be necessary to the defense of the United States?

General Craig leaned across the table and banged his big fist on the table, and said, "You know damned well I do not." I think certain Members of the Senate will be glad to testify to that. I do not know whether or not the Senator from Indiana was present at that committee meeting.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, if the Senator from West Virginia will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HOLT. I do.

Mr. MINTON. I am sure I was present, as I was usually present; and the appearance of the Senator from Missouri at a Military Affairs Committee meeting was so infrequent that I am bound to remember it. I think that probably happened.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will say that during the time I was a member of the Military Affairs Committee I never missed a meeting.

Mr. MINTON. Neither did I.

Mr. President, for the sake of the record, and in order to show that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], like all the rest of us, is fallible, I read from the record before the Military Affairs Committee on February 21, 1939. The Senator from Missouri was not present. Those present, according to the reporter's record, were Senators SHEPPARD, LOGAN, MINTON, LEE, AUSTIN, GURNEY, and HOLMAN.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator from Indiana desires to go into that subject, the Senator very well knows the practice in the Military Affairs Committee of meeting right outside the Senate Chamber; and Senators walk in and walk out, depending on the condition of business on the floor. Many of those sessions were held while the Senate was in session, and at many of them I was not present at the beginning of the session; but I do not think there was a single one held during the time I was on the Military Affairs Committee which I did not attend.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I did not rise to discuss this question; but, in passing, I must comment upon the talk of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]. He said that we isolationists—and I am an isolationist, and am not afraid to say it publicly—were leading the country into war.

I fear he is badly mistaken. There is no danger from the isolationists of our entering the war. The danger is from the interventionists, these individuals who want to tear Hitler apart and scatter his blood in every stream in the world, as the Senator from Florida says. I do not want to see that happen to anybody. As despicable as Hitler may be, as terrible as he may have shown himself to the world to be, I would not want to see his blood strewn to the world. I have not reached the point of hysteria where I love to look at blood, gory blood, and take delight in seeing it spilled just because I may disagree with somebody who has done wrong and who we all admit has done wrong.

No; it is not the policy of appeasement that is going to get this country into war. It is the policy of involvement and intervention that is going to get this country into war.

I only ask that the people read the record of the speech of the Senator from Florida when he says there is not one man in Congress who would declare war. Read the speech and be your own judge.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is making that as a deduction, I am sure, and does not purport to quote any direct statement which the junior Senator from Florida has ever made. On the contrary, I have repeatedly stated in response to questions of the Senator from West Virginia, and I believe in a colloquy with the able Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] that the junior Senator from Florida would not declare war against Germany or any other power. The Senator from Florida does advocate, as the best way to defend America, to remove America's menace by aiding the Allies in every way short of war that they can be aided to destroy Hitler in Europe, so that we shall not have to worry about him in this hemisphere.

Mr. HOLT. If aiding the Allies would require an act of war, would the Senator from Florida go along on such an act?

Mr. PEPPER. I can answer that question definitely in this way: I am willing to do everything except send American soldiers, sailors, or marines abroad.

Mr. HOLT. Would the Senator be willing to send the Navy to Europe?

Mr. PEPPER. If they could go into some other country's Navy, if that country would man the Navy, I would be willing to let some of them go, if the British would take them and use them against Hitler, but not with American boys.

Mr. HOLT. Would the Senator be willing to turn our Navy over to England?

Mr. PEPPER. I said some of the Navy.

Mr. HOLT. How much?

Mr. PEPPER. As much as I thought would crush Hitler in Europe.

Mr. HOLT. But, if it took all of the Navy to crush Hitler, would the Senator be willing to turn over all of it?

Mr. PEPPER. If I knew that all of it would crush Hitler, we would not need any Navy.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator would take the Navy and send it abroad. Then if the Senator says he is not interested in an act of war, does the Senator mean to tell the Senate that sending our Navy abroad in that way would not be an act of war and constitute our entrance into war?

Mr. PEPPER. I answered the Senator a moment ago. I am willing to do anything that the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy, the President, with his usual advisers, might be willing to do that would not involve sending a single American boy as a soldier, sailor, airman, or member of the Marine Corps.

Mr. HOLT. Does the Senator think we could send the Navy abroad without involving America in war?

Mr. PEPPER. I did not say send the whole Navy.

Mr. HOLT. No; I mean, send any part of it.

Mr. PEPPER. I would be very glad to do that, and think it would be a wise thing to do.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator favors, then, sending at least part of our Navy into the battle zones of Europe?

Mr. PEPPER. I did not say that. I said I would be willing to let the British have a part of our Navy which I thought the Commander in Chief, in his opinion, would permit to go, it to be manned by British sailors, and be operated as a part of the British forces, in an effort to keep Hitler from spreading outside of Europe.

Mr. HOLT. Does the Senator say that would not be an act of war?

Mr. PEPPER. It would depend on how Hitler was feeling that morning as to whether it would be an act of war. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Has anybody the slightest idea on earth that if we were to send our Navy, either the whole of our Navy or part of our Navy, or the whole of our planes, or part of our planes, they would not be surrendered in any sort of situation which might develop which involved the surrender by the nation to which we sent them? In other words, the proposition of the Senator from Florida is completely to denude the United States of its own defenses, pitiful as they may be.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator states an inaccuracy there, undoubtedly unintentionally, when he says the Senator from Florida would denude this country of its naval forces. We let them have a few mosquito boats, the value of which was $3,000,000, in order to help in the defense of Great Britain, letting them be sold by private enterprise; and this morning you would have thought the world was going to collapse, to hear some of the disturbance of Senators here in this chamber.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If that was done in flat contravention of a Federal penal statute, if the defenses of the United States were taken away for the purpose of defending anybody else—anybody in the world, no matter how much we may sympathize with them—I say a criminal act was performed, and I defy the Senator from Florida to tell me why a criminal act was not performed, which ought to be taken cognizance of by the Department of Justice.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. As I read the speech of the Senator from Florida a few days ago, his seven-point or five-point program——

Mr. HOLT. Seven pillars of wisdom.

Mr. PEPPER. American defense, why not call it?

Mr. WHEELER. I understood he wanted to give the President power to abolish any laws on the statute books which he thought the President might think he should abolish, and, of course, if he had that power, the Senator from Florida would set up a dictatorship in this country, and he would suspend any criminal laws, or other laws. We would do away with the Congress of the United States during that period of time—excepting, perhaps, the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLT. That is correct. I intend to discuss that in a moment.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. If I am not misinformed, the chairman of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs stated this morning that the naval authorities, in allowing these boats to go to Great Britain, acted within the authority of the law.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, he stated no such thing. He said that the naval authorities claimed that they were not apprised of the existence of that statute. Of course, the Senator from Florida being a graduate of the Harvard Law School is certainly familiar with the fundamental legal principle that ignorance of the law excuses no man. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. As I understood the explanation of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, as more particularly adverted to by the Senator from Louisiana this morning, all the Navy had done was to alter a contract which it had with a private shipbuilding firm for the construction of certain craft. They merely altered a contract, as they had a right to do, and by the alteration of that contract they allowed the shipbuilder to retain these ships which it had been building under contract for the United States Government. Then the private shipbuilder, being released from its obligation to deliver those ships to the United States Government, sold them to the British Government. Was that not what they did?

Mr. HOLT. While the Senator is speaking, I should like to ask him a question. Does he feel we can spare any of our Navy to Britain?

Mr. PEPPER. There are two answers to that question. We can spare them upon the same principle that was spoken of by the able Senator from Louisiana, who is a member, as I recall, of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and heard the testimony offered by the Acting Secretary of the Navy to the effect that they can build these boats in 6 months, I believe he said, that they were trying by these experimental orders to develop a shipbuilding capacity which would enable them to build them in bulk, in mass.

Mr. HOLT. Those are mosquito boats, those which can be built in 6 months. I mean the big boats, which really fight.

Mr. PEPPER. I am talking about the boats which were sold and were the subject of criticism this morning.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator said he would send the Navy over. Would he send any destroyers?

Mr. PEPPER. Just a moment. I stated on the floor this afternoon that the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] told me today, being familiar with the Curtiss activities in Buffalo, that when this law was passed last year, against which the isolationists in this body voted, at that time saying that it would deplete our defenses if we let them be sold over there, the Curtiss factory was building one plane a week. Later on they began to turn out, under the impulse of those orders, one plane a day, and now they are turning out five a day. I understood the same principle to be applicable to the case of the little mosquito boats which were the subject of the debate this morning.

Now, as to the second part of the question, if in the opinion of the Commander in Chief, who is responsible to the country, under the Constitution, for our armed forces, they could be sold without impairing our naval facilities for defense here, then I would say "Yes."

Mr. HOLT. Would the Senator also agree to do that with the warships, the battleships?

Mr. PEPPER. I would apply the same principle; yes; to any craft we had.

Mr. HOLT. That answer is just exactly what I thought the Senator would say.

Mr. PEPPER. Just one moment, and I will answer another phase of it. We have some old destroyers.

Mr. HOLT. I am not talking about old ships. The Senator says he wants to whip Hitler, and you have to whip him with good boats.

Mr. PEPPER. I want to whip him with the old and the new. We have some old destroyers that have been reconditioned by the Navy.

Mr. HOLT. That is correct.

Mr. PEPPER. I would be willing directly to sell the British those destroyers if they would do them any good, and they would pay for them, and deliver them under their own head of steam.

I believe that crushing Hitler in Europe is so vital to the United States that whatever could be done with the approval of the Commander in Chief, advised by the Army and Navy authorities, I am in favor of, because I know if we destroy the danger at its source there is no danger of it spreading over here.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator even said it would take 6 months to build these boats. But listening to him today, he would have Hitler on the Panama Canal before long. First he had him in France and England, then in Uruguay, in South America and Central America, and, frankly, I am looking for him in Washington tonight. Of course, it may be the Fourth of July.

Mr. PEPPER. He has his agents in Washington tonight; the Senator need not worry about that.

Mr. HOLT. I think that is correct, I do not deny that at all, but if we are in the danger the Senator from Florida says we are, why should he strip our Navy and our Army of the defenses needed to stop Hitler, if he should come over here?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair admonishes Senators who have the floor that an enforcement of the rule has been suggested, and the rule provides that a Senator may yield only for a question, and not for a running debate. I hope no request will be made for an enforcement of the rule.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. How many miles is there in the coast line of the Western Hemisphere for the American Navy to defend, from the northern part of Iceland around the coast to Alaska?

Mr. HOLT. I cannot answer that. I do not know.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator believe it if I say that the hydrographic service says it is more than 43,000 miles?

Mr. HOLT. I would believe that.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator will admit that under the Monroe Doctrine we have the obligation to defend with our Navy the whole Western Hemisphere, does he not?

Mr. HOLT. That is correct.

Mr. PEPPER. What is the distance from Brazil to the coast of Africa?

Mr. HOLT. The Senator is trying to teach me geography. I cannot answer him. I do not know.

Mr. PEPPER. It is about 1,400 miles.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator from Arizona, who knows almost everything, says 1,600.

Mr. PEPPER. Very well, let us say it is 1,600 miles. Is it a shorter distance or a longer distance from the United States of America to Brazil?

Mr. HOLT. I know that if we have 43,000 miles of coast line to defend we cannot spare one destroyer, one mosquito boat, one warship, or one plane. Let us keep them to defend those 43,000 miles, and keep them on this side of the Atlantic.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator deny the information that was quoted on this floor, that a combination of the fleets of France, Italy, and Germany would be approximately equal to the strength of the British Fleet?

Mr. HOLT. I could not say; I do not know about that.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator would indulge the presumption that they would be about equal——

Mr. HOLT. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. Then if we add the Japanese Fleet as a danger to that combination——

Mr. HOLT. Why not throw in the Swiss Fleet with them? [Laughter.]

Mr. PEPPER. I do not think there is any particular danger from the Swiss Fleet, but it seems to me we have enough of the United States Fleet in the Pacific Ocean to indicate that there might be a little danger from the Japanese Fleet.

Mr. HOLT. Will the Senator really tell the Senate why the fleet is in the Pacific? Is it not to protect British interests, as well as our own?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator is a Member of the United States Senate——

Mr. HOLT. And I am a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, too.

Mr. PEPPER. Quite right. If the Senator has any evidence to that effect, I think it would be well for him to state it.

Mr. HOLT. I should be glad to state it. I should be glad to ask the Senator what Captain Ingersoll said in 1938, when he went to London and discussed the plans of cooperation between the English Navy and the United States Navy. What did they mean? Time after time the English Government officials said, "We have a parallel and coordinate policy with the United States in the Pacific." I have the document in which that is stated, and I ask permission to place it in the RECORD at this point in my remarks. I do not have it with me at the time, but I want it in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is their objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD. The statement from the Round Table as to the activities of Captain Ingersoll in the parallel policy of Great Britain and the United States in the Pacific is here printed in full as follows:

Capt. R. E. Ingersoll, Chief of the War Plans Division of the Navy Department, spent late December and early January in London, conferring with the Admiralty. His outward mission was to find out what is happening technically in British naval construction, particularly as concerns new battleships and the caliber of guns they mount. Another obvious job was to find out if the Admiralty possesses any information unknown in Washington about the rumored new Japanese battleships supposed to be of some 46,000 tons and mounting 18-inch guns. But a mission of even more importance to both Governments, it may safely be assumed, was to discuss the possibility and ways and means of naval cooperation in the Far East. Captain Ingersoll's unheralded visit suggests in essence the exchange of information in prewar days—or in the last year or two—between Paris and London, but it has no such precedent in Anglo-American relations.

When the general public comes to know of these goings on, opinion may well take fright, reasonably or not.

Also, from the book, And So to War, written by Hubert Herring, one notes this discussion of Captain Ingersoll's visit:

On the question of an agreement with Great Britain, it was revealed that Captain Ingersoll, the naval chief of war plans, had recently spent some days in London. His visit was kept a great secret, and was only accidentally revealed. Congressman BREWSTER, of Maine, and others demanded the meaning of that visit. Admiral Leahy refused to say what had transpired. He would, he said, explain only in executive session. Was there, then, some sort of arrangement with Great Britain? Secretary Hull promptly repudiated the notion. But, on February 9, Arthur Krock, Washington correspondent of the New York Times, and generally credited with unusually close relations with the White House, the State Department—and with the British Embassy—wrote that American consultations with Great Britain and France looked toward parallel actions "in the event of one of the only two days the democracies can envisage at any time in the near future." "This correspondent," says Mr. Krock, "is expertly informed that, should it at any time serve the common interests of the two great democracies, their navies would automatically complement each other in the Pacific. He is more inclined to think the complementing would be the result of a very private and common-sense understanding among experts and political realists." But, of course, there is nothing formal about such an agreement. "This is the kind of understanding," continued Mr. Krock, "that is hardly more than a wink or a nod, the sort of thing not Mr. JOHNSON (Senator HIRAM JOHNSON of California) or anyone else can extract from men's inner minds by means of a resolution. This is what irritates them, and makes them anxious, too. For these groups sincerely believe we should have a foreign and defense policy that is totally exclusive, even when it would serve our immediate interest to do otherwise; that our fleet should be no larger than sufficient to defend our coasts and possessions—not the Philippines—and that to exchange even a wink with Great Britain will surely involve us in a war * * *."

The puzzled public had all this to mull over.

Mr. Hull said that we had no agreement with Britain.

Admiral Leahy said that he wouldn't tell anything except in executive session.

Mr. Krock spoke of a nod and a wink.

The skepticism of the general public was voiced by Senator ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE. "Millions of citizens," he insisted, "want to know what occasions this increase of naval armament and what foreign policy the Navy is intended to implement."

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator agree to the British statement that the United States Government and the British Empire both have interests in the Pacific?

Mr. HOLT. We both have interests there now.

Mr. PEPPER. Then it is only proper that we should be out there looking after our interests also, is it not?

Mr. HOLT. Leave the word "also" out and I will agree——

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator probably wants the British Fleet to look after Hawaii, Guam, and the western coast of the United States?

Mr. HOLT. No; we should look after them. The British Fleet should look after the British possessions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER in the chair). Let the Chair admonish Senators that the rule will be enforced from now on in debate. The Senator may yield for a question. He may not yield for a statement in the guise of a question.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Iowa for a question.

Mr. GILLETTE. Will the Senator yield to me to read the law that has been discussed here?

Mr. HOLT. I should like to do so, but I am supposed to be a special character, and the rule is supposed to apply in respect to me. I do not hold anything against the Presiding Officer for enforcing the rule. I realize the fairness of the Presiding Officer, and do not condemn him for his ruling.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HOLT. I yield for a question.

Mr. GILLETTE. I ask the Senator from West Virginia if this is not the law of the United States at the present time as presented in the Naval Affairs Committee——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say that the rule does not enable any Senator to interrupt for the purpose of asking a question which calls for an answer such as the question now asked calls for. The Senator from West Virginia may ask unanimous consent that he may yield to the Senator from Iowa for the purpose of reading the statute.

Is there objection to such request? There being no objection, the Senator from Iowa may proceed.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, in the colloquy between the distinguished Senator from West Virginia and the equally distinguished Senator from Florida, there seems to be a misapprehension on the part of the Senator from Florida as to what the present law is with reference to the possibility of the United States giving up any authority over vessels that are being constructed for the United States for the purpose of transfer to a belligerent nation. In that connection, with the permission that has been so kindly secured by the Chair, I will again read this law, which was passed June 15, 1917:

During a war in which the United States is a neutral nation, it shall be unlawful to send out of the jurisdiction of the United States any vessel built, armed, or equipped as a vessel of war, or converted from a private vessel into a vessel of war, with any intent or under any agreement or contract, written or oral, that such vessel shall be delivered to a belligerent nation, or to an agent, officer, or citizen of such nation, or with reasonable cause to believe that the said vessel shall or will be employed in the service of any such belligerent nation after its departure from the jurisdiction of the United States (June 15, 1917, ch. 30, title V, 3, 40 Stat. 222).

Whoever, in violation of any of the provisions of sections 25, 27, and 31 to 38 of this title, shall take, or attempt or conspire to take, or authorize the taking of any such vessel, out of port or from the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both; and, in addition, such vessel, her tackle, apparel, furniture, equipment, and her cargo shall be forfeited to the United States (June 15, 1917, ch. 30, title V, 6, 40 Stat. 222).

Mr. HOLT. I thank the Senator from Iowa. I should like to proceed and discuss the proposition of defense. I may say I have no quarrel——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, before the Senator goes to that, will he yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will not again interrupt him.

Mr. HOLT. I have no objection to the Senator interrupting me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am anxious to hear the speech of the Senator from West Virginia. I merely desire to ask him if, in his opinion, the Senator from Florida were created a dictator, for which he shows every temperamental qualification, and was able to turn the Navy of the United States, without personnel, over to a belligerent power, and then the United States should be attacked, assuming that Navy had been lost or been surrendered—if the United States were attacked, what would the thousands of bluejackets who had been enlisted in the United States Navy be able to do in the defense of the United States except to stand on shore and shoot at the invaders?

Mr. HOLT. I believe they could begin practicing in rowboats on the Florida ship canal.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield for a question, so that I may maintain the floor.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator be kind enough to ask the able Senator from Missouri just what he meant by the statement that the Senator from Florida had exhibited a temperamental fitness to be a dictator? I should be glad to have the Senator state what he means by that statement.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I shall ask unanimous consent to have the Senator from Missouri tell the Senate what he thinks about the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I can go into the matter in the form of a question.

Mr. HOLT. I yield for a question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the Senator from West Virginia know that the other day the Senator from Florida put into the RECORD, in a thumbnail fashion, a plan of dictatorship designed for the United States which would make Hitler blush?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLT. I am going to discuss that for a moment, but I yield to the Senator from Florida first.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to refer to the proposal to which the Senator from Missouri adverted.

Mr. HOLT. I intend to do that in my own time, Mr. President. I shall discuss all seven of those points in order, so the people of the country can see the first blueprint of dictatorship in America.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Hr. HOLT. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is going to read the proposals and refer to them?

Mr. HOLT. Yes. I shall read all seven of them, and then discuss them.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is also going to read the language in connection with each one of those proposals that indicates that each one of them is for the defense of America, is he?

Mr. HOLT. I will not agree that they are for the defense of America.

Mr. PEPPER. But the Senator is going to read them?

Mr. HOLT. I would hardly agree with the statement of the Senator from Florida that they are for the defense of America.

Mr. PEPPER. Is the Senator going to read the language at the beginning of the seven points, as follows:

Confer upon the President full wartime power to prepare and defend America?

Mr. HOLT. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. Very well, if the Senator does it that way——

Mr. HOLT. I intend to do it in my own time. I shall discuss each of the points.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator point out very clearly in his speech that the power which the Senator from Florida proposed to confer was not upon the Senator from Florida, but upon the duly elected President of the United States, whomever he may happen to be before November and after November?

Mr. HOLT. That is correct. I intend to discuss that in a moment. Of course it does not make any difference—any placing of power in the hands of an individual is the same, whether it is here or any place else. But I was very much interested when the Senator was speaking—I listened to him with a good deal of interest—I may say with wonder, when he spoke about the fact that he wanted us to stop Hitler and just tear him apart. He just wanted to tear him apart, and he wanted to drop a drop of the blood in Ohio, he wanted to drop a drop of his blood in Mississippi, and then two drops of blood in South America. He says the reason he wants to do that is that Hitler is going to take our trade—and I wrote down the exact language—take our trade away from us. In other words, America is going to kill her soldiers, her boys because of trade.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HOLT. I yield for a question.

Mr. PEPPER. Does not the Senator recall that the description that the Senator is referring to was used by the Senator from Florida after he was describing the suffering that Hitler had brought upon the world, and the deaths that he had caused by his unprovoked attack in bringing on this war?

Then I stated in substance, after describing the suffering and the deaths that he had brought upon the world by his aggression, that as retribution for what he has done, if he received his justice, that is what would happen.

Mr. HOLT. I am sorry the Senator, after an hour of thinking it over, admits the same thing—that he would tear him limb from limb, scatter his blood from one end of the world to the other. But it will not be scattered by any Member of the United States Senate. Let Senators not fool themselves about that. It will be scattered by the boys who are sent to spill their blood, not our blood.

The Senator speaks of our country spending $2,000,000,000 for the establishment of a cartel, because of Hitler. It is better to spend $2,000,000,000 for the establishment of a cartel than it is to sacrifice the boys of the United States on the battlefields of Europe. Yes; it is a great deal better to do that.

The Senator speaks about how much we are spending because of Hitler. If we get into this war, as some individuals might like to see us do, we will spend that money more quickly and more destruction will be caused. The boys will lose, not money, which is something that can be replaced, but they will lose their own lives. They will lose their lives if we continue this policy of intervention, this policy of involvement in wars abroad.

The Senator says that he is in favor of the Monroe Doctrine. And in the next breath he shows he is not in favor of the Monroe Doctrine.

What do I mean? He is in favor of one part of the Monroe Doctrine, which says to Europe, "Stay out of America." How does he feel about the other part of the Monroe Doctrine, which tells Europe that the United States will stay out of Europe? He wants to go into Europe and become involved in Europe's affairs. He does not believe in that part of the Monroe Doctrine.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. However, he believes in defending the Monroe Doctrine over here, from the Florida ship canal down to the lower tip of South America.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. Has the United States any "fifth column" operating in Germany?

Mr. HOLT. I could not say as to that.

Mr. PEPPER. Have the Germans any "fifth column" operating in the United States?

Mr. HOLT. Yes; they have; and so have the English.

Mr. PEPPER. Have the Germans any "fifth column" operating in South America?

Mr. HOLT. Decidedly; and so have the British. The Senator does not seem to see any "fifth column" unless it has something Germanic about it.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator be good enough to describe the British "fifth column," comparable to the German "fifth column" in this country and in South America?

Mr. HOLT. I shall be glad to do so by explaining who the associates of the Senator from Florida are.

Mr. PEPPER. The only trouble——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I must object to the Senator from West Virginia yielding for anything except a question.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield for a question?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Florida for a question.

Mr. PEPPER. I shall be glad if the Senator will specify any of the associates of the Senator from Florida who he says are comparable to the German "fifth column" in the United States. Name them publicly.

Mr. HOLT. I shall be glad to name them for the Senator, starting with the best one, Lord Lothian, with whom the Senator likes to have tea.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator specify one time when the Senator from Florida has ever had tea with Lord Lothian?

Mr. HOLT. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. Let the Senator name it.

Mr. HOLT. I remember the garden party, which the Senator got all "diked up" to attend.

Mr. PEPPER. Lord Lothian was not here at that time. That was at the British Embassy, at the time of the visit of the King and Queen of Great Britain. The Senator from Florida, because he was a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, received an invitation, as did every other Senator who was a member of the committee. I do not believe the Senator from West Virginia received an invitation.

Mr. HOLT. Oh, yes.

Mr. PEPPER. I believe finally the list was expanded.

Mr. HOLT. That is true. I am not on the social lists around Washington.

Mr. PEPPER. Except for the occasion of the visit of the King and Queen, when the Senator from Florida attended the garden party, does the Senator know of any time when the Senator from Florida had tea with the British Ambassador?

Mr. HOLT. I shall discuss that question later.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator has made the statement on the floor. When was it?

Mr. HOLT. I will tell the Senator, in most emphatic language, a number of instances in which the Senator has conferred. The British do not have to have propagandists. They have native American propagandists.

As to my invitation to the tea, let me discuss that with the Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLT. Just a moment. I have the floor, and I wish to discuss with the Senator the tea in which he was so much interested. He said that I did not receive an invitation. I admit that at first I did not receive an invitation. That was too bad. I was chagrined because I was not invited to go and kowtow before the King and Queen, and wait for 5 minutes after the King and Queen walked by so that I would not follow in their footsteps and step on the place where they had trod. Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British Ambassador at that time, said that going to the English garden party was like going to Heaven. Only a few got to go. Of course, I was not one who was entitled to go to the English heaven, as was the Senator from Florida. But let me say that finally, when the invitation was given to me, I declined because I had a great amount of work to do. If the Senator from Florida could have waited for a year, he could have gone to the same Embassy for a dollar instead of having to buy a new suit to go when the King and Queen were here. [Laughter.]

Speaking of the King and Queen, I should like to quote from Lord Lothian's magazine about how the King and Queen helped to propagandize America. He discusses the visit of the King and Queen. I have that document somewhere among my papers.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the document to which I refer printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks. It deals with how the King and Queen propagandized America.

There being no objection, the document was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE ROYAL VISIT

Now to a much pleasanter subject. The visit of the King and Queen is now 2 months old, but its effects remain as an important factor operating upon American public opinion toward the world problem today. Never has a ceremonial visit gone more satisfactorily, at least from the viewpoint of the visited. It must be recalled that, when the royal couple came, British policy and in a sense Great Britain itself were rather under a cloud in American eyes. The abdication crisis had never been accurately understood here, and Mr. Chamberlain's policies were the object of unrestrained criticism. The misunderstanding, of course, dated back at least to Sir John Simon's tenure of the foreign office in 1932. The composite picture was one in which the British ruling classes came off very poorly indeed.

The King and Queen almost completely reversed this picture. They typified something above passing cabinets; they typified the real British nations—all of them. First of all, Americans saw that they should amend their judgment about the abdication crisis. Viewing the queenliness of the Queen, they realized what unspoken motives had been involved in the British decision in 1937. The Queen's triumph, therefore, wiped out a very important source of misunderstanding.

It is a bit more difficult to explain how the royal visit made British policy in recent crises more comprehensible and attractive. The fact is simply this: The King and Queen were so very human and gracious and thoughtful, so altogether faithful and appealing in their impersonation of the British nation, that people said: "The good old British. They're not down yet. Yes, sir; they've got a lot of good qualities. You can depend on them. They're still pretty solid."

Similarly, the peculiar kinship between the United States and Great Britain was symbolized and recognized during the visit. Few Americans were blind to the significance of King George's wreath laid on George Washington's tomb, and few failed to comment upon it. Nothing was overdone about the trip. The itinerary was appropriately short, although it was fearfully intensive for the guests, and the absence of all outward propaganda efforts was entirely correct. All the same, Great Britain got more propaganda, more favorable publicity spread over the United States than she has had since 1918. The importance of this simple factor is not to be overlooked. In sum, the royal visit may be said to have rehabilitated British character in American eyes. And that is no small achievement.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida talks about the children playing on the Champs Elysees of Paris and how they did not know anything about the causes of war. I agree with him. They knew nothing in the world about the causes of the 1914–18 war, but its cruel hand actually pressed upon them. But the diplomats of France, who also were on the Champs Elysees, knew about the causes of the war.

The Senator asked what caused that war. He said that no treaties were involved. I thought the Senator from Florida was a better student of international affairs than to say that no treaties were involved in the war of 1914–17. I refer him to the book of the able former Senator from Oklahoma, Robert Owen, who showed many of the secret treaties involving Paris, London, Rome, and many, many other places in the world. Oh, yes; those treaties were there. The children did not know about them, just as the children do not know about the treaties and deals before the present war. But they paid the penalty thereof.

The Senator talked about the children of Germany, and said that they did not know anything about the suffering of war. Anyone who has read the history of Germany, and of the world, knows that those poor unfortunate children had no choice of their birthplace.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I should like to finish this thought, and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

Those children had no choice of their birthplace. They were born in Germany, just as other children were born in France; and as a result of the terrible war thousands of those little children in Germany, some who were less than a year old, some a year or 2 years old, were starved to death. My heart goes out in pity to them, as well as to the children of all other nations.

The children of Germany were starved as a result of the terrible war. They deserve the pity of every right-thinking person. Deep in their hearts was bitterness and hatred. They are the men who are marching in Europe today. They are the children who were starved as a result of the blockade.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. Just a moment. Those are the children who paid the price of war. I say again that my heart went out to all of them. Those children had no choice except to pay the penalty of torture for many years, and in many instances death. The children of almost all of the nations of Europe suffered then. We read in the newspapers accounts of persons killed by the bombing attacks of Germany. They are terrible, but on the back page we see a little picture of a child 9 years old, an American, born in the United States, who was killed as a result of the bombing of Germany. The Senator from Florida said nothing about that.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico for a question.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I ask the Senator from West Virginia if it is not a fact that all wars bring horror. Is it not a fact that there are still living within the United States persons who saw the horror of the Civil War?

Mr. HOLT. That is correct.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Persons still living saw the horror that was brought about in the South by the march of Sherman from Atlanta to the sea. All wars bring horror. Is not that a fact?

Mr. HOLT. War, we are told, brings death, taxes, and widows; yes.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question before he passes from that subject?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Florida for a question, but I hope to hurry on to what I intended to speak about when I got up to talk.

Mr. PEPPER. Very well. I want the Senator to be clear in his statement before he leaves the subject.

Did the German Government enter the war in 1914, and invade Belgium and France, in self-defense?

Mr. HOLT. No; they did not. Neither did England; neither did Russia; neither did France go into that war in self-defense. They went in for trade—the trade the Senator from Florida says we will lose if we do not go into war. If we must choose our trade, or our children, choose our children. The best market for America is within America, not looking across the sea to some foreign market; but the Senator from Florida defended the Treaty of Versailles when even his own tutor, Lord Lothian, will not do that. Yes; he defended the Treaty of Versailles. I stood on the floor of the Senate last year and read into the RECORD what the men who drafted the Treaty of Versailles said about it years afterward. It was one of the most vicious treaties in the history of the world; and I may say that the roots of this war, the roots of Hitlerism, go back to the Treaty of Versailles.

Why do I say that? Hitler is only a symbol of a terrible economic condition in Europe caused by war. Destroying Hitler will not do away with dictatorships. Another will follow in his place. The only way to cure dictatorship in the world is to bring about economic justice for the country so involved.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Florida for a question.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator from West Virginia charges the Senator from Florida, because of the attitude he has taken in expressing his view as to the best way to defend America, with being the tool and the tutored one of Lord Lothian, I suppose if the effect of the policy of the able Senator from West Virginia is to give aid and comfort to Hitler, then his tutor is Herr Thompson, the German chargé d'affaires in Washington.

Mr. HOLT. I will say to the Senator from Florida that I do not know whom he is talking about. I never met him in my life; but my purpose is not to give aid to anybody except the people of the United States. I am not pro anything except pro-American, and I am tired of these halfway Anglophiles talking about their Americanism.

Mr. PEPPER. What is the word for Germanophiles that is comparable to Anglophiles?

Mr. HOLT. I do not know. The Senator sleeps and dreams it. He should know.

Mr. PEPPER. I see enough of it here in the Senate to make me keep it in my mind, too.

Mr. HOLT. I cannot answer the Senator in his nightmares at all.

But what does the seven-point program which the Senator wants to set up provide for? He is going to set up this supposedly to save democracy somewhere else. Let me read these seven points in order, and then I may discuss them, or I may just brush them aside; but here they are as given by the Senator from Florida:

1. Confer upon the President full wartime power to prepare and defend America.
2. Universal defense service, so that every citizen may be best trained and placed for the country's defense.
3. Confer upon the President power to suspend all rules, regulations, and statutes, including Army, Navy, and departmental seniority regulations, which in his judgment interfere with the maximum speed in the production, transportation, or manufacture of defense materials.
4. Confer upon the President power to suspend the present debt limitation if in his judgment such limitation interferes with the maximum speed of the defense program.
5. Grant the President the authority to aid in material or credit those countries and nations which in his judgment at this time constitute America's first line of defense.
6. The President and the Congress to begin immediately the preparation and the adoption of a defense budget and a tax program adequate for the national defense.

I am looking for the seventh proposal.

Mr. PEPPER. Let me get the seventh while the Senator is at it. May I read it to him, or does he think he will find it there?

Mr. HOLT. I cannot find it.

Mr. PEPPER. Would the Senator mind my reading it and letting him compare it with his recollection as I read it.

Mr. HOLT. Oh, no; I have no objection.

Mr. PEPPER [reading]:

Confer on the President the power to take into custody, for the duration of the defense effort, all aliens whose freedom would in his opinion jeopardize the defense program.

Mr. HOLT. Those are the seven points. Give to one man authority to wipe out any law. Give him authority to do away with the acts that have protected labor, secured after many, many years of struggle for labor. Allow the commandeering of any plant that is necessary, just at the instance of one man. Draft everybody in the country for universal service. Repeal the Johnson Act, and give away our credits and our materials at the instance of one man—no authority other than that—and do all these things in the name of democracy. In the name of democracy, set up a dictatorship which is comparable to the Germanic and other dictatorships in the world. Give to one man power to control America, and do it in the name of democracy.

Let me say to the Senate that when we have that type of democracy, the Senator from Florida is willing to give all the reforms of a century into the hands of one man in order that democracy may be chased somewhere else in the world.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator for another question.

Mr. PEPPER. Did the Senator see that the last of the proposals was, "These powers to continue only for the duration of the emergency"?

Mr. HOLT. I saw that, yes; but the Senator, I believe, will find that we are now in the sixty-second emergency since President Roosevelt has been in power. [Laughter.] I think it is the sixty-second. I am not quite sure. He declares emergencies. Nobody else declares them under our statute. The President declares the emergency, and then takes all these powers. I want to say that no bad man should have that much power, and no good man would want it.

The question of power is what this war is supposedly being fought about, but I may say to the Senator that I shall not discuss his speech any more tonight. I want to go on to another angle which I also spoke about yesterday afternoon, and that is this:

Yesterday and today there has been much discussion about the appointment of Henry L. "Wrong Horse" Stimson. I think his nickname is "Wrong Horse," or something like that—and Frank Knox, to the Cabinet of the President of the United States. Of course, everybody knows that these war jingoists are put in as the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] said, as the result of the creation of a war Cabinet. "Oh," they say, "just brush it aside; it signifies nothing"; but I was called this morning by another Senator, who said, "Do you know that the National Defense Council has appointed Mr. Stacy May as Economist of the National Defense Council?" I said, "No; I do not even know Mr. May"; but we got on the telephone, and I called the National Defense Council, and they said Mr. Stacy May was there, but he was not in just at that time.

Who is Stacy May? He is one of the 30 men who signed the petition asking for a declaration of war on Germany. What did he ask for? I read just one paragraph, and then I shall ask for the entire statement to be printed in the RECORD. This is what Mr. May signed:

by declaring that a state of war exists between this country and Germany.

For this reason alone, and irrespective of specific uses of our resources thereafter, the United States should immediately give official recognition to the fact and to the logic of the situation

Mr. Stacy May, on June 9 of this year, signed a manifesto asking for our country to declare war on Germany, and now he is being appointed as economist of the National Defense Council.

The entire statement signed by Stacy May and others is shown in the news column, as follows:

WAR ON REICH URGED TO CRUSH THREAT TO UNITED STATES—THIRTY LAWYERS, BUSINESSMEN, EDUCATORS, AND WRITERS SEE MYTH IN NEUTRALITY

WASHINGTON, June 9.—Thirty American educators, lawyers, writers and businessmen—speaking as individuals—urged in a statement today that the United States declare war on Germany.

"In the German view," their statement said, "the American defense program means that the United States has already joined with Great Britain and France in opposing the Nazi drive for world dominion—in the American view, Nazi Germany is the mortal enemy of our ideals, our institutions, and our way of life.

"What we have, what we are, and what we hope to be can now be most effectively defended on the line in France held by General Weygand." The frontier of our national interest is now on the Somme.

"Therefore, all disposable air, naval, military, and material resources of the United States should be made available at once to help maintain our common front."

"But such resources cannot be made available fast enough to hold the German Army in check on the European continent or to prepare for the eventual attack on American interests so long as the United States remains legally neutral—Nation-wide endorsement of the defense program shows that the American people has ceased to be neutral in any other sense.

"For this reason alone, and irrespective of specific uses of our resources thereafter, the United States should immediately give official recognition to the fact and to the logic of the situation—by declaring that a state of war exists between this country and Germany.

"Only in this constitutional manner can the energies be massed which are indispensable to the successful prosecution of a program of defense."

It is said it is just another appointment. Why on earth, with all of the economists of whom we have heard for years, did the National Defense Council have to go out and pick this one individual as their economist—the man who asked for a declaration of war on Germany?

Oh, these straws in the wind point to one thing, and one thing alone. This administration is one the road to war, is getting ready for war.

As I have stated, a country does not always declare war to get in war. I have said many times on the floor of the Senate that a nation does not always declare war on a nation. It can create incidents by which another can and will declare war on it; but it kills just as many boys, it costs just as much money, and it creates just as much havoc and disaster as the first way.

I say that any man who would deliberately create incidents of war in order to force another nation to have an overt act as an excuse for declaring war on us is taking us to war, and every instance in recent weeks has been calculated to insult and to attack nations of the world with which we are at peace; and, as the Senator from Massachusetts said, what nation in the world has done anything to the United States Government?

The individuals who are interested in war are the boys who sit back in the armchairs and tell the other boys how to win the war. If I had felt as the Senator from Florida did about Hitler and our danger, I would not have been in the Senate half as long as he has been; I would be on the way, on the clipper, to go over there and stop Hitler on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean. He wants someone else to do the stopping. Members of the Senate are exempt. We do not have to go to war. If in his heart the Senator from Florida feels that Hitler is going to do the things he has said he is going to do—that he is going to destroy our country as he says he is going to destroy it—why does he not enlist, instead of making us run to the cloakroom and get our trench helmets daily because he tells how Hitler is coming over the Potomac the next day?

I do not think the historians will devote so much time to looking over the record to see what certain individual Senators think or say, but I also am willing to let historians be the judge of what is happening here, and they will see, not a replica of 1914–17, not that, because we did not deliberately in all instances try to create that.

When I rose I wanted to discuss propaganda for my friend, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], but since he is not here and has not been here, I shall not do so. I shall discuss that and other matters I had hoped to talk about at a later time.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I hope the Senator does not think this is a replica of 1914–17. We are going about 10 times as fast into the war as we did then. Does the Senator understand that?

Mr. HOLT. That is correct.

Mr. BONE. We are going about 10 times as fast toward war now as before and making no pretense of going in the other direction. If we go into the war, we will have no excuse to offer posterity for having done so.

Mr. HOLT. I thank the Senator from Washington. Everyone knows that step after step has been progress toward our getting into the war.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. BONE. We will have no need to call on posterity to appraise our actions. They will do it without the aid of any Member of the Senate. History is being written here day after day, hour after hour, and it will never be unwritten, no matter what any Senator here says. The future, if there will be any future, if it has a system of schools and anything left after we get through the next war, if people are capable of appraising anything, can find anything to eat so that they will have strength to appraise what is going on, they will do the appraising.

Before the Senator concludes, in view of the fact that some reference was made by the Senator from Florida today to a soldier who had had his legs shot off, and he was very, very eager to have this country do something—God knows what it was—at this stage I should like to put something into the RECORD, if the Senator will yield.

Mr. HOLT. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. This little pamphlet I have in my hand is in such shape that I cannot put it into the RECORD. I wish I could have it reproduced so that everyone in the United States could read it. This is from the Quentin Roosevelt Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars. It contains seven little cartoons, besides some printed matter. The first cartoon is a picture of Uncle Sam exchanging war munitions for money with Great Britain, and under it this appears:

Nazi aggressions arouse sympathy and indignation in United States. First step, to "use every method short of war" to help Allies win. Slogans: "They are fighting our war." "Hitler must be stopped."

Mr. HOLT. Let me ask the Senator whether he knows any fellows who want Hitler stopped who are volunteering to stop him?

Mr. BONE. Oh, no. The Civil War was fought by boys, little fellows, who did not know what it was all about. My father said that after Gettysburg, when he walked over the field after Pickett's charge, the poor devils lying on the field, covering the ground, dressed in poor, nondescript, butternut coats, were boys from the State of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] who sits before me, and other States of the South, poor, hungry devils, who did not know what it was all about. They were mere boys.

My mother had two brothers who are buried at Spottsylvania, one of them 16. Does anyone suppose that kid knew what all the momentous issues in the Civil War were? He just saw the flags waving and heard the drums beating and let the wise men, like you and me, send him out to his death. That is why we are in the fix we are in today.

Mr. HOLT. Did not the Senator say a few days ago that certain officials of business stated that it was unwise to allow them to make only 7 percent on their investments, while at the same time they are going to take the entire investment of a boy—his life?

Mr. BONE. That is the way we handle war, and that is the way we will handle it again. We will take all the boys out and have them shot to death for some vague cause or other, draft 100 percent of their bodies, and some of our businessmen will remain at home squawking their heads off because we do not let them make 50 percent profit.

If we had any sense, the moment war was declared we would draft every factory in the United States and serve notice that we would not let anyone make a profit. That is the kind of war it is going to be in any event. That is the way it is going to work out. By the time we are through paying for it there will not be any profit for anyone. That is the price of total war. But I am getting off the track. I want to put this pamphlet in the RECORD. The second little cartoon in this Veterans of Foreign Wars pamphlet is a picture of England and France carrying away munitions.

The quotation is:

Aviation and munitions industry expand to fill orders. When Allies run out of cash, United States must make loans or close factories. Slogan: "Send money—not troops." Despite huge public debt, Congress votes loan.

Where does that point now? We have to do that, and we are getting ready to do something—I do not know what it is.

Cartoon No. 3—caption:

United States has large cash investment in Allied cause. When the drain on manpower threatens Allied defeat, United States declares war, sends A. E. F. No. 2 slogan: "Save Democracy."

The fourth cartoon:

Cost of A. E. F. No. 2, plus continued Allied loans, plus original public debt, ruins United States credit. Only solution is inflation. Slogan: "Win with War Dollars." Cost of living skyrockets. Printing-press dollars depreciate.

Cartoon No. 5 shows a munitions plant with a lot of troops in front of it. The caption is:

Gap between income and living costs grows. Labor and farmers strike. Martial law declared. United States abandons democracy, becomes dictatorship. Food is rationed. Thousands sent to concentration camps.

Cartoon No. 6 shows a fire out in the woods and men standing and sitting around it. One man stands in front of it with his arms uplifted and talking. A large audience sits on the other side. The caption is:

Dictatorship drains United States of dollars and men. Hunger and casualty lists grow. United States rebellion, sick of war, gather secretly to hear patriots demand "Peace and democracy."

Cartoon No. 7 shows a number of persons, two or three women and a child and a wounded man, sitting amidst the ruins of buildings. The caption is:

Hunger and tyranny become unbearable. Mobs overcome soldiers and police. Destruction and death are rampant. Unburied dead breed plagues. United States lies in ruins.

Then comes the statement of the Lieutenant Quentin Roosevelt Post, No. 10, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Brooklyn, N. Y.:

SHALL WE HAVE PEACE AND PROSPERITY—OR WAR AND RISK DISASTER?

That is the real question we face when we decide the answer to Europe's propaganda.

We can have peace. Adequate military defense and the protection of our oceans will guarantee us against aggressors.

We can have prosperity if we devote ourselves to the solution of our domestic problems.

But we will have war if we continue to meddle in Europe's conflict. We know this is true because it happened to us in 1917. Shall we continue to follow our old footprints down the road to war?

The result of the last war should make us cautious. The sod on the graves of our dead is still fresh and the hospitals are still filled with our wounded. The curses of our ungrateful Allies still ring in our ears when we remind them of their loans. The unemployed are an unsolved problem of the depression caused by the war. The cost of the war is still written in red ink on the ledgers of our Treasury.

In spite of the insults hurled at us by the Allies for being tardy, stingy, and timid we were lucky to have entered the war so late. Our enemy collapsed before our resources of wealth and manpower had become seriously impaired. Had we our present public debt, inflation would certainly have come. At the rate at which we lost men in battle, it would not have taken long for the United States to face real disaster.

If the United States enters the war under the present handicaps, these imagined disasters may soon become reality. Then we would find ourselves living under a dictatorship, our democracy and freedom a dream, taxed to starvation to buy munitions of war. The end might be chaos and revolution.

Knowing the risk, the veteran is committed to the cause of peace for America.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield to me for the purpose of asking the Senator from Washington a question?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do I understand this is a resolution adopted by an organization of Veterans of Foreign Wars?

Mr. BONE. It came to me this morning from the Lieutenant Quentin Roosevelt Post, No. 10, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Having in mind that everyone who belongs to the Veterans of Foreign Wars must be a man or woman who has followed the flag overseas, in a combat organization, is the Senator from Washington not afraid that by reading this thing he may subject the Veterans of Foreign Wars, overseas veterans, to the suggestion that they may be members of the "fifth column"? The Senator from Florida is not on the floor, and I regret that he is not, but if he were present, I am certain that he would believe that any overseas veteran who adopted such resolutions as that were members of the "fifth column." They are probably members of the "first column."

Mr. BONE. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that I read this to the Senate because the Senator from Florida had stated on the floor that he had talked to some chap who had lost a leg in the World War, and I gathered from what he said that this soldier wanted us to go into another war and have more boys lose their legs in the noble cause of democracy across the sea, and he rather left the impression, at least I gathered it, that the veteran wanted the country to get into the war. I believe all the veterans I have met wanted us to keep out of war.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Neither the Senator from Washington nor anyone else would have the effrontery to say that an organization composed of men and women, all of whom had served overseas, which is a requisite for membership in the organization, had no right to express themselves in the manner referred to, without being dubbed "fifth columnists."

Mr. BONE. I will say to the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from West Virginia that I have spoken before organizations of the V. F. W. I have never found one of them that did not bitterly oppose our entry into another war. They want us to mind our own business, to take care of our domestic problems, and that, if we enter any war, it will be in the defense of the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They are probably "fifth columnists," I will say to the Senator.

Mr. BONE. Well, I am quite bewildered by all the slogans. Yet we went through the same thing in 1917. The country then was full of slogans. The sloganeers were busy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. BONE. A distinguished American said the country was the victim of slogans. We have had the slogan: "Remember the Maine."

We have had the slogan "Tippecanoe and Tyler, too."

Of course, they were accompanied by much breast-beating.

The American claims he is not an emotional animal. But he is the most emotional animal on earth. When he hates he hates something venemously. When he loves, he loves passionately.

Mr. HOLT. Was the Senator here this afternoon when the Senator from Florida wanted to tear Hitler limb from limb and sprinkle his blood throughout the world?

Mr. BONE. It sounds natural.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. HOLT. I yield for a question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if he would want to accept the opinion of such an organization as the Veterans of Foreign Wars, every man and woman of whom must have served overseas to be a member of that organization, against the opinion of the Senator from Florida? I heard the Senator from Florida say here the other day that he had made a speech at Chicago, and I am informed that the Veterans of Foreign Wars got up and took their banners and walked out when the Senator from Florida started to speak. If the Senator from Washington wants to accept the opinions of the Veterans of Foreign Wars against the opinion of the Senator from Florida, that is his responsibility. I would not dare to do that.

Mr. BONE. No; unhappy wight that I am, I would not undertake any such task.

Mr. HOLT. Did not the Senator know that the Senator from Florida served 7 weeks in the S. A. T. C.?

Mr. BONE. I am a little vague as to what that is.

Mr. HOLT. That is the Student Army Training Corps, composed of those who went to school and got paid in 1917 and 1918 while training.

Mr. BONE. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. HOLT. I want the Senator to know that the Senator from Florida has a war record.

Mr. BONE. I assume that the Senator from West Virginia has no objection to my placing this anti-Florida document in the RECORD. It merely tells a rather pathetic story of the boys who were overseas, and indicates a little of how they view the situation. The Senator has no objection to my putting this in the RECORD on his time?

Mr. HOLT. Not at all.

Mr. BONE. I ask that the matter to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PENSIONS AND PEACE

(Distributed by the Lieutenant Quentin Roosevelt Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars)

THE ROAD TO WAR

1. Nazi aggressions arouse sympathy and indignation in United States. First step, to "use every method short of war" to help Allies win. Slogans: "They are fighting our war." "Hitler must be stopped."

Knowing the risk, the veteran is committed to the cause of peace for America.

WILL IT BE—PEACE AND PENSIONS OR—WAR AND PENCILS

That is the veterans' problem. It is their special reason for wanting the United States to remain at peace.

Veterans are reaching the limit of their employable age. Many are jobless and have little hope of future employment. Their only solution to their problem is a pension. Pensions mean money.

The tremendous cost of war would put off pensions indefinitely. It would even bring to an end present veterans' welfare benefits.

In the event of war, doctors, medicines, and beds would be drafted. The hospitals would be emptied of veterans to make way for new casualties.

The tempo of war speeds up industry beyond its peacetime rate of production with more machines, not more men; and the belt line is becoming too fast for the veteran now. It would be impossible for him to benefit by wartime jobs.

The problems of the veteran cannot be solved by war, so—

Join the Veterans of Foreign Wars and join the drive for peace and pensions.

LIEUTENANT QUENTIN ROOSEVELT POST, No. 10, V. F. W.,
Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, yesterday we received a message that Col. Frank Knox was to be named as Secretary of the Navy. I am sure that the President of the United States would not appoint a man who was not absolutely truthful. He would appoint only a man upon whom he could depend. That would be natural. That would be expected. So I wish to read to the Senate what Colonel Knox said on the 24th day of September 1936——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. HOLT. I have no objection, but I do not particularly care.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Since the nomination of Colonel Knox is coming before the Senate, as I indicated yesterday, the matter of his expressions is of such importance that there ought to be a quorum of the Senate present to hear the expressions of Colonel Knox. Also, if the Senator has any expressions from Colonel Stimson, I shall later ask for a quorum to hear them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield for that purpose?

Mr. HOLT. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Lodge	Russell
Andrews	Ellender	Lucas	Schwartz
Ashurst	George	Lundeen	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Gerry	McCarran	Sheppard
Bankhead	Gillette	McKellar	Shipstead
Barkley	Green	McNary	Slattery
Bilbo	Guffey	Maloney	Smith
Bone	Hale	Mead	Taft
Bridges	Harrison	Miller	Thomas, Idaho
Brown	Hatch	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Hayden	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Herring	Neely	Townsend
Capper	Hill	Norris	Truman
Caraway	Holman	Nye	Tydings
Chandler	Holt	O'Mahoney	Vandenberg
Chavez	Hughes	Overton	Van Nuys
Clark, Idaho	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	Wagner
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman	Walsh
Danaher	King	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Davis	La Follette	Reed	White
Donahey	Lee	Reynolds	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, when I yielded to the Senator from Missouri, I was about to give the Senate the advantage of what Col. Frank Knox had said about the President. Of course, as I then said, I am sure the President would appoint a man to his Cabinet who would tell the truth. I am sure he would appoint a man in whose judgment he had confidence. I do not say that I agree with all of the statements which I am about to read. I am not discussing that point. But this is what Col. Frank Knox said on the 24th day of September 1936, in the Chicago Daily News:

New Dealers are trying to work up a war scare. They think it will help them in the campaign. The President is still our shepherd, but from still waters and green pastures he turns now to grim thoughts of foreign dangers. He does not like to leave Washington, he says, for more than 4 days at a time, because of conditions abroad. He is afraid there may be another big war almost any day. And his partisans profess to believe that we may be drawn into it—unless Roosevelt is reelected.

Of course, the people may be the judges.

This is not RUSH HOLT speaking. This is Col. Frank Knox, the man whom the President considered so important that he went into the Republican Party and took him into his official family as Secretary of the Navy.

This is what he said:

In his negotiations with foreign powers, Mr. Roosevelt has not been fortunate. He muffed his chance with France and Britain in the spring of 1933. Two months later, he laughingly broke up the London economic conference, and with it the world's hopes of speedy recovery from the depression. He has done nothing about the war debts. His off-and-on efforts at dollar-pound stabilization have got nowhere. Under him, our foreign trade, and, indeed, our foreign relations in general, have fallen to a new low. His Russian policy is a fizzle. His far-eastern policy is a naught.

I want to make it clear that this is Col. Frank Knox speaking, the man whom the President considered so valuable, and I am sure honest and courageous, or he would not have named him to his Cabinet; and this is what he says:

The State Department, under Roosevelt, is not exactly a tower of strength. Mr. Hull is honest and well meaning, but weak.

Colonel Knox will have to serve with Mr. Hull. I wonder how he will get around that.

Mr. Hull is honest and well meaning, but weak. He will never rank among our great Secretaries of State. The President's diplomatic appointments have been equally feeble. Mr. Bingham in London and Mr. Strauss in Paris have been notable chiefly for their ill health, which has incapacitated them for months on end. Mr. Bullitt, first in Moscow, now in Paris—

I think he is still there, judging from the debates this afternoon.

Is a jolly amateur, a playboy.

This is not RUSH HOLT speaking; this is the man the President named to his Cabinet. I want the Senate to know that I am sure the President would appoint only a truthful man, and a man in whose judgment he has confidence, or he would not name him to his Cabinet. This is what he said:

Mr. Bullitt, first in Moscow, now in Paris, is a jolly amateur, a playboy. Mr. Bowers, in Madrid, spent most of his time writing books. Since the civil war broke out in Spain, with its many complications for the United States, he has been cruising safely on an American warship in the Bay of Biscay.

Let me add there that I do not know whether he was fishing or not. You know, we take cruisers to go fishing.

Mr. Roosevelt was a member of the memorable Wilson administration which, in trying to keep us out of war, got us into it. He is by nature an experimenter.

Let me make it clear that this is Col. Frank Knox talking about the President.

He is by nature an experimenter. He likes to try new things. He is no more bound by precedent than by his own statements.

I do not say that. Do not hold me responsible for that. I will read it again:

He is no more bound by precedent than by his own statements. Caution, with him, is something to be thrown to the winds. His hand on the tiller of a little sailboat may be skillful enough. But, judging by the zigzag course he has steered in the last three and a half years, his hand on the tiller of the ship of state is amazingly erratic.

It is bad enough to have for President in time of peace a man who is overconfident, incautious, self-willed, uncertain, and unreliable. In time of war it would be disastrous.

Think of that! And I am sure, again, that the man must demand good judgment for a Cabinet appointee. The President, in this critical emergency, certainly would not appoint as Secretary of the Navy a man who has no judgment and who would not tell the truth. This is a very important time in American history. Could he not find a suitable man in the Democratic Party, or did he have to go out and get this man in whom he had so much confidence; and here is what he says:

It is bad enough to have for President in time of peace a man who is overconfident, incautious, self-willed, uncertain, and unreliable. In time of war, it would be disastrous.

That is exhibit No. 1. I have a number of these, and I intend to read and comment upon them when Colonel Knox's name comes up for discussion. I want to read what Colonel Knox thinks about another member of the Cabinet, Mr. Morgenthau, because I want these fellows to know each other. They do not seem to get along very well for some reason. I am not saying these things. Let me read you the next one. This was on September 30:

When it comes to international finance, the young gentleman farmer, Henry Morgenthau, who is President Roosevelt's Secretary of the Treasury, is, as we remarked last Monday, out of his depth.

The Russian State Bank had a payment to meet last week on a bill of $6,890,700, which it owed a Swedish firm. It ordered its agent, the Chase Bank, of New York, to make the payment. At the same time, to replenish its New York account, it offered for sale 1,000,000 pounds sterling, "at the market"—an ordinary business transaction, not even large, as exchange operations go.

But Mr. Hearst had been annoying the President by telling the world why Communists were going to vote for Mr. Roosevelt.

I wish the Senator from Florida were in the Chamber. He wants to catch these "fifth columnists." Perhaps he could find out who they are.

Mr. Hearst had been annoying the President by telling the world why Communists were going to vote for Mr. Roosevelt, and France was off gold, and Mr. Morgenthau had just made a gentleman's agreement with London and Paris.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HOLT. I do.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Did the Senator say "fifth columnists" or "fifth-rate columnists"?

Mr. HOLT. Well, I could not answer that now.

We do not know exactly what happened, but can readily imagine. Somebody—probably not Mr. Morgenthau—had a bright idea.

Think of that! He does not even give Henry Morgenthau enough credit to have a bright idea.

Somebody—probably not Mr. Morgenthau—had a bright idea. Why not buy the 1,000,000 pounds? It wouldn't cost much. It would show that the gentleman's agreement was working.

Now, I want you to get this. This is the new Secretary of the Navy:

It would reveal the great isolationist, Mr. Roosevelt, as a great internationalist—and by depicting him as locked in mortal combat with the Soviet ogre in a foreign-exchange battle it would refute Mr. Hearst.

There followed a remarkable scene. The newspapermen were called in. Mr. Morgenthau excitedly described to them the great Russian raid on the pound and his own valiant rush to the rescue. It was "ticklish," he said, but he did it. Furthermore, if more raids occurred, he said, he was ready to go the limit. "Q. Which is?—A. Two billion dollars."

Absurd, of course. The Russians had no reason to raid the pound. They had every reason not to; and if the wished to raid it, 1,000,000 pounds would be a mere drop in the bucket. Nevertheless, we do not think that Mr. Morgenthau was being Machiavellian. We think he just didn't know any better.

With Colonel Knox in the Cabinet, and with Henry Morgenthau there—the gentleman farmer to whom he referred as the man who did not know—of course, with Colonel Knox's advice, he may know now, and we ought to give him credit for that. Going ahead, however—and I have so much material that I do not want to detain the Senate long on this—I want to read another editorial, which appeared on October 27, because I am sure the President knows Colonel Knox and agrees with him, and that is why he calls him in in this terrible emergency. Here it is again, October 27:

"Trust me," the President seems to say. "Don't ask me what I am going to do next; just leave all that to me."

"Our best strategy," said Professor Tugwell at Los Angeles, "is to surge forward with the workers and farmers of this Nation, committed to general achievements, but trusting the genius of our leader for the disposition of our forces and the timing of our attacks. I do not need to remind you of his genius for this task, nor of his devotion to the cause."

"Our leader!' The Italians say "Il Duce," the Germans, "Unser Fuehrer."

Collectivists of every sort are supporting Mr. Roosevelt. That is natural. For at the root of his philosophy lies the view, shared alike by Communists and Fascists, that conditions have suddenly changed fundamentally, and that, in consequence, individual liberty under democracy, as hitherto practiced in this country, is no longer either desirable or feasible.

Many people are confused about Mr. Roosevelt, because his tactics are confusing, and are meant to be confusing.

That is very interesting, what the appointed Secretary of the Navy, Colonel Knox, says, speaking about the Cabinet. This is what he says:

Many people are confused about Mr. Roosevelt, because his tactics are confusing, and are meant to be confusing.

Has he changed since he accepted the appointment?

Listen to this. I want Senators to get this. This is what Colonel Knox says about the President. I am sure that when he goes into the Cabinet meeting he will wish it had not been said.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is this an expression from the new Secretary of the Navy about the present President of the United States, or some past President of the United States?

Mr. HOLT. It is an expression of a hopeful Secretary of the Navy to the present President of the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator think that the prospective Secretary of the Navy will repeat that at the first Cabinet meeting to the present President of the United States, or will he recant on it?

Mr. HOLT. In these days of national emergency you are not supposed to talk much. This is what he said:

But, as a matter of tactics, he will not avow this aim. And to reach it he is ready to nod, smile, agree, assert, evade, deny, distort—

I am not half way through—distract, dally, retreat, startle, dazzle, juggle, sidestep, and circumvent.

[Laughter.]

I want the RECORD not to accuse the Senator from West Virginia of saying that. This is Colonel Knox's editorial on the 27th day of October 1936. He said that the President is ready to nod, smile, agree, assert, evade, deny, distort, distract, dally, retreat, startle, dazzle, juggle, sidestep, and circumvent. If he can do anything else, I do not know what it is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, which of those verbs would apply to the appointment of Col. Frank Knox as Secretary of the Navy? Possibly all of them?

Mr. HOLT. To be perfectly frank, I do not think there is a word that can apply.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I think the appointment was a "dazzling" appointment.

Mr. HOLT. The Senator thinks it is the one which says "dazzling" or "startling"? [Laughter.]

Mr. LUNDEEN. Both.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest "circumventing."

Mr. HOLT. He may have circumvented, I do not know, but he dallied and retreated, there is no question about that.

The following is in quotes. He wanted to make it so sure:

Our leader is a showman. He likes to astonish. He likes to keep people guessing. He has a taste for the novel, the dramatic, the grandiose.

The President has a taste for the novel, the dramatic, and the grandiose.

He is strongly attracted by such vast notions as harnessing the tides at Passamaquoddy, planting a thousand-mile belt of trees in the wind-swept western prairies, digging a gigantic ship canal across Florida.

The Senator from Florida has gone. Then he says this:

In the past it has been customary for a President to gather around him, as his advisers after election, outstanding members of his party, men who helped nominate him and who fought for him in his campaign. But "our leader" has turned his party into a one-man affair. He has brushed aside the outstanding Democrats.

Get that. [Laughter.] No one knows it better than the Democrats now. This is Colonel Knox speaking:

He has brushed aside the outstanding Democrats.

And names Colonel Knox as Secretary of the Navy.

His general staff consists of Prof. Rexford Guy Tugwell, a sly social revolutionary.

He is now in molasses, so we will not pay any attention to him. Senators will remember that a moment ago I talked about Henry Morgenthau. He did not like him. He said he was not very smart. Of course, I am not going to answer that.

We will find when he comes into the Cabinet that Secretary Morgenthau has had much more to do with the Navy, particularly the transfer and sale of supplies to foreign countries, than he had when he was speaking.

Now he has gotten to Tugwell. And who is Secretary of Agriculture? It is Mr. Henry Wallace, is it not? This is what he says about Henry Wallace. He is in nice company down there at that Cabinet meeting. I have read what he said about the President, and I have read what he said about Morgenthau. This is what he thinks about Henry Wallace.

A farm journal editor with a messianic complex.

He was not satisfied to take that shot at Henry Wallace. But he has to sit with Harold Ickes—if anyone can do that. This is what he said about "Old Ick":

Harold Ickes, a reformer who imagines he is the only honest man in the world.

[Laughter.]

I do not know whether he has changed his mind or not. People do. But that is another member of the Cabinet. I want to send this to the different members of the Cabinet so that they can greet with all love and affection this new member of the Cabinet when he joins them.

Then there was Jim Farley. What does he say about Jim Farley? He said:

Jim Farley, an unscrupulous Tammany boss.

This is not RUSH HOLT speaking. I would not say that. This is the would-be new Secretary of the Navy. Henry Morgenthau is not very bright, Henry Wallace has a bad complex, Cordell Hull is weak, Harold Ickes is a reformer who thought he was the only honest man in the world, and Jim Farley is an unscrupulous Tammany boss. Colonel Knox should not go into that company. He says further:

John Lewis, a ruthless and ambitious labor leader.

But I forgot Miss Perkins, and I must not forget her. [Laughter.] Since that time Harry Hopkins has been put into the Cabinet. He is in charge of defense. He has been so important in boondoggling in America that the President wants him to do a little boondoggling in Europe. The paper said the other day that the President just could not afford to let Harry get too far away, so he is keeping him at the White House so that he can talk to him. Remember Harry?

Here is what Colonel Knox said about Miss—he did not even say "Frances"—he said "Miss Perkins." "Miss Perkins and Harry Hopkins, social workers, with a bias against businessmen." I do not know whom he has left in that Cabinet. I have been trying to think who has been left there about whom he did not make statements. Now he is going into that Cabinet, after saying all those things about the President, and the members of the President's Cabinet, of which he can consider himself a member if his nomination shall be approved by the Senate. Then he goes ahead to discuss a great deal more, but I may say that he finishes the article with this paragraph:

Meanwhile, anyone who brings him an attractive scheme to flatter the momentary hate or fears of the crowd, or to intensify class feeling, or to take money from those who are earning it and give it to those who are not, or to attract attention dramatically to "our leader," or to spend large sums under his personal direction, is assured of a sympathetic audience.

Get that. This is Colonel Knox talking about the President. When did the President change in the colonel's opinion? He says:

We are going to continue to fight. We are not going to retreat.

Colonel Knox says:

Meanwhile, anyone who brings him an attractive scheme to flatter the momentary hates or fears of the crowd, or to intensify class feeling, or to take money from those who are earning it and give it to those who are not, or to attract attention dramatically to "our leader," or to spend large sums under his personal direction, is assured of a sympathetic audience.

I wish to make myself clear, Mr. President. I would not accuse the President of naming a man to his Cabinet who would not tell the truth. I would not accuse him of naming a man to his Cabinet who did not have good judgment and farsightedness at this time of emergency. I, of course, will say no more than that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. Oh, yes; I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does that article contain any information as to the name of the person or persons who bunked the President into the scheme by suggesting the names of Stimson and Knox to the Cabinet?

Mr. HOLT. I am not sure that I understood the Senator's question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does that editorial which the Senator just read contain any information explaining the gullibility of the President, according to Col. Frank Knox, and any information as to the name of the person or persons who suggested to the President the appointment of Colonel Stimson and Colonel Knox as members of the Cabinet?

Mr. HOLT. No; I do not. The two men he did not talk about were the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, and both of them were kicked out, one to run for office and another for another reason.

Colonel Knox does not have any use for Harold Ickes. He does not have any use for Harry Hopkins or for Frances Perkins, or for Henry Morgenthau, or for Henry Wallace, or for Cordell Hull, or for Jim Farley, and there are not many others left in the Cabinet. Here is another editorial which I shall read, and then I believe I shall read no more tonight, because, although I am sure Colonel Knox would be willing for me to read his words, I do not desire to delay the Senate. The title is, "All things to all men."

The editorial is:

President Roosevelt is nothing if not versatile.

Last January he was Andrew Jackson, castigating the rich and powerful in the name of the common people. The other day, in North Carolina, he was our shepherd, leading us, he said, beside the still waters. Tuesday night, at Syracuse, he was the savior of capitalism and the preserver of democracy. He was also Washington and Jefferson, Lincoln, and Wilson, a mighty leader, but, like them, opposed and misunderstood by an ungrateful citizenry.

We have talked about Colonel Knox's liberalism and here is what he said about the President.

He described himself, incidentally, as a progressive-conservative-liberal—whatever that is.

When will the President find out that he cannot indefinitely be all things to all men? He cannot effectively boast of his democracy, while at the same time reaching out for unprecedented personal powers—powers which in other hands, as he has himself ingenuously admitted, would endanger the people's liberties. He cannot, while practicing collectivism, pose as the savior of capitalism. He cannot appear one day as a radical, the next as a conservative—and expect anyone to take him seriously.

In conclusion I wish to make certain that the Senate understands that I am not saying these things. It is Colonel Knox who said these things, the man the President has named to fill the position of Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. In that connection when the able Senator from West Virginia speaks of the Cabinet, I wonder if it would not be well to check upon the fact that when the President and the 10 Cabinet members sat down at the table we would find, if Colonel Knox shall be confirmed and Colonel Stimson shall be confirmed, that 7 members of the Cabinet come from the Empire State, and 4 come from the rest of the country. That might be worth thinking about.

Mr. HOLT. All I wish to say is that after Colonel Knox said these things about the Cabinet and about the President he had better take lessons from somebody so he can learn to do what he accused the President of doing, so that he can nod, smile, agree, assert, evade, deny, distort, distract, delay, retreat, startle, dazzle, juggle, sidestep, and circumvent, because after saying those things, Colonel Knox will have to do all those things if he is to sit with a straight face with the other members of the Cabinet and the President of the United States.

LETTER OF RESIGNATION OF HON. HARRY H. WOODRING AS SECRETARY OF WAR

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution and ask that it be read for the information of the Senate and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 284), as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate the letter of the Honorable Harry H. Woodring resigning as Secretary of War of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

EXPEDITION IN NAVAL SHIPBUILDING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9822) to expedite naval shipbuilding, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator from Utah desire the floor?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I was going to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. President, I ask now for action on the first amendment to the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first committee amendment will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 1, line 5, after the word "during", to strike out "any" and insert "the"; in line 6, after the name "President", to insert "on September 8, 1939"; in line 7, after the name "Navy", to insert "or the Secretary of the Treasury in the case of Coast Guard contracts,"; in line 11, after the word "as", to strike out "he" and insert "such Secretary"; in the same line, after the word "and", to strike out "he shall require"; on page 2, line 2, after the word "made", to insert "shall be required"; in line 3, before the word "is", to strike out "He" and insert "The Secretary concerned"; in line 11, after the name "Secretary", to strike out "of the Navy" and insert "concerned"; in line 12, after the word "report", to insert "every 3 months", and in line 13, after the name "Congress", to strike out "at the beginning of each regular session", so as to make the section read:

That whenever in the opinion of the President of the United States such course would be in the best interests of national defense during the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, the Secretary of the Navy, or the Secretary of the Treasury in the case of Coast Guard contracts, is authorized to advance, from appropriations available therefor, payments to contractors in amounts not exceeding 30 percent of the contract price, upon such terms as such Secretary shall prescribe, and adequate security for the protection of the Government for the payments so made shall be required. The Secretary concerned is further authorized in his discretion to make partial payments on the balance of the contract price from time to time during the progress of the work, such partial payments not to exceed the value of the work already done, but to be subject to a lien as provided by the act of August 22, 1911 (37 Stat. 32; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 582), entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to make partial payments for work already done under public contracts": Provided, That the Secretary concerned shall report every 3 months to the Congress the advance payments made under the authority of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 15, before the word "That", to insert "(a)"; in line 17, after the word "during", to strike out "any" and insert "the"; in line 18, after the name "President", to insert "on September 8, 1939,"; and in line 24, after the word "other", to strike out "equipment, without competition, and all orders for such machine tools and other equipment shall, in the discretion of the President, take priority over orders for export: Provided, That he shall determine the price to be fair and reasonable: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report to the Congress at the beginning of each regular session the contracts entered into under the authority of this section" and insert:

Similar equipment, with or without advertising or competitive bidding upon determination that the price is fair and reasonable, and deliveries of material under all orders placed pursuant to the authority of this section and all other naval contracts or orders shall, in the discretion of the President, take priority over all deliveries for private account or for export: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report every 3 months to the Congress the contracts entered into under the authority of this section: Provided further, That contracts negotiated pursuant to the provisions of this section shall not be deemed to be contracts for the purchase of such materials, supplies, articles, or equipment as may usually be bought in the open market within the meaning of section 9 of the act entitled "An act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036; U. S. C., Supp V, title 41, secs. 35–45).

(b) After the date of approval of this act no contract shall be made for the construction or manufacture of any complete naval vessel or any Army or Navy aircraft, or any portion thereof, under the provisions of this section or otherwise, unless the contractor agrees, for the purposes of section 3 of the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505; 34 U. S. C. 496), as amended—

(1) to pay into the Treasury profit in excess of 7 percent (in lieu of the 10 percent and 12 percent specified in such section 3) of the total contract prices of such contracts within the scope of this subsection as are completed by the particular contracting party within the income taxable year;

(2) that any profit in excess of 7.53 percent of the cost of performing such contracts as are completed by the contracting party within the income taxable year shall be considered to be profit in excess of 7 percent of the total contract prices of such contracts; and

(3) that he will make no subcontract which is within the scope of such section 3, unless the subcontractor agrees to the foregoing conditions.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. (a) That whenever deemed by the President of the United States to be in the best interests of the national defense during the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to negotiate contracts for the acquisition, construction, repair, or alteration of complete naval vessels or aircraft, or any portion thereof, including plans, spare parts, and equipment therefor, that have been or may be authorized, and also for machine tools and other similar equipment, with or without advertising or competitive bidding upon determination that the price is fair and reasonable, and deliveries of material under all orders placed pursuant to the authority of this section and all other naval contracts or orders shall, in the discretion of the President, take priority over all deliveries for private account or for export: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report every 3 months to the Congress the contracts entered into under the authority of this section: Provided further, That contracts negotiated pursuant to the provisions of this section shall not be deemed to be contracts for the purchase of such materials, supplies, articles, or equipment as may usually be bought in the open market within the meaning of section 9 of the act entitled "An act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes", approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 41, secs. 35–45).

(b) After the date of approval of this act no contract shall be made for the construction or manufacture of any complete naval vessel or any Army or Navy aircraft, or any portion thereof, under the provisions of this section or otherwise, unless the contractor agrees, for the purposes of section 3 of the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505; 34 U. S. C. 496), as amended—

(1) To pay into the Treasury profit in excess of 7 percent (in lieu of the 10 percent and 12 percent specified in such section 3) of the total contract prices of such contracts within the scope of this subsection as are completed by the particular contracting party within the income taxable year;

(2) That any profit in excess of 7.53 percent of the cost of performing such contracts as are completed by the contracting party within the income taxable year shall be considered to be profit in excess of 7 percent of the total contract prices of such contracts; and

(3) That he will make no subcontract which is within the scope of such section 3, unless the subcontractor agrees to the foregoing conditions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 23, after "sec. 496)", to strike out "shall", and insert "and as made applicable to contracts for aircraft or any portion thereof for the Army by such act of April 3, 1939, shall, in the case of contracts or subcontracts entered into after the date of approval of this act and"; on page 5, line 2, after the words "period of", to strike out "any" and insert "the"; and in line 3, after the name "President", to insert "on September 8, 1939", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. The provisions of section 3 of the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505), as amended by the acts of June 25, 1936 (49 Stat. 1926), and April 3, 1939 (53 Stat. 560; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 34, sec. 496), and as made applicable to contracts for aircraft or any portion thereof for the Army by such act of April 3, 1939, shall, in the case of contracts or subcontracts entered into after the date of approval of this act and during the period of the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, be limited to contracts or subcontracts where the award exceeds $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 5, to strike out:

SEC. 4. During any national emergency declared by the President to exist the decision of the Secretary of the Navy as to the necessity and the cost, including the proportion thereof to be charged against the particular contract, of special additional equipment and facilities required to facilitate the completion of any naval vessel or aircraft, or parts thereof, in private plants shall be final, subject to approval by the President and review by the Federal courts. This decision may be made at any time after the contract is awarded if in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy sufficient data are available to permit of reasonable accuracy: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report to the Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, the cost of such special equipment and facilities to be borne by the Government under each contract.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 4. In the case of every contract or subcontract for the construction or manufacture of any complete naval vessel or Army or Navy aircraft or any portion thereof which is entered into (whether before or after the date of approval of this act), the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, after agreement with the contractor or subcontractor, shall certify to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as to (a) the necessity and cost of special additional equipment and facilities acquired to facilitate, during the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, the completion of such naval vessel or Army or Navy aircraft or portion thereof in private plants and (b) the percentage of cost of such special additional equipment and facilities to be charged against such contract or subcontract. For all purposes of section 3 of the act of March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505; 34 U. S. C. 496), as amended, such certification shall, subject to such regulations as the President may prescribe, be binding upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The part of such cost chargeable against the contract or subcontract in pursuance of such certification, shall, for the purposes of such section 3, be considered to be a reduction of the contract price of the contract or subcontract. The amount charged against the contract or subcontract in pursuance of such certification shall, for the purposes of such section 3, be applied against and reduce the cost or other basis of such special additional equipment and facilities as of the date of installation thereof: Provided, That the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, shall report to the Congress, every 3 months, the cost of such special additional equipment and facilities to be borne by the Government under each contract.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 2, to strike out:

SEC. 5. Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law the regular hours of labor for employees of the United States Government, and of contractors and subcontractors, when such employees are engaged in work in connection with naval vessels or aircraft or parts thereof or other work incidental thereto, shall, during the period of any national emergency declared by the President to exist, be a 5-day week of 8 hours per day and 40 hours per week: Provided, That these hours may be exceeded and that such employees shall receive compensation for their employment in excess of the hours above specified at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate at which they are employed: Provided further, That such compensation for overtime shall apply only to per diem, hourly, professional and subprofessional employees and to blueprinters, photostat and rotaprint operators, inspectors, supervisory planners and estimators, and progressmen, and assistants to shop and plant superintendents of the C. A. F. service, all as defined by the Classification Act of March 4, 1923 (42 Stat. 1488; U. S. C. 5, ch. 13), as amended, and by the classification rules of the United States Civil Service Commission in the case of Government employees; and to similar classes of employees of contractors and subcontractors: Provided further, That in determining the overtime compensation of per annum Government employees the pay for 1 day shall be considered one three-hundred-and-sixtieth of their respective per annum salaries: Provided further, That the hours of labor in any one week shall not exceed 48 unless the President shall declare it necessary in the interest of the national defense: Provided further, That the President of the United States is authorized to suspend during the period of any national emergency declared by him to exist, the provisions of the act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1482), if in his judgment such course is necessary in the interest of the national defense: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to modify existing contracts accordingly.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 5. (a) Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, the regular working hours of the Navy Department and the Coast Guard and their field services shall be 8 hours a day or 40 hours per week during the period of the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist: Provided, That under such regulations as the head of the Department concerned may prescribe, and where additional employees cannot be obtained to meet the exigencies of the situation, these hours may be exceeded: Provided further, That compensation for employment in excess of 40 hours in any administrative workweek computed at a rate not less than 1½ times the regular rate shall be paid to per annum, per month, per diem, per hour, and piece-work employees: Provided further, That in determining the overtime compensation of per annum Government employees the pay for 1 day shall be considered to be one three-hundred-and-sixtieth of their respective per annum salaries: Provided further, That the President is authorized to suspend, in whole or in part, for the War and Navy Departments and for the Coast Guard and their field services, during the period of the national emergency declared by him on September 8, 1939, to exist, the provisions of the act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1482; U. S C. 5, 26 (a)), if in his judgment such course is necessary in the interest of national defense, and any regulations issued pursuant to the act of March 14, 1936 (49 Stat. 1161; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 5, sec. 29 (a)), may be modified accordingly: And provided further, That notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to prescribe regulations to establish such uniformity among the War and Navy Departments and the Coast Guard and their field services in regard to hours of work and compensation for overtime of their civilian employees as he may deem necessary in the interest of national defense.

(b) During the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, the provisions of law prohibiting more than 8 hours' labor in any 1 day of persons engaged upon work covered by Army, Navy, and Coast Guard contracts shall be suspended.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. The committee amendment which is now under consideration not only has the effect of suspending the law with reference to 8 hours of labor per day, but it also deprives the worker, if he is required to work more than 8 hours, of time and a half for overtime. I wonder why this provision is in the bill at all, because under the present law the President is authorized, under section 326 of the United States Code, title 40, to suspend certain provisions of law. Let me read that law:

In case of national emergency the President is authorized to suspend provisions of law prohibiting more than 8 hours' labor in any one day of persons engaged upon work covered by contracts with the United States: Provided—

And this is left out in the amendment we are now considering—

That the wages of persons employed upon such contracts shall be computed on a basic rate of 8 hours' work, with overtime rates to be paid for at not less than time and a half for all hours of work in excess of 8 hours.

If the committee amendment should be adopted, this law may be suspended, so that a wage earner may be required to work 12 hours, or whatever the hours may be above 8, without being entitled to time and a half for overtime. This is the only case I know of in all our labor laws in which the worker is deprived of time and a half for overtime.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the labor provisions of the bill caused the committee to give them a considerable amount of attention; and so far as I know they are generally approved by those who represent labor, and also by the Navy Department, the Army, and the President.

I do not know that I have the point which the Senator is presenting; but, in brief, the bill seeks to establish this policy: That there shall be no overtime work of any kind by anybody, unless no one can be found in the country who can do the work except some expert who is indispensable. In other words, there is a provision in the bill which takes care of the situation. It is the desire of the committee and of the administration that the speeding up of the building of vessels and the manufacture of airplanes shall lead to an expansion of labor. For instance, there is no reason why a helper in the navy yard needs to work overtime. Anybody can learn to be a helper in a few days. There is no need for a common laborer to work overtime. What we are striving to do is to put a large number of additional employees to work in the navy yard. The bill does permit overtime over 40 hours; but, I repeat, it is the intention to limit and restrict overtime to those persons in the employ of the Navy Department who are indispensable, such as drafters of plans, skilled mechanics, and technicians of one kind or another. If they are employed overtime they are to receive for each hour of overtime one and a half times their hourly rate.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. That is not the case in the amendment beginning on page 9, in line 23. In section 5 (a) it is specifically stated that if the hours of employment exceed 40 hours a week, the rate for the increased hours shall be time and a half for overtime.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure that this is an oversight, because this other provision to which I have referred permits the suspension of the 8-hour law; and the employee, though he may work 12 hours a day, or any number of hours over 8 hours a day, is given only the regular per diem wage, and not time and a half for overtime. If the Senator will permit me to read the present law, and then compare it with the committee amendment, I shall appreciate it.

Mr. WALSH. What is there in this provision which denies time and a half to anyone who works overtime?

Mr. WAGNER. The committee amendment reads:

During the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, the provisions of law prohibiting more than 8 hours' labor in any one day of persons engaged upon work covered by Army, Navy, and Coast Guard contracts shall be suspended.

If that law is suspended, we suspend the limitation of 8 hours, and we suspend the other provision of law which gives the laborer time and a half for overtime. It is very clear. May I read the present law on that very question?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. The present law reads:

In case of national emergency the President is authorized to suspend provisions of law prohibiting more than 8 hours' labor in any 1 day of persons engaged upon work covered by contracts with the United States.

Thus far it reads just as the proposed amendment reads, in effect; but here is the proviso in the present law, which is omitted in the committee amendment.

Provided, That the wages of persons employed upon such contracts shall be considered on a basic rate of 8 hours' work, with overtime rates to be paid for at not less than time and a half for all hours of work in excess of 8 hours.

It is that proviso that I should like to see in this particular amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, first of all, the administration does not want to assume the responsibility of exercising the power given in the law to which the Senator refers.

Mr. WAGNER. The very same power is given here.

Mr. WALSH. We are giving it for overtime work only, and with the limitation that it may be exercised only in the case of persons who are indispensable in order to carry out these contracts.

Mr. WAGNER. But if the proviso is put in that for all time over 8 hours per day the employee is entitled to time and a half, I have no objection to the amendment. As it is now, a representative of one of the labor organizations called my attention to the fact that we are permitting the suspension of a law without providing any time-and-a-half for overtime, which we do in every other case.

Mr. WALSH. Is the Senator talking about the labor laws with regard to overtime which apply to private concerns, or those which apply to the Government?

Mr. WAGNER. I am talking about contracts with the Army, Navy, or any other Government department.

Mr. WALSH. Therefore, the Senator means contracts with private concerns?

Mr. WAGNER. That is what this amendment refers to.

Mr. WALSH. Most of it would be with our own navy yards.

Mr. WAGNER. The amendment reads:

of persons engaged upon work covered by Army, Navy, and Coast Guard contracts.

Those are contracts by private concerns. If the Senator will look at the provision, I feel very certain that he will find that I am right.

Mr. WALSH. I am sure there was no intention to make any discrimination.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure of that. I know the Senator is one of the great champions of labor in the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator has any doubt about it, let us have the amendment, and we will let it go into conference.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, my contention is that it is not necessary at all.

Mr. WALSH. But so far as the committee's intentions were concerned, they were that every person who was employed overtime, whether he was subject to the provisions of the national wage-and-hour law or whether he was subject to the Walsh-Healey law which deals with public contracts, should receive one and one-half time for every hour over 40 hours.

Mr. WAGNER. That is true, and that is shown by the other provisions of the bill. If the Senator will take this proviso and put it at the end, it will cover the matter:

Provided, That the wages of the persons employed upon such contracts shall be computed on a basic day rate of 8 hours' work, with overtime work to be paid for at not less than time and one-half for all hours of work in excess of 8 hours.

Mr. WALSH. That is perfectly acceptable if it is not already included in the language of the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. I may say that it is not there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from New York will send his amendment to the desk, it will be stated.

Mr. WAGNER. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, line 2, after the word "suspended", it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the wages of the persons employed upon such contracts shall be computed on a basic day rate of 8 hours' work, with overtime work to be paid for at not less than time and one-half for all hours of work in excess of 8 hours.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the Senate met this morning at 11 o'clock. It is now 8:30. We have been in session for 9 hours and 30 minutes. I have been here practically all day, and during that time I have heard only one speech directed to the subject under consideration, which is the Navy bill. We had a very wonderful strong address by the able Senator from Massachusetts. The rest of the day has been devoted to oratory.

I send to the desk a resolution, which I ask to have read and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 285) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Vice President appoint a committee of three Members of the Senate to consider and report to the Senate on the advisability of renting a hall in Washington to provide radio and other suitable facilities for public speaking by Members of this body who have the urge to address the public, and thereby permit other Members of the Senate to engage in the transaction of public business. The said committee shall also consider the advisability of closing the galleries when one-third of the Senators sign a statement that they desire to proceed to a consideration of public business without being prevented from doing so by orations not germane to the measure pending before the Senate.

[Laughter.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask that the resolution lie on the table for future consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, referring to the amendment just presented by the Senator from New York and adopted, for the purpose of calling the matter to the attention of the conferees, I desire to state that I believe it will make a conflict between subsection (b) and subsection (a) when the amendment as adopted is considered. In order to call it to the attention of the conferees, I have interrupted the Senator at this time.

Mr. WALSH. I think all the members of our committee consider that the amendment is unnecessary, but, in view of the feeling of the Senator from New York, I accepted it. Let me say, before I comment upon the resolution presented by the distinguished Senator from Alabama, that it reminds me of the story of the lawyer who was making an impassioned plea to the jury and was desperately seeking to bring tears to the eyes of the jury in order that they would be sympathetic toward the case of his client. The judge called for order and said, "If this sobbing and weeping does not stop, I am going to clear the courtroom." Thereupon the lawyer said, "Your Honor, turn out the men folks if you will, but spare, oh, spare, the women and children so that they can cry!" [Laughter.]

So I am sure that the orators to whom the Senator refers would want at least the women and children to be left in the galleries, even if we turned out the men folks.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If that suggestion were carried out it would destroy the effect of the resolution, because it would not stop the speaking.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, because of the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], I should like to state that subdivision (a) on page 9 refers to Government employees, whereas subdivision (b) refers to employees on Government contracts with private concerns. That is a clear distinction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 8, after the word "the" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "Navy Department" and insert "War and Navy Departments"; in line 21, after the word "employment" and the colon, to strike out: "And provided further, That in connection with the defense program of the United States the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 555; U. S. C., title 5, sec. 652), may be waived in any case when approved by the Secretary of the Navy," and insert: "Provided further, That during the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 555; U. S. C., title 5, sec. 652), shall not apply to any civil-service employee of the War or Navy Departments or of the Coast Guard, or their field services, whose immediate removal is, in the opinion of the Secretary concerned, warranted by the demands of national security, but nothing herein shall be construed to repeal, modify, or suspend the proviso in that section. Those persons summarily removed under the authority of this section may, if in the opinion of the Secretary concerned, subsequent investigation so warrants, be reinstated, and if so reinstated shall be allowed compensation for the period of such removal at the rate they were receiving on the date of removal: And provided further, That within 30 days after such removal any such person shall have an opportunity personally to appear before the official designated by the Secretary concerned and be fully informed of the reasons for such removal, and to submit, within 30 days thereafter, such statement or affidavits, or both, as he may desire to show why he should be retained and not removed;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 2 of the act of May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 468), and section 204 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 404), any person heretofore or hereafter retired under the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, may be reemployed in the service of the War and Navy Departments: Provided, That there shall be deducted and withheld from the basic salary, pay, or compensation of such person and credited to his account as provided in section 12 (a) of the act of May 29, 1930, as amended, the regular deductions prescribed by the said act: Provided further, That upon separation from the service for any cause such person may elect to receive a refund of the total deductions so withheld together with interest at 4 percent per annum compounded on June 30 of each year, or receive credit for the additional service in the computation of any annuity awarded thereafter: Provided further, That payment of the annuity of such person shall be suspended during the period of such employment: Provided further, That during the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 555; U. S. C., title 5, sec. 652), shall not apply to any civil-service employee of the War or Navy Departments or of the Coast Guard, or their field services, whose immediate removal is, in the opinion of the Secretary concerned, warranted by the demands of national security, but nothing herein shall be construed to repeal, modify, or suspend the proviso in that section. Those persons summarily removed under the authority of this section may, if in the opinion of the Secretary concerned, subsequent investigation so warrants, be reinstated, and if so reinstated shall be allowed compensation for the period of such removal at the rate they were receiving on the date of removal: And provided further, That within 30 days after such removal any such person shall have an opportunity personally to appear before the official designated by the Secretary concerned and be fully informed of the reasons for such removal, and to submit, within 30 days thereafter, such statement or affidavits, or both, as he may desire to show why he should be retained and not removed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 4, after the word "Establishment", to insert "and of the Coast Guard"; in line 5, after the word "of", to strike out "any" and insert "the"; in line 6, after the name "President", to insert "on September 8, 1939"; in line 13, after the word "employees", to strike out "in those trades and occupations wherein a shortage exists" and insert "whose services at the time cannot, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Treasury, as the case may be, be spared without detriment to the national defense", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. The act of March 14, 1936, entitled An act to provide for vacations to Government employees and for other purposes" (49 Stat. 1161), is hereby amended by adding, after section 7, a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. Employees of the Navy Department and the Naval Establishment and of the Coast Guard may, during the period of the national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, be employed during the time they would otherwise be on vacation without deprivation of their vacation pay for the time so worked. Employees who forego their vacations in accordance with the provisions of this section may be paid, in addition to their regular pay, the equivalent of the pay they would have drawn during the period of such vacation. The provisions of this section shall be applicable only to employees whose services at the time cannot, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Treasury, as the case may be, be spared without detriment to the national defense."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 17, to strike out:

SEC. 8. The limit of cost of the vessels authorized by the act of July 30, 1937 (50 Stat. 544), is hereby increased by an amount equal to additional costs resulting from the provisions of this act.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 8. (a) The limit of cost of the vessels authorized by the act of July 30, 1937 (50 Stat. 544), and any statutory limitation with respect to the cost of any other individual project of construction are hereby increased as may be necessary to expedite national defense and otherwise effectuate the purposes of this act: Provided, That the monetary limitations on payments out of appropriations available to the Navy Department for employees in the Navy Department and for employees in the field service assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under the Native and Alien Schedules of Wages of civil employees in the field services of the Navy Department shall be suspended during the limited national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist: Provided further, The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to employ such additional personnel at the seat of government and elsewhere, and to provide out of any appropriations available to the Navy Department, for their salaries and for such printing and binding, communication service, supplies, travel expenses, and for such public works projects, inclusive of buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto (including Government-owned facilities at privately owned plants and the expansion of such plants), and the acquisition of such land, and the purchase or lease of such structures, as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

(b) The Secretary of the Navy is further authorized, with or without advertising or competitive bidding, to provide out of any available naval appropriations, for the operation and maintenance of any plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, and appurtenances thereto constructed pursuant to the authorizations contained in this act, either by means of Government personnel or through the agency of selected qualified commercial manufacturers under contracts entered into with them, and when he deems it necessary in the interest of national defense, to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of any such plants, buildings, facilities, utilities, appurtenances thereto, and land, under such terms and conditions as he may deem advisable, and without regard to the provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412): Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report every 3 months to the Congress, each and every contract amounting to $100,000 and over, entered into under the authority of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 14, to strike out:

SEC. 9. As used in this act, the words "national emergency" shall be deemed to include the limited national emergency declared by the President on September 8, 1939.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 9. The Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby authorized to modify existing contracts, including Coast Guard contracts, as the Secretary concerned may deem necessary to expedite military and naval defense, and to otherwise effectuate the purposes of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 23, to strike out:

SEC. 10. The provisions herein contained shall be effective for a period of 3 years beginning with the date of approval of this act.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 10. Hereafter the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, acting by direction of the President, shall constitute approval by the President as required by section 4 of the act approved April 25, 1939 (53 Stat. 590, 592), necessary to the validity of any contract entered into under authority contained in said section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 8, to insert:

SEC. 11. (a) No aliens employed by a contractor in the performance of secret, confidential, or restricted Government contracts shall be permitted to have access to the plans or specifications, or the work under such contracts, or to participate in the contract trials, unless the written consent of the head of the Government department concerned has first been obtained, and any person who willfully violates or through negligence permits the violation of the provisions of this subsection shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

(b) Any alien who obtains employment on secret, confidential, or restricted Government contracts by misrepresentation of his alien status, or who makes such misrepresentation while seeking such employment, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

(c) For the purpose of this section, the term "person" shall be construed to include an individual, partnership, association, corporation, or other business enterprise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 3, to insert:

SEC. 12. The provisions of all preceding sections of this act shall terminate June 30, 1942, unless the Congress shall otherwise provide.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 6, to insert:

SEC. 13. Section 6 of the act approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 41, secs. 35–45), is hereby amended by adding "Provided, That whenever in his judgment such course is in the public interest, the President is authorized to suspend any or all of the representations and stipulations contained in section 1 of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, there are some additional amendments which I should like to present for the committee, and I now send to the desk the first of these important amendments.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Since we are at this moment on this particular topic, I direct the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to page 15, line 19, and ask him if he will not consent to the interpolation of the word "knowingly", or a word or phrase having the effect of that word, so that a person who innocently misrepresents his status may not be subjected to the enormous penalty of a possible fine of $10,000 or imprisonment of not more than 5 years?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has called attention to subsection (b) on page 15, which reads as follows:

(b) Any alien who obtains employment on secret, confidential, or restricted Government contracts by misrepresentation of his alien status, or who makes such misrepresentation while seeking such employment, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

I am wondering how anyone could knowingly make a misrepresentation of his alien status.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say to the Senator from Massachusetts that within a very few months I saw a man accepted for jury service in a State which is particularly attentive to the requirements of a citizen's status for jury service, and all his life he had supposed he was a citizen, as did the jury commissioner in his town, and as did the registrar of voters in his town. It developed, from the diligence of some lawyer who chose to look the matter up, that that individual was born in Nova Scotia, and had never qualified as a citizen of this country. The gentleman, in complete good faith, thought he was a citizen.

I think that if we insert the word "knowingly," or a phrase which will have the effect of protecting against some misrepresentation which would have the effect of altering the status of an alien, such protection would be justifiable, and we should protect people against such a result.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, as the Senator knows, the purpose of this section is to prevent a person claiming to be an American citizen when he is not, and getting employment and dealing with secret confidential plans for the building of naval vessels and airplanes and similar work. When such misrepresentation is made, it permits criminal action to be taken against such a person. It is an effort to prevent sabotage and prevent the disclosure of secret plans of our Government. I would be the last, as the Senator knows, to want anyone punished who was innocent.

Mr. DANAHER. Of course.

Mr. WALSH. I am somewhat disturbed about the word "knowingly," because of the defense which would be raised in cases where one claimed to be a citizen and was not a citizen. He could say he did not understand, that he speaks poor English, or really thought he was a citizen when he was not. I wish the Senator could use some more moderate phrase.

Mr. DANAHER. I appreciate the position of the Senator from Massachusetts and agree with him fully in the objective he seeks. I understand he has some further committee amendments to submit, and I suggest we proceed with them, and meanwhile I will prepare language I am sure will meet with his approval.

Mr. WALSH. I suggest that the Senator use the word "innocently," or "unconsciously," or "believing that he was a citizen of the country," some such language.

I now ask that the vote by which the amendment on page 2, line 24, was agreed to, be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. WALSH. I now offer an amendment to follow this amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert on page 3, line 23, to follow section 2 (a), the following:

Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall relieve a bidder or contractor of the obligation to furnish the bonds under the requirements of the act of August 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 793; 40 U. S. C. 270 (a) to (d)): Provided further, That the cost-plus-a-percentage of cost system of contracting shall not be used under the authority granted by this subsection to negotiate contracts; but this proviso shall not be construed to prohibit the use of the cost plus a fixed-fee form of contract when such use is deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Navy: And provided further, That the fixed fee to be paid the contractor as a result of any contract entered into under the authority of this subsection, or any War Department contract entered into in the form of cost plus a fixed fee shall not exceed 7 percent of the estimated cost of the contract (exclusive of the fee as determined by the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, as the case may be), nor more than 7.53 percent of the cost of performing such contract (exclusive of the fee).

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in many respects this is the most important provision in the bill. In existing law there is a provision that no contractor who enters into a contract with the United States Government for the building of a naval vessel can make more than 10-percent profit on the contract. There is also provision in existing law that no contractor entering into a contract with the United States Government to build airplanes can receive more than 12-percent profit.

In the bill we are removing the obligation for competitive bidding in the building of vessels and the building of airplanes, in the expectation and hope that quick, sudden negotiations without advertising for bids may increase the speed with which we can move in building ships and airplanes.

We are providing for private negotiation between the Navy Department and the War Department, so far as planes are concerned, and the Navy Department so far as vessels and planes are concerned, with contractors. The committee felt that under these circumstances the profit to which they are now entitled by law, of 10 percent and 12 percent, should be reduced.

We met with opposition in our effort to do this. We discovered, in the course of our investigation, that originally the profit was 10 percent under contracts with both airplane manufacturers and shipbuilders, but in some mysterious way an amendment crept into the law in 1939, in some Army bill, which gave 12 percent to airplane manufacturers. We could see no reason for a difference in the profit to a shipbuilder and an airplane manufacturer when they are negotiating without competition for a contract, and when they do not need to take the contract if they do not want to. Therefore, we have provided in the bill for a maximum profit of 7 percent. We have also provided that, even if the price is agreed to and the cost is less than the agreed price, the contractor will receive only 7.53 percent, which means that the Government would make more money by paying 7.53 percent if the cost is below the agreed price, than it would by giving the 7-percent price.

In my opinion, this provision is one of the most important and one of the best in the measure. We pointed out to the opposition that, in view of the fact that the Navy would make contracts for a billion dollars on ships, the manufacturers ought to make some sacrifice in respect to the matter of profits; that the contractors as well as the taxpayers and those in the military service of the country should make sacrifices for the good of the country. We were actuated to do this by the fact that it was disclosed to us that in the year 1938 the returns made by shipbuilders and airplane builders showed profits ranging between 14 and 24 percent. I must add that that was upon their entire business and not solely and alone upon Government business. So, if the bill is enacted and this provision is accepted in conference, it will represent an effort made by the Congress for some diminution in the amount of peacetime profits on the part of contractors who are building our ships and our airplanes.

Sooner or later, of course, if we go to war, some such provision of law for limitation of profits must be applied to every contract made by the Army and Navy.

The committee was moved to do this because in the law already there is a limitation on profits, and, therefore, this reduction was made.

I wish to take occasion to commend the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs who cooperated in insisting upon this amendment being placed in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I now ask that the vote by which the amendment on page 2, line 24, was agreed to, be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. WALSH. I now offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 10, after the word "orders", it is proposed to insert "and all Army contracts and orders."

Mr. WALSH. That is put in at the request of the Army, which desires that that particular provision apply to the Army as well as to the Navy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I now ask that the vote by which the amendment on page 12, line 22, was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. WALSH. I send forward another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 12, line 24, after the word "individual", it is proposed to insert the word "naval."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I now ask that the vote by which the amendment on page 8, line 14, was agreed to, be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. WALSH. I offer another amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 9, line 1, after the word "paid", it is proposed to insert the word "only", and on line 2, after the word "employees", insert the words "in the field services of the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Coast Guard."

Mr. WALSH. I wish to make a brief explanation of that amendment for the RECORD. The amendment has the effect of limiting the overtime work of those in the field service of the Navy and the Army. It is not intended that the overtime work should apply to the office staff here in Washington or in the bureaus, because practically all the work they do can be done by others. In other words, there are additional clerks and additional stenographers and additional messengers to be employed.

So we have limited the overtime work to those in the field, that is those in the munitions plants of the Government and in the navy yards, and we have limited it so far as possible to those who are indispensable.

I repeat, the purpose of the committee and the purpose of the administration is to make overtime work as negligible as possible in speeding up and the employment of two and three shifts, to give this work to people who are unemployed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I send to the desk another amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section 14, as follows:

SEC. 14. (a) Notwithstanding the provision of any other law, no military or naval weapon, ship, boat, aircraft, munitions, supplies, or equipment, to which the United States has title, in whole or in part, or which have been contracted for, shall hereafter be transferred, exchanged, sold, or otherwise disposed of in any manner whatsoever unless the Chief of Naval Operations, in the case of naval material, and the Chief of Staff of the Army, in the case of military material, shall first certify that such material is not essential to and cannot be used in the defense of the United States.

(b) The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy as the case may be, are hereby requested and directed to furnish or cause to be furnished to the chairman of each Committee on Naval Affairs of the Congress of the United States a copy of each contract, order, or agreement covering the exchange of deteriorated, unserviceable, obsolescent, or surplus military or naval equipment, munitions, or supplies exchanged for other military or naval equipment, munitions, or supplies, and a copy of each contract, order, or agreement shall be furnished regarding any other disposition of military or naval equipment, munitions, and supplies by which the title passes, either de jure or de facto, from the United States, or by which delivery of material thereunder is deferred, where the original cost of such military or naval equipment, munitions, or supplies exceeded or exceeds $2,000. The copies of each contract, order, or agreement herein referred to shall be transmitted to the respective chairmen of the Committee on Naval Affairs not later than 24 hours after such contract, order, or agreement is made, and the chairman of each committee shall consider such contracts, orders, or agreements confidential unless a majority of the members of his committee shall direct the particular transaction to be made public.

(c) Nothing herein contained shall be construed to repeal or modify sections 3 and 6, title V of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 222; U. S. C., title 18, secs. 33 and 36).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I now ask that the vote by which the amendment on page 15, line 19, was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] made a suggestion a few minutes ago with reference to an amendment which he has now modified and which I think could properly be accepted. I send the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 15, line 20, after the word "by", it is proposed to insert "willful"; and, in line 21, after the word "such", it is proposed to insert "willful."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I now offer another amendment, title 2, in which the Senator from New York is interested particularly. Frankly, I have not had the opportunity to give it the study and attention it deserves. It is an amendment to permit some of the funds appropriated for the Army and Navy to be used for housing facilities for the workmen in the expanded class that may become necessary. I ask that the amendment be accepted and at least taken to conference for further study and consideration.

I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new title II, as follows:

"TITLE II

"SECTION 201. In connection with the national-defense program, the Navy and War Departments and the United States Housing Authority are hereby authorized to cooperate in making necessary housing available for persons engaged in national-defense activities, as hereinafter provided. 'Persons engaged in national-defense activities' (as that term is used in this title) shall include (i) enlisted men with families, who are in the naval and military service (excluding officers) and employees of the Navy and War Departments who are assigned to duty at naval or military reservations, posts, or bases, and (ii) workers with families, who are engaged or to be engaged in industries connected with and essential to the national-defense program. No project shall be developed or assisted for the purposes of this title except with the approval of the President and upon a determination by him that there is an acute shortage of housing in the locality involved which impedes the national-defense program.

"SEC. 202. (a) Projects may be initiated hereunder by the Navy or War Department to provide dwellings on or near naval or military reservations, posts, or bases for rental to the enlisted men and employees of the Navy and War Departments described in section 201. Such projects shall be developed by the Navy or War Department or by the Authority, whichever the President determines is better suited to the fulfillment of the purposes of this title with respect to any particular project. If the development of such project is to be undertaken by the Navy or War Department, the Authority is authorized to aid the development of the project by furnishing technical assistance and by transferring to such Department the funds necessary for the development of the project. Any project developed for the purpose of this section shall be leased to the Navy or War Department by the Authority (which shall have title to such project until repayment of the cost thereof to the Authority as prescribed in such lease) upon such terms as shall be prescribed in the lease, which may be the same terms as are authorized by the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended, with respect to leases to public-housing agencies. All the provisions of said act which apply to the development of projects by the Authority shall (insofar as applicable and not inconsistent herewith) apply to the development of projects by the Navy or War Department. Notwithstanding other provisions of this or any other law, the Department leasing a project shall have the same jurisdiction over such project as it has over the reservation, post, or base in connection with which the project is developed.

"(b) The Navy or War Department, in connection with any project developed or leased by it, and the Authority, in connection with any project developed or assisted by it, for the purposes of this title, may acquire real or personal property or any interest therein by purchase, eminent domain, gift, lease, or otherwise. The provisions of section 355 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to the acquisition of any real property by the Navy or War Department or by the Authority for the purposes of this title or to the project developed thereon, and the provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 40, sec. 303b), shall not apply to any lease of any project developed for the purposes of this title or of any dwelling therein. Condemnation proceedings instituted by the Authority shall be in its own name and the practice and procedure governing such proceedings by the United States shall be followed, and the Authority shall likewise be entitled to proceed in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 26, 1931 (46 Stat. 1421), and an act of Congress approved March 1, 1929 (45 Stat. 1415). If the Authority acquires land in connection with a project to be assisted for the purposes of this title, it may convey such land to the public-housing agency involved for a consideration equal to the cost of the land to the Authority. The Navy and War Departments and the Authority may negotiate, contract, and fix such fees as they determine are reasonable for the services of architects, engineers, surveyors, appraisers, title examiners, and real-estate negotiators in connection with specific projects developed by them under this title. The Secretaries of Navy and War are hereby authorized to make available to the Authority any land that is needed for a project to be developed by the Authority and leased to the Navy or War Department and to execute such leases, agreements, and other instruments with the Authority as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this title.

"SEC. 203. In any localities where the President determines that there is an acute shortage of housing which impedes the national-defense program and that the necessary housing would not otherwise be provided when needed for persons engaged in national-defense activities, the Authority may undertake the development and administration of projects to assure the availability of dwellings in such localities for such persons and their families, or the Authority may extend financial assistance to public-housing agencies for the development and administration of such projects. Such financial assistance to public-housing agencies shall be extended (except as otherwise provided herein and not inconsistent herewith) under the provisions of, and in the same manner and forms as provided in, title I of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended, with respect to other housing projects.

"SEC. 204. Any contract made for financial assistance under the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended, may be revised so as to provide that the project involved will be assisted for any of the purposes of this title. The Navy or War Department or the Authority, in the administration of any project developed for the purposes of this title, shall fix rentals for persons engaged in national-defense activities and their families which will be within their financial reach, and the Authority, in any contract for financial assistance or any lease of such a project, shall require the fixing of such rentals. Projects developed by the Navy or War Department, or developed or assisted by the Authority, for the purposes of this title shall not be subject to the elimination requirements of sections 10 (a) and 11 (a) of said act, or to any provisions of section 9 of said act which would require any part of the development cost thereof to be met in any manner other than from funds loaned or furnished by the Authority. Funds expended for the purposes of this title shall be excluded in determining, for the purposes of section 21 (d) of said act, the amounts expended within each State. Except as otherwise provided herein or as may be inconsistent herewith, all the provisions of title I of said act shall apply to this title. During the period when the President determines that in any locality there is an acute need for housing to assure the availability of dwellings for persons engaged in national-defense activities, dwellings in a project developed or assisted in said locality which are devoted to the purposes of providing housing for persons engaged in national-defense activities shall not be subject to sections 2 (1) and 2 (2) of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended, and during such period such projects shall be deemed projects of a low-rent character for the purposes of any of the applicable provisions in title I of said act.

"SEC. 205. The Authority may use for the purposes of this title any of the funds or authorizations heretofore or hereafter made available to it. The provisions of title I of this act shall not apply to this title."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in order to have the RECORD clear, I will say that the amendment just agreed to has never been submitted to the committee. It is offered on my own responsibility, in behalf of other Senators, including the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who is interested. The amendment is offered for consideration in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think that completes the amendments. I wish to say only a word in addition.

The enactment of this legislation removes every barrier, every impediment the human mind can conceive of, so that our Navy and Army may proceed at once with speed and more speed to build up our national defense. The work of our committee has been directed toward what many Senators feel should be the general policy of Congress, namely, toward the Congress obtaining information in regard to important contracts and expenditures. All through the bill, thanks to the foresight and judgment of the distinguished members of our committee, there are provisions for reports to the Congress every 3 months on the agreement contracts, contracts not in competition, and other provisions seeking to keep the Congress informed as to the activities of the Navy.

I wish to take this occasion to compliment the distinguished members of the committee for the attention they have given this bill and for the long hours they have spent in trying to perfect a bill which would speed up the production of our defenses, and at the same time keep the Congress fully informed as to the speed with which we are going, and as to the method and manner in which the operations permitted under the bill are carried out.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I wish to yield my small meed of praise to the chairman of the committee. He has been industrious, able, and painstaking for many, many weeks. We who have sat by his side and listened to his exposition of the various bills which have been before us know how to prize his assiduity. I think he deserves at the hands of the members of the committee this little statement of praise for the manner in which he has fulfilled his duties. He has conducted them in a judicial fashion. He has conducted them in such fashion that no one could question his fairness, his boldness, and his desire to see that the country is protected by these bills.

The bills were difficult measures which required earnest study. He has given to them everything that was in him, and when I say that I say that he has given to them more than any one of the rest of us would have given. I compliment him, sir, upon the way in which he has presided over the Naval Affairs Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee for a moment. My attention has been called to the amendment to be added as section 14 of the bill, providing that notwithstanding the provision of any other law, no military or naval weapon shall hereafter be transferred, exchanged, sold, or otherwise disposed of in any manner whatsoever, unless the Chief of Naval Operations, in the case of naval material, or the Chief of Staff of the Army, in the case of military material, shall first certify that such material is not essential, and so forth.

Then it goes on to say that the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, is requested and directed to furnish or cause to be furnished to the chairman of each committee on Naval Affairs of the Congress of the United States a copy of each contract, order, and so forth.

Am I to understand from that provision that the Committee on Military Affairs is entirely left out, and that even with reference to material of the War Department, a report is to be made to the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee? Will the Senator explain?

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator that it was the intention of the committee that it be informed as to the disposition of surplus property. There is now a law which permits the Navy Department to transfer to the Army any surplus property it may have. The reason for the amendment is to have the Chief of Naval Operations certify that the material is not essential to the national defense. We do not say in what manner he shall certify. He may do so privately. When this provision was originally drawn, it was intended to have him certify, and have no action taken until Congress acted. The provision was greatly modified.

The reason why the Army is brought into the matter is because the Army also disposes of surplus property. I do not think the amendment calls for more than the Navy Department to inform the chairman of the Senate and House Naval Affairs Committees about naval property. I certainly have no intention, and no one else has any intention, to have the Army report to the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committees.

Mr. HILL. I have no objection to the Naval Affairs Committee receiving all the information it may desire, but as I read the language of the amendment, it seems to me that as the amendment is now drafted the War Department is required to make a report to the Naval Affairs Committees of the Congress. I wondered if that was the intention of the chairman or the members of the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No; only those things of which the Navy Department has jurisdiction.

Mr. WALSH. Let me read the section. Let me say that the section was one of the last drawn. In fact, it is not completed. It was submitted to me since the debate began; but the intention and purpose of it I know and the committee knew:

The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, are hereby requested and directed to furnish or cause to be furnished to the chairman of each Committee on Naval Affairs of the Congress of the United States a copy of each contract, order, or agreement covering the exchange of deteriorated, unserviceable, obsolescent, or surplus military or naval equipment, munitions, or supplies exchanged for other military or naval equipment, munitions, or supplies; and a copy of each contract, order, or agreement shall be furnished regarding any other disposition of military or naval equipment, munitions, and supplies by which the title passes either de jure or de facto from the United States, or by which delivery of material thereunder is deferred, where the original cost of such military or naval equipment, munitions, or supplies exceeded or exceeds $2,000. The copies of each contract, order, or agreement herein referred to shall be transmitted to the respective chairmen of the Committees on Naval Affairs not later than 24 hours after such contract, order, or agreement is made; and the chairman of each committee shall consider such contracts, orders, or agreements confidential unless a majority of the members of his committee shall direct the particular transaction to be made public.

I think—am I correct about this, Senators?—I think the law permitting the transfer of surplus to the Army applies only to the Navy. I do not think the law permits the Navy to take surplus property from the Army. Am I correct about that?

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator ask that question again?

Mr. WALSH. The general law permits or requires the transfer of surplus property from the Navy to the Army; but I do not think the law requires the Army to transfer any surplus property to the Navy.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As I understand the proposition, the reason why this provision was included is that certain property had been transferred from the Navy to the Army.

Mr. WALSH. That is correct.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And the Army proceeded to transfer it to somebody else, which the Naval Affairs Committee or the Senate thinks was not justified, which is the reason for this provision. I do not think there should be any suggestion on the part of anybody that the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate should be permitted to interfere in the affairs of the War Department; but as far as the transfer of naval property is concerned I think they ought to be able to follow it through. It seems to me that this thing might be corrected by the transfer of words in the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. In the case of Army property, the chairmen of the House and Senate Committees on Military Affairs should be given the information.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. That is perfectly proper.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think that meets the opinion of everyone.

Mr. WALSH. I want to repeat that the reason for action is that the law does not permit the Navy Department to dispose of any surplus. It requires the Navy to give it to the Army, and the Army disposes of it, and that is evidently what has led us to restrict the reform; but, if I may dictate an amendment now, I suggest that the words in section 14 (b), namely, "the chairman of each Committee on Naval Affairs of the Congress of the United States," be stricken out, and that the following words be inserted: "the respective chairmen of the Committees on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think the Committee on Naval Affairs, which has shown so much initiative in this matter, ought to be permitted to follow its own material even after it has been transferred to the War Department. I think when naval matériel has been transferred to the War Department the Committee on Naval Affairs ought to be notified whenever that matériel is declared obsolete and transferred out of the War Department.

Mr. WALSH. I am in accord with that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think both committees ought to be notified. That is my opinion about the matter.

Mr. WALSH. Let me say to the distinguished Senator, who is such an able member of the Committee on Military Affairs, that all through this bill we have sought to assist the Army, and when it came to labor legislation, where there are some differences between the Army bill and our bill, we provided that the President could adjust those differences.

It is rather regrettable that there were two separate bodies dealing with the labor problems, one in the arsenals of the country and another in the navy yards of the country.

Mr. HILL. Why not let these reports to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy go to both Military Affairs Committee and Naval Affairs Committee?

Mr. WALSH. There is no objection whatever to that.

Has the amendment been transcribed, or may it be agreed that an amendment shall be prepared similar to what I have proposed?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to suggest that since the Secretary of the Treasury apparently is the dictator of national defense, any reports from him might go to the two committees also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is reconsidered and the amendment to it is agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, is agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Let us have an understanding that in the case of all surplus or other matériel which is transferred which belonged to the Army originally, and which the Army is disposing of, the chairmen of the House and Senate Committees on Military Affairs may be informed.

Mr. HILL. Both Military and Naval Affairs Committees of both Houses of Congress.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. We have been talking about section 14 (b). I think the Senate should understand what section 14 (a) does. I had understood that this provision was not to be put in the bill, and that subsection (b) was to take its place, though we did have a vote in the committee adopting this particular provision, and I then voted against it.

I will read section 14 (a):

Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, no military or naval weapon, ship, boat, aircraft, munitions, supplies, or equipment to which the United States has title in whole or in part, or which have been contracted for, shall hereafter be transferred, exchanged, sold, or otherwise disposed of in any manner whatsoever unless the Chief of Naval Operations in the case of naval material, and the Chief of Staff of the Army in the case of military material, shall first certify that such material is not essential to and cannot be used in the defense of the United States.

I think the Senate should realize that if that provision is adopted, there is an end to supplying the Allies with any planes by deferring the contract deliveries, as we have been doing.

Mr. WALSH. The section which the Senator has read asks for nothing more or less than that the Chief of Naval Operations and the Chief of Staff of the Army shall certify that the material is not needed; that is all.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no; they certify that it is not essential, and cannot be used in the defense of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; that is required. What is the objection to that?

Mr. HALE. Under that provision, not a single plane could be transferred to the Allies.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is all right.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator object to having retained in the American Navy and Army planes that the Chief of Naval Operations says we need for our defense?

Mr. HALE. I think it is more important at the present time to see that we help out the British in their fight by supplying them with planes and matériel than anything else that we can do.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has forgotten to read subsection (c). Does the Senator know what subsection (c) is?

Mr. HALE. I do.

Mr. WALSH. What is it?

Mr. HALE. Subsection (c) says:

Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal or modify section 3 of title B of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 222, U. S. C. title 18, secs. 33 and 36).

Mr. WALSH. What is that law? Does the Senator know what that law is? That is the law now on the statute books which forbids everything that is in subsection (a). All we have added by subsection (a) is that there must be a certification.

Subsection (c) is the law now, forbidding the arming of the vessels, and the law which has been invoked now to prevent the transfer of planes.

Mr. HALE. It does not apply to airplanes, it applies to ships only.

Mr. WALSH. That is true.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senate should know what it is doing when it enacts this legislation. If it is the will of the Senate, very well.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the law which we enacted a few days ago it seems that the law already permitted the President or the Secretary of War to transfer back certain airplanes, engines and motor vehicles, and then we amended the law, or passed another law a few days ago, authorizing the transfer of other articles, if they are returned, receiving credit for them on new products when delivered. Does this provision conflict, inasmuch as it leaves it to the Chief of Staff and the Chief of Naval Operations of the Army and Navy, respectively, with those provisions of law which we passed a few days ago, and the law under which the President had returned these articles to be credited to the United States against the day when they would receive new ones? Is there any conflict between the provisions of this subsection and the law now on the statute books with respect to articles which have been in controversy here?

Mr. WALSH. It is my opinion that there is no change in the law now which permits modification and change and extension of time as to materials being contracted for. Do I answer the Senator's question?

Mr. BARKLEY. In part. If I understand the Senator, it does not interfere with the present authority to return the properties and get credit for them on new articles of the same type, or others which might be desired by the Government. Is that true?

Mr. WALSH. I am sorry, but I was distracted and did not hear the Senator's question.

Mr. BARKLEY. The language is pretty definite, and I am wondering whether it repeals the law under which the President had the authority to act as he did with reference to planes, and the amendment we put into the bill about a week or 10 days ago authorizing him to do the same thing with other property. It authorizes the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy—and I believe probably the President—to return surplus or used articles to the factories and get credit for them, and, of course, leave the factories to do as they please with them. Whether this language is broad enough to interfere with what we have already authorized, even within the last week, I do not know.

Mr. WALSH. In my opinion, it does not have such an effect. Furthermore, the bill is going to conference, and it will have the careful scrutiny of the House conferees, as well as my own, when each section of the bill is being taken up for consideration. In my opinion, the amendment simply applies a restriction or requirement for the head of the military organization to say, "These are not needed for our defense."

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, this is not limited to property on hand. It is broad enough to cover property and articles contracted for. The Senator will recall that under the act of 1936, I believe it was, the President made it possible for certain planes, engines, and motor vehicles to be returned to the factories and the United States to receive credit. Then we passed another law permitting the same thing regarding other properties outside of motors and airplanes and their equipment.

Mr. WALSH. But there was a disposition and an intention to put in a proviso that the surplus property should be certified by the chiefs of the bureaus, that the property was not needed for national defense.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs I know has studied this language and is far more able to construe it or interpret its meaning than I am, but I cannot help feeling that the language would go further than to require certification either by the Chief of Staff or the Chief of Naval Operations, because it uses the words—

That such material is not essential to—

Listen to this—and cannot be used for the defense of the United States.

Nearly anything could be used, as I construe it. That may be too literal a construction, but nearly anything might be used. Could one conceive of anything that could not be used? There might be an old musket that was very old, that was out of date, which might be classified not only as obsolete, but even as obsolescent. Yet would the Chief of Staff make certification to the fact that it could not be used? It would almost have to be so rusty or so broken or so worn that it could not be fired before any man could honestly certify that it could not be used.

Mr. WALSH. There is property now which from time to time is declared surplus. Does the Senator object to the requirement that that property be certified?

Mr. HILL. No; I think that is all right. In other words, what the Senator wishes to do is to put the direct responsibility on the highest officers in both the Army and the Navy, the Chief of Naval Operations and the Chief of Staff, to certify that the matériel is not essential to the national defense, but when we say "cannot be used," it seems to me we close the door entirely. That would apply to practically anything.

Mr. WALSH. I think the distinguished Senator has called attention to language which might well be stricken out as requiring too exacting a judgment.

I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment in section 14 (a) was agreed to be reconsidered, and that the words "and cannot be used in" be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. When this amendment was first drafted, after the language the Senator from Alabama has just read there appeared the words "without the approval of Congress", and they were stricken from the amendment. In other words, it went so far as to require the consent of Congress, and that was stricken out, and I approved of it being stricken out, because I was content with the present law as it stands.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think the Senator's suggestion that the language "and cannot be used in" be stricken out, leaving it so that they will certify that it is not essential, provides a much more elastic term, and certainly improves the language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I give my word to both the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Alabama that in the scrutiny of this amendment in conference I shall give attention to the suggestion made by them, and I have no desire or purpose to go beyond the present law, but to have some certificate filed as to whether the property is surplus or not.

Mr. HILL. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to expedite national defense, and for other purposes."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. WALSH, Mr. TYDINGS, and Mr. HALE conferees on the part of the Senate.

ALIEN REGISTRATION BILL OF 1940—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CONNALLY submitted a conference report on House bill 5138, the alien registration bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REVENUE BILL OF 1940—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HARRISON submitted a conference report on House bill 10039, the tax bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar to which there is no objection, beginning with Calendar No. 1800, which will mean beginning with measures which have been reported since the last call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think we should have a quorum called so that other Senators may come in. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Lodge	Russell
Andrews	Ellender	Lucas	Schwartz
Ashurst	George	Lundeen	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Gerry	McCarran	Sheppard
Bankhead	Gillette	McKellar	Shipstead
Barkley	Green	McNary	Slattery
Bilbo	Guffey	Maloney	Smith
Bone	Hale	Mead	Taft
Bridges	Harrison	Miller	Thomas, Idaho
Brown	Hatch	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Byrd	Hayden	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Byrnes	Herring	Neely	Townsend
Capper	Hill	Norris	Truman
Caraway	Holman	Nye	Tydings
Chandler	Holt	O'Mahoney	Vandenberg

Clark, Idaho	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	Wagner
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman	Walsh
Danaher	King	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Davis	La Follette	Reed	White
Donahey	Lee	Reynolds	Wiley

Mr. WILEY. I announce that the following Senators are absent, in attendance upon the funeral of the late Senator from Vermont, Mr. GIBSON: The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, before the first bill on the calendar is called, may I ask at which bill on the calendar it is proposed to begin?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was agreed that the call of the calendar would begin at Calendar No. 1800.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I ask that the call begin with Calendar No. 1790.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to have the call of the calendar begin with Calendar No. 1790. That is a long way back.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will proceed to call the calendar, beginning with Calendar No. 1790.

WORK BETWEEN YUMA PROJECT AND BOULDER DAM

The bill (H. R. 7116) to authorize defraying cost of necessary work between the Yuma project and Boulder Dam, was announced as first in order.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from California the cost, and who pays the cost? Is it an obligation on the Treasury of the United States; and if so, why?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No; the district pays the cost.

This bill amends the act authorizing expenditure of Federal funds for protection of the Yuma reclamation project, river front, and levees. It authorizes expenditure of such funds for the protection of communities along the Colorado River from Yuma to Boulder Dam. It was introduced at the request of the Palo Verde irrigation district because one of the results of the control of the Colorado River by the construction of Boulder and Parker Dams has been temporarily at least, to occasion increased meandering of the river, due tc the fact that the water is comparatively clear and needs a flatter grade for its bed than the muddy water which formerly flowed down the channel. Acute instances of this tendency have occurred, which has jeopardized the Palo Verde Valley. The Bureau of Reclamation is in accord with the principle that the United States should be in a position to do such emergency work as from time to time may be required for the protection of the river-front communities such as Palo Verde Valley.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no objection, if the Senator from California states the obligation is to be paid by the District rather than out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I think so.

Mr. KING. As I understand the Senator his position is that it is not an obligation to be met by the Government?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7116) to authorize defraying the cost of necessary work between the Yuma project and Boulder Dam was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3426) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act as amended and as re-enacted by the Agricultural Marketing Act 1937, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

SETTLEMENT OF MONEY ACCOUNTS OF THE NATIONAL GUARD

The bill (S. 3497) to require the issuance by the General Accounting Office of a quarterly certificate of settlement of money accounts to United States property and disbursing officers of the National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a quarterly certificate of settlement of money accounts be issued by the General Accounting Office to United States property and disbursing officers of the National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia within a period not to exceed 3 years from the date of expiration of the quarter to which such certificate of settlement pertains, such certificate of settlement to be final and conclusive for such quarter, no further charges or debts to be raised after its issuance: Provided, That all unsettled, suspended, or disallowed items heretofore raised in the disbursing accounts of United States property and disbursing officers of the National Guard of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia at a date more than 3 years subsequent to the date of expiration of the quarterly accounts to which they pertain, be passed for credit by the General Accounting Office.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 4097) to authorize the use of certain facilities of national parks and national monuments for school purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, may we have an explanation? If not, I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

DEFINITION OF AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY

The bill (S. 3879) to amend section 15 (g) of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended, relating to the definition of agricultural commodity was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask for an explanation.

Mr. ELLENDER. The purpose of this bill is further to define "agricultural commodity" by adding to the present law the word "moss." Under the law as it is now on the statute books agricultural commodities are described as follows:

As used in this act, the term "agricultural commodity" includes, in addition to other agricultural commodities, crude gum (oleoresin) from a living tree, and the following products as processed by the original producer of the crude gum (oleoresin) from which derived; gum spirits of turpentine and gum resin, as defined in the Naval Stores Act approved March 3, 1923.

Mr. HATCH. What is the effect of adding this language? What is the purpose of it?

Mr. ELLENDER. The purpose of it is to permit the producers of Spanish moss to borrow from the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3879) to amend section 15 (g) of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended, relating to the definition of "agricultural commodity," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 15 (g) of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended, relating to the definition of the term "agricultural commodity," is amended by inserting before the words "crude gum" where they first appear in such subsection the figure "(1)", and by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "(2) moss, including moss which has been through the first cleaning (ginning) process."

APPROPRIATION FOR CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY POSTS

The bill (S. 3982) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. This measure covers authorization for a limited number of urgent construction projects at stations other than air corps which are immediately essential for the housing of the Army and for manufacturing arsenals and storage. The construction is of a permanent nature. Immediate authorization is required if the Army is to conduct a progressive building program. If this authorization is enacted, it will permit estimates to be submitted in appropriations for the fiscal year 1942.

In the Army appropriations for the fiscal year 1941, funds were included for the construction of an air base in the vicinity of Anchorage, Alaska. This base when established must be provided with a suitable ground garrison for its protection. It is estimated that this ground force will number approximately 3,000 officers and men comprising the necessary elements of all arms to protect the base against attack if necessary; to assist in the protection of naval bases in Aleutian Islands or on the Alaskan mainland.

Among the buildings to be constructed are barracks for enlisted men, quarters for officers, nurses, and enlisted men, hospital, central heating plant, maintenance shop, quartermaster warehouse and commissary quartermaster, telephone construction, railroad spur, bakery, laundry, garage, gun and motor sheds, motor repair shop, and gas and oil storage.

At Schofield Barracks the construction covers telephone building, quarters for noncommissioned officers, and an addition to the transformer. At Fort Shafter the construction covers quarters for noncommissioned officers. At Fort Clayton it covers quarters for officers and noncommissioned officers, stables, sheds, and garages and target range. At Corozal it covers quarters for officers and noncommissioned officers and barracks for enlisted men, office building, fire and guard house, and dispensary. The miscellaneous stations in Panama construction provide for civilian quarters. In Puerto Rico, at Borinquen Field, construction is provided for quarters for officers, noncommissioned officers, motor transport, repair shop, warehouses and magazines; and at the Puerto Rican general depot provision is made for a radio transmitter building. At Aberdeen Proving Ground provision is made for an ordnance school shop. At the Atlanta general depot provision is made for quarters for officers, noncommissioned officers, garage, and repair shops, maintenance shop, storehouse, gas and oil storage, and a locomotive building section for reserve and warehouses. At Fort Belvoir, Va., provision is made for a mirror plant. At Fort Benning, Ga., provision is made for an office and classroom for the tank school, warehouse and workship for the tank school, an addition to the hospital, quarters for nurses, barracks for the medical detachment, and a shop building. At Edgewood Arsenal, Md., provision is made for a wheterlite plant, a sulfur mono-chloride plant, and for two additional chemical plants.

Mr. President, I wish to make a statement concerning the item for Edgewood Arsenal, Md., because it brings into use a new word, applied to a new chemical. I wish merely to refer to it. Provision is made there for a whetlerite plant. That word does not appear in the dictionary. Whetlerite is the process whereby activated charcoal is coated with copper and other allied products in order to give it more absorbent capacity in the gas-mask canister.

At Fort Sam Houston, provision is made for an addition to the hospital, and for an office building. At Fort Knox, Ky., provision is made for an automobile shop and an artillery repair building. At Fort Lewis provision is made for an addition to the hospital and for nurses' quarters. At Fort Meyer, Va., provision is made for magazines and for a radio receiving station. At Fort Monroe, Va., provision is made for increasing the water supply. At Philadelphia Quartermaster Depot, Pa., provision is made for a warehouse. At Picatinny Arsenal, N. J., provision is made for magazines. At West Point provision is made for a laundry. At Fort Sill provision is made for an ordnance repair shop. At Fort Pickens provision is made for an ordnance repair shop. At Fort McPherson provision is made for an ordnance building. At Fort Story, Va., provision is made for a water tower.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with amendments, on page 2, in the schedule for Hawaii, Schofield Barracks, to strike out "$780,000" and insert "$823,200"; in the schedule for continental United States, to strike out "Frankford Arsenal, Pa.—$175,000"; in the item for Fort Benning, Ga., to strike out "$1,280,500" and insert "$1,320,500"; in the item for Fort Knox, Ky., to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$153,124"; and in the item for Picatinny Arsenal, to strike out "$218,524" and insert "$23,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $15,000,000 to be expended for the construction, rehabilitation, and installation at military posts of such buildings and utilities and appurtenances thereto as may be necessary, as follows:

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

LOANS FOR DEVELOPMENT OF STRATEGIC AND CRITICAL MINERALS

The bill (S. 4008) to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans for the development of deposits of strategic and critical minerals and other metallic and nonmetallic minerals, and to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make more adequate loans for mineral developmental purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I should like to hear an eloquent explanation of this bill from the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, this bill was reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency by the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER]. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] on behalf of himself and 10 other Senators.

At this juncture I defer to the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], who reported the bill from the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Arkansas if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation now has this power?

Mr. MILLER. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation does not have authority to make loans upon strategic and critical materials, except in accordance with the bill which we enacted 3 or 4 days ago. Under existing law the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is entitled to make a loan up to $20,000 on gold, silver, tin, and some other minerals.

Mr. HATCH. That is the point. I happen to come from a mining State, and I wish to know why a limitation is put on the amount to be loaned.

Mr. MILLER. I can answer that question very easily. The present law limits loans on tin, silver, and gold to $20,000. That is the reason why the limitation is made.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 71) to repeal the act entitled "An act relating to Philippine currency reserves on deposit in the United States" was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CLEARING OF TITLE TO CERTAIN REAL ESTATE IN MICHIGAN

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 517) to clear title to certain real estate was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES E. MOLSTER

The bill (S. 3329) for the relief of Charles E. Molster, former disbursing clerk for the Department of Commerce and the National Recovery Administration; J. L. Summers, deceased, former chief disbursing clerk, Division of Disbursement, Treasury Department; and Guy F. Allen, chief disbursing officer, Division of Disbursement, Treasury Department, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Calendar No. 1876, House bill 8414, is an identical bill. Is there objection to the substitution of the House bill for the Senate bill, and the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 8414) for the relief of Charles E. Molster, former disbursing clerk for the Department of Commerce and for National Recovery Administration was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 3329 is indefinitely postponed.

ANTHONY BORSELLINO

The bill (H. R. 6845) for the relief of Anthony Borsellino was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES H. HEARON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3710) for the relief of James H. Hearon, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to James H. Hearon the sum of $322.51 in full settlement of all claims arising out of his civilian hospital and medical treatment from August 27 to October 1, 1938, which treatment resulted from a disability incurred while Hearon was in an active-duty status with headquarters, One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Cavalry Brigade, San Antonio, Tex.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS PUCCINELLI BAIL BOND CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3962) for the relief of the Louis Puccinelli Bail Bond Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the words "the sum of" to strike out "$2,500. Such sum represents reimbursement for the loss", and to insert in lieu thereof "$2,000 in full settlement of all claims against the United States"; and in line 10, after the words "United States of" to strike out "a like amount under", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Louis Puccinelli Bail Bond Co., San Francisco, Calif., the sum of $2,000, in full settlement of all claims against the United States sustained by such bonding company on account of the forfeiture to the United States of a bail bond executed by the Inland Bonding Co. and conditioned upon the delivery in court of one John Campagna, alias Giovanni Catalano. By reason of the nonappearance of the said John Campagna, alias Giovanni Catalano, such bail bond was declared forfeited in the southern division of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California on August 24, 1938. The amount of such bond was paid out of collateral deposited by the Puccinelli Bonding Co. Subsequently, through the efforts and at the considerable expense of the Puccinelli Bonding Co., the said John Campagna, alias Giovanni Catalano, was apprehended on October 11, 1939.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An explanation is requested.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, this is one of the infernal bail-bond bills. It has the approval of the Attorney General, and has passed the House with the amendment which the Attorney General suggested.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, what is the number?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Calendar 1815, Senate bill 3962.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I withdraw the request for an explanation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. COON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3866) for the relief of George W. Coon, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, at the beginning of line 4, to insert "alleged to have been", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions and limitations of sections 15 to 20, both inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended and supplemented, are hereby waived in the case of George W. Coon, of Stidham, Okla.; and the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is authorized and directed to consider and act upon any claim filed with the Commission, within 1 year after the date of enactment of this act, by the said George W. Coon for compensation or other benefits under the provisions of such act of September 7, 1916, as amended and supplemented, for disability due to injuries alleged to have been sustained by him on or about July 25, 1938, in the performance of his duties as an employee of the Works Progress Administration.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHANDLER V. JENSEN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3143), for the relief of Chandler V. Jensen, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after "15", to strike out "and" and to insert "to"; and in line 7, after "Chandler", to strike out "J.", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 15 to 20 inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in favor of Chandler V. Jensen, an employee of the United States Forest Service, Missoula, Mont., and the United States Compensation Commission is authorized and directed to consider and act upon any claim filed with the Commission, within 1 year after the date of the enactment of this act by said Chandler V. Jensen for compensation under the provisions of such act of September 7, 1916, as amended and supplemented, for compensation for disabilities due to an injury alleged to have been received by him on August 10, 1936, in the performance of his duties as forest ranger on the Deerlodge National Forest, Butte, Mont.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAYMOND C. KNIGHT

The bill (H. R. 5930) for the relief of Raymond C. Knight was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 1857) for the relief of Nell Mullen, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ALBERT L. BARNHOLTZ

The bill (H. R. 3774) for the relief of Albert L. Barnholtz, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOLINROSS CHEMICAL CO., INC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8868) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Bolinross Chemical Co., Inc., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the words "from the" to strike out "alleged unlawful"; and on page 2, line 3, after the word "on" to insert "or about", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Bolinross Chemical Company, Inc., of Newark, N. J., for damages or losses resulting from the raid on its chemical plant at 12–22 Orange Street, Newark, N. J., including the alleged destruction of its machinery, equipment, raw materials, and finished products, and the loss of its business, by prohibition agents of the United States, on or about February 20, 1929.

SEC. 2. Suit upon such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations, and proceedings for the determination of such claim, appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgment thereon shall be in the same manner as in the cases over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether the bill has the approval of the department of the Government that would have to do with the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks for information in regard to the bill.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MAT HENSLEY, ARNOLD BLANTON, LILLIE PRICE, CLYDE THORPE, AND D. L. MASON

The bill (H. R. 5211) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Mat Hensley, Arnold Blanton, Lillie Price, Clyde Thorpe, and D. L. Mason was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATHAN A. BUCK

The bill (H. R. 7959) for the relief of Nathan A. Buck was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HANNAH S. BRAY, JANE BICKERS, AND FRANCIS BICKERS

The bill (H. R. 7861) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Hannah S. Bray, Jane Bickers, and Francis Bickers was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Information is requested.

Mr. BROWN. This bill involves an accident in the State of Virginia near Charlottesville. It is about as serious a case as I have seen come before the Claims Committee. A Government C. C. C. truck struck a car containing some three or four persons, knocked them some 90 feet off the highway, and very seriously injured all the occupants of the car.

The War Department recommends the passage of the bill and concedes full liability on the part of the Government. The damages, in my judgment, which were fixed by the House of Representatives were very moderate in amount. I had charge of the bill, and I would have been willing to allow much larger damages than the House did, but I felt, under the circumstances, it would be best to let the House bill be passed.

Mr. KING. I do not wish to disagree with the Senator except that the War Department makes no recommendation.

Mr. BROWN. I differ with the Senator. The War Department recommended, instead of referring the matter to the Court of Claims, which was provided by the original bill, that it be amended so that Congress itself would fix the damages, because there was no question about the liability of the Government.

Mr. KING. I may be in error; I thought there was a negative recommendation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Hannah S. Bray, Jane Bickers, and Frances Bickers."

GREENLEE COUNTY BOARD OF SUPERVISORS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2997) for the relief of the Greenlee County Board of Supervisors, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, at the beginning of line 7, to strike out

"$2,470.59" and insert "$1,700", and at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Greenlee County Board of Supervisors at Clifton, Ariz., the sum of $1,700 in full satisfaction of the claim of said board of supervisors against the United States arising out of damage to the Greenlee County fair grounds at Duncan, Ariz., caused by employees of the Soil Conservation Service between July 23, 1934, and March 25, 1939: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PHILIPPINE CURRENCY RESERVES ON DEPOSIT IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 1810, Senate bill 71.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 71) to repeal the act entitled "An act relating to Philippine currency reserves on deposit in the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. I understood that bill was passed.

Mr. DANAHER. No, there was objection; but the Senator who voiced objection has now withdrawn it and has authorized me so to state.

Mr. KING. I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. DANAHER. I will be happy to state what I know of it. It is a bill which was introduced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS]. I was on the subcommittee and rather extensive consideration was given to the bill.

In 1934 when the gold bill was passed the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands had on deposit in some 51 banks the sum of $23,000,000. Those deposits were all out at interest; they were not gold deposits. At the same time citizens of the United States had on deposit about $40,000,000,000 in the same kind of banks, and somehow or other at some time or other in the dim, dark, distant past before I came here the Philippine Islands got through a bill that would authorize the Congress of the United States to appropriate $23,000,000 to the Philippine Islands in payment in terms of gold of their claim because of their alleged deposits. Since the time the bill of authorization was first passed on the $23,000,000 interest has accrued until today it approximates in the neighborhood of $54,000,000. The bill authorizing the payment to the Philippine Islands in the sum of $54,000,000 was passed about 4 or 5 years ago, but no appropriation has ever been made, and the bill never should have passed in the first place.

Now the Senator from Colorado has introduced this bill. It was acted on unanimously by the subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee and was reported unanimously by the Banking and Currency Committee. The bill reaches the calendar in that way. That is the explanation. It will repeal the original authorization.

Mr. KING. Does this bill grow out of the fact that we increased the value of gold from $20 to $35 an ounce?

Mr. DANAHER. That was the basis for the original act, but this bill does not grow out of it. This bill would repeal the original authorization.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act relating to Philippine currency reserves on deposit in the United States" approved June 19, 1934, is hereby repealed.

STATUS OF CERTAIN NATIVES AND INHABITANTS OF VIRGIN ISLANDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3582) relating to the status of certain natives and inhabitants of the Virgin Islands, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs with amendments, in section 1, page 2, line 4, after the word "on", to strike out "July" and insert "January"; in section 2, line 8, after "Sec.", to strike out "204b" and insert "204a"; in line 9, after the word "operative", to insert "as to natives residing in any foreign country on the effective date of this act"; and in line 10, after the numeral "2", to insert "(8 U. S. C., sec. 204b)", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., Subdivision (e) is hereby added to section 1 of the act entitled "An act to confer United States citizenship upon certain inhabitants of the Virgin Islands and to extend the naturalization laws thereto," approved February 25, 1927 (44 Stat. 1234; 8 U. S. C., sec. 5b), as amended, to read as follows:

"(e) All natives of the Virgin Islands of the United States who on the effective date of this subdivision (e) are residing in the continental United States or any Territory or insular possession of the United States and who are not citizens or subjects of any foreign country, regardless of their place of residence on January 17, 1917."

SEC. 2. Section 1 of an act entitled "An act relating to the immigration and naturalization of certain natives of the Virgin Islands," approved June 28, 1932 (47 Stat. 336; 8 U. S. C., sec. 204a), is hereby revived and made fully operative as to natives residing in any foreign country on the effective date of this act, and section 2 (8 U. S. C., sec. 204b) of the act cited is hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. Section 2 of the act entitled "An act to confer United States citizenship upon certain inhabitants of the Virgin Islands and to extend the naturalization laws thereto," approved February 25, 1927 (44 Stat. 1234; 8 U. S. C., sec. 377a), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2 All natives of the Virgin Islands of the United States who have been or are admitted to the continental United States or to any Territory of the United States, the Virgin Islands of the United States, or Puerto Rico as nonquota immigrants and who are not citizens or subjects of any foreign country, if not ineligible to citizenship, may upon petition and upon full and complete compliance with all other provisions of the naturalization laws be naturalized without making a declaration of intention."

SEC. 4. Clauses (1), (2), and (3) of subsection (a) of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to supplement the naturalization laws, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1929 (45 Stat. 1512; 8 U. S. C., sec. 106a), as amended, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"(1) Entered the United States prior to July 1, 1924, and has resided in the United States continuously since such entry; or

"(2) Entered the Virgin Islands of the United States prior to July 1, 1938, and has resided in such islands continuously since such entry; and

"(3) Is not subject to deportation, but this clause shall not relate to admissibility at time of entry into the Virgin Islands of the United States."

SEC. 5. The first sentence of subsection (b) of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to supplement the naturalization laws, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1929 (45 Stat. 1512; 8 U. S. C., sec. 106a), as amended, is hereby amended to read—

"For each such record of registry made as herein authorized the alien shall pay to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization a fee of $10, unless he entered the Virgin Islands of the United States prior to July 1, 1938, and has resided continuously in the islands since such entry."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, may we have an explanation, please?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, the purpose of this measure is to clarify the law, relieve hardship in a number of cases, and remove many administrative difficulties in connection with the status of certain natives and inhabitants of the Virgin Islands. Both the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of the Interior favorably recommend this bill.

Section 1 applies to a first class of natives of the Virgin Islands, namely, those now residing in the United States, its Territories, or possessions, but not residents in the United States or the Virgin Islands as of January 17, 1917, nor in the United States or its Territories as of June 28, 1932. These were not made citizens of the United States under acts of February 25, 1927, or June 28, 1932; they have no citizenship at all. Section 1 makes them United States citizens.

Section 2 applies to a second class of natives, namely, those who now reside outside the United States, its Territories, and possessions and did not reside in the United States or the Virgin Islands January 17, 1917, or in the United States or its Territories June 28, 1932. These were not made citizens by those statutes. They are not citizens of any country. Section 2 permits their entry into the United States, its Territories, or possessions as nonquota immigrants who can be naturalized without filing declaration of intention.

Section 3 provides that all natives entering as nonquota immigrants may be naturalized simply by petition and full compliance with all other provisions of naturalization laws.

Section 4 applies to a third class of Virgin Island inhabitants, namely, aliens who have entered islands before or since acquisition by United States, without any record of entry and also have remained there. United States immigration laws have only recently (July 1, 1938) been efficiently applied to Virgin Islands.

Section 4 extends provisions of Registration Act of March 2, 1929, to all persons who entered Virgin Islands before July 1, 1938, and have continuously resided there since then.

Section 5 exempts such aliens from the $10 registry fee prescribed by the above act—which otherwise would be a considerable hardship because of their small earnings. Furthermore, these inhabitants took up residence there without reason to believe they had to comply with immigration laws.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

LOAN FOR DEVELOPMENT OF DEPOSITS OF STRATEGIC AND CRITICAL MINERALS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, when Calendar No. 1808, Senate bill 4008, relating to loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the development of deposits of strategic and critical minerals was called, I made objection. It was a bill with which I was not familiar. Since I made the objection I have conferred with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and others. I find that the bill does not do that which I thought it did at the time I made the objection. It is a meritorious bill and should be passed. For that reason I withdraw my objection and ask to recur to the bill and that it be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4008) to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans for the development of deposits of strategic and critical minerals and other metallic minerals, and to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make more adequate loans for mineral-development purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment on page 2, line 12, after the word "critical", to strike out "mineral, or other metallic or nonmetallic mineral" and insert "mineral which in the opinion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would be of value to the United States in time of war", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 14 of the act entitled "An act relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1934, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans upon sufficient security to recognized and established corporations, individuals, and partnerships engaged in the business of mining, milling, or smelting ores. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered also to make loans to corporations, individuals, and partnerships engaged in the development of a quartz ledge, or vein, or other ore body, or placer deposit, containing gold, silver, or tin, or gold and silver, or any strategic or critical mineral, which in the opinion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would be of value to the United States in time of war, when, in the opinion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, there is sufficient reason to believe that, through the use of such loan in the development of a lode, ledge, or vein, or mineral deposit, or placer gravel deposit, there will be developed a sufficient quantity of ore, or placer deposits of a sufficient value to pay a profit upon mining operations: Provided, That not to exceed $20,000 shall be loaned to any corporation, individual, or partnership for such development purposes; except that not in excess of $40,000 in the aggregate may be loaned to any corporation, individual, or partnership for such purposes, if such corporation, individual, or partnership has expended funds previously obtained from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for such purposes in such manner as to justify an additional loan for such purposes: Provided further, That there shall not be allocated or made available for such development loans a sum in excess of $10,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans for the development of deposits of strategic and critical minerals which in the opinion of the Corporation would be of value to the United States in time of war, and to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make more adequate loans for mineral developmental purposes."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before we pass from Senate bill 4008, I should like to say that I would be lost to grace if I did not say that our thanks are also due to the able Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] for the gracious and helpful cooperation he has given in securing the passage of this bill. That much ought to be said; more than that need not be said. I also thank the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] for his assistance. Of course, I include him.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2001) for the relief of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4070) to provide for more uniform coverage of certain persons employed in coal-mining operations with respect to insurance benefits provided for by certain Federal acts, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

LEASING OF CERTAIN INDIAN LANDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 253) to authorize the leasing of certain Indian lands subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments in line 5, after the word "lease", to insert "by the Indians"; in line 8, after the word "years", to strike out "; and an option for a renewal of the lease for an additional term not exceeding 25 years may be included therein" and in lieu thereof to insert: "Provided, however, That such leases may provide for renewals for an additional term not exceeding 25 years, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any other provision of law, any Indian lands on the Port Madison and Snohomish or Tulalip Indian Reservations in the State of Washington, may be leased by the Indians with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, for a term not exceeding 25 years: Provided, however, That such leases may provide for renewal for an additional term not exceeding 25 years, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3975) granting to certain claimants the preference right to purchase certain public lands in the State of Florida was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

METROPOLITAN WATER DISTRICT OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6831) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease certain of the public lands to the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California for the extraction of sodium chloride for water-conditioning purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An explanation is desired.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, the only thing the bill does is to permit the Metropolitan Water District to lease a small quantity of land from the Interior Department.

The Senator had better listen to my explanation. It is a very important one, and he called for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. Does the bill call for a cession of public lands to the State of California?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes.

Mr. KING. How much?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. It calls for the right to lease a small part, and on that small part there is a mineral which enables them to use it in clearing the water of the Colorado River.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 3, after the word "sodium" to insert "solely", and in line 4 to strike out "purposes." and insert "purposes: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to empower the said district to produce sodium chloride or any other valuable deposit in said lands for commercial purposes.", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, pursuant to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437), as amended, and notwithstanding any limitations contained therein with respect to the leasing of public mineral lands to municipalities, to lease to the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California public lands containing deposits of sodium solely for the extraction therefrom of sodium chloride for water-conditioning purposes: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to empower the said district to produce sodium chloride or any other valuable deposit in said lands for commercial purposes. The use of such lands may be acquired by the said district either through the filing and issuance of prospecting permits or leases or through the assignment to it by qualified holders of such permits or leases.

SEC. 2. The leases authorized by section 1 shall be granted upon the condition that if such lands or deposits are used for purposes other than as authorized by this act, or upon the exhaustion of the deposits of sodium chloride in such lands, the permits or leases may be canceled by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time, read the third time and passed.

ISSUANCE OF PATENTS FOR LANDS HELD UNDER COLOR OF TITLE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7736) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for lands held under color of title, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with an amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. May we have an explanation of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An explanation is requested.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, this bill involves a tract of land in Monroe County, Mich., the title to which originally came from the French Government in Montreal. It has been possessed for over 100 years by the family who now claims it. This bill will confirm title in them upon the payment of $1.25 an acre to the Government. The bill has passed the House and is a very just bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the Committee will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 5, after the word "in", to insert "Monroe County in", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That if within 5 years after passage of this act it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that a tract or tracts of public land in Monroe County in the State of Michigan, not exceeding in the aggregate 160 acres, has or have been held in good faith and in peaceable, adverse possession by a citizen of the United States, his ancestors or grantors, for more than 20 years prior to the approval of this act under claim or color of title, and that improvements have been placed on such land or some part thereof has been reduced to cultivation, the Secretary shall, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre, cause a patent or patents to issue for such land to any such citizen: Provided, That the term "citizen", as used herein, shall be held to include a corporation organized under the laws of the United States or any State or Territory thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time, read the third time and passed.

AMENDMENT OF CAPE HATTERAS NATIONAL SEASHORE ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9274) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of the Cape Hatteras National Seashore in the State of North Carolina, and for other purposes", approved August 17, 1937 (50 Stat. 669).

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys is absent from the floor at this time, attending a meeting of the Appropriations Committee. The bill merely changes the name of the Cape Hatteras National Seashore, as I understand. The purpose is fully set forth in the report. The passage of the bill is urged in a letter addressed by the Secretary of the Interior to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands in the House of Representatives.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIUSLAW NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1433) to add certain lands to the Siuslaw National Forest in the State of Oregon, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, on page 2, line 3, after the word "lands", to insert "acquired under the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. 961), as amended", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all lands conveyed or relinquished to the United States, under the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 195), the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act, approved April 8, 1935 (49 Stat. 115), or the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (50 Stat. 522), within the western Oregon land project, situated in Lane, Lincoln, Tillamook, and Yamhill Counties, Oreg., are hereby added to and made parts of the Siuslaw National Forest, Oreg., and shall hereafter be subject to the rules and regulations applicable to national-forest lands acquired under the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. 961), as amended, but special provisions included in conveyance of title to the United States, valid and subsisting at the date of this act and thereafter legally maintained, shall not be affected by this act: Provided, That this act shall not affect any revested Oregon and California railroad grant land, title to which has not passed out of the United States, or any public-domain land which is not embraced in relinquishments purchased under the acts hereinbefore mentioned.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRAND COULEE DAM AND RESERVOIR

The bill (S. 3766) for the acquisition of Indian lands for the Grand Coulee Dam and Reservoir, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Let the bill go over.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this bill is the same as House bill 9445, which I ask to have substituted for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9445) for the acquisition of Indian lands for the Grand Coulee Dam and Reservoir, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, someone objected to the consideration of the bill. If the Senator who objected will withhold the objection for just a moment, I should like to explain the bill.

The Government is building the Grand Coulee Dam. The reservoir site embraces in part the town site of Klaxta. It is necessary to purchase the land, especially that part of the land which is to be covered with water. The money to cover the cost is taken from the funds appropriated for reservoir purposes. The money is to be paid to the Indian agencies, and in turn to be paid to the individual Indians.

That is the whole import of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 3766 will be indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3920) to amend the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938, as amended June 20, 1939, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHITE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

FURNISHING OF STEAM FROM CENTRAL HEATING PLANT TO NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES

The bill (H. R. 8076) to authorize the furnishing of steam from the Central Heating Plant to the National Academy of Sciences, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCO-AMERICAN CONSTRUCTION CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3437) for the relief of the Franco-American Construction Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of" to strike out "$14,492.27" and insert "$4,258.60" and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Franco-American Construction Co. the sum of $4,258.60 in full settlement of its claims against the United States growing out of a certain contract it had with the Government of the United States for the construction of an extension to the power-plant building No. 41, at the navy yard, New York, N. Y., together with certain incidental work in connection therewith: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISOBELL SHANKS

The bill (H. R. 6548) for the relief of Isobell Shanks was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PHILIP A. PENSTON

The bill (S. 4032) to provide for the reimbursement of Philip A. Penston, pharmacist's mate, first class, United States Coast Guard, for the value of personal and household effects lost and destroyed during the hurricane of September 21, 1938, at New London, Conn., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Philip A. Penston, pharmacist's mate, first class, United States Coast Guard, the sum of $1,267 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for the loss and destruction of his personal and household effects in the hurricane at New London, Conn., on September 21, 1938; it appearing that Philip A. Penston, having been transferred from Coast Guard headquarters to duty aboard the Coast Guard cutter Mojave at Miami, Fla., had pursuant to his orders and prior to such hurricane delivered his personal and household effects to a Coast Guard contractor for packing, crating, and shipment to Miami, that he had no control over such effects at the time of their loss and destruction, and that a Coast Guard board of investigation found that the amount appropriated by this act is reasonable and just: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

H. S. WAYMAN

The bill (H. R. 3964) for the relief of H. S. Wayman was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINNIE LOWERY AND WINELL LOWERY

The bill (H. R. 5571) for the relief of Minnie Lowery and Winell Lowery was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOLOMON BROWN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5303) for the relief of Solomon Brown, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$50 per month in a sum not to exceed $1,000", and in line 7, after the word "such", to strike out "sum" and insert "sums", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Solomon Brown, Walterboro, S. C., the sum of $50 per month in a sum not to exceed $1,000. Such sums shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States arising out of the permanent disability sustained by the said Solomon Brown due to the amputation of his right hand, necessitated by severe injuries to such hand received on October 22, 1932, while the said Solomon Brown was at work in the laundry of the United States Penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

THOMAS M. BARNES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3539) for the relief of Thomas M. Barnes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Thomas M. Barnes shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private, Company I, Eighth Regiment United States Infantry, as of May 12, 1915: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there is an adverse report by the War Department on this bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection? I feel it incumbent on me to state to the Senator the reasons for the favorable report of the bill by the Senate Military Affairs Committee, although the War Department reaction was unfavorable.

Barnes, the beneficiary of this bill, died some years ago. A few months ago his aged mother came into the committee room, feeble even beyond her years, and in a trembling voice stated that she wanted the injustice remedied which had been done her son. It seemed that he was charged with the theft of one shirt valued at $2.46, and was brought before a court martial and sentenced to serve 1 year at hard labor at Alcatraz, and was dishonorably discharged. He served another enlistment after that discharge and after that imprisonment, and from that enlistment he was honorably discharged. While it is true that larceny cannot be tolerated or go unpunished, no matter what the value of the stolen article, it does seem that the offense committed did not warrant the punishment awarded by the court.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator recognizes the fact that Secretary Woodring makes the following statement:

So far as this Department is able to ascertain there is no justification for the legislation, and no merit in the claim.

The War Department strongly recommends against the favorable consideration of S. 3539.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is a question of "the letter killing and the spirit giving life." If the Senator had heard the appeal of that aged mother, I feel sure he would let this bill pass.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I will take a vote of the Senate on the matter.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall ask for a vote.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I wish it were as easy to get the letter of resignation of the Secretary of War into the RECORD of the Senate as it is to get into it the letter to which the Senator from Utah has just referred.

I will say that I do not believe a soldier who would not steal a shirt would be a good soldier. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair.) The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSITION OF ESTATES OF CITIZENS DYING ABROAD

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4097) to provide for the disposition of estates of American citizens who die abroad, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 1709 and 1711 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., title 22, secs. 75 and 77), are hereby amended to read as follows:

"1709. It shall be the duty of a consular officer, or if no consular officer is present a diplomatic officer, under such procedural regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe—

"First. To take possession and to dispose of the personal estate left by any citizen of the United States, except a seaman who is a member of the crew of an American vessel, who shall die within or is domiciled at time of death within his jurisdiction: Provided, That such procedure is authorized by treaty provisions or permitted by the laws or authorities of the country wherein the death occurs, or the decedent is domiciled, or that such privilege is accorded by established usage: Provided further, That the decedent shall leave in the country where the death occurred or where he was domiciled, no legal representative, partner in trade, or trustee by him appointed to take care of his personal estate. A consular officer or, in his absence, a diplomatic officer shall act as the provisional conservator of the personal property within his jurisdiction of a deceased citizen of the United States but, unless authorized by treaty provisions, local law, or usage, he shall not act as administrator of such personal property. He shall render assistance in guarding, collecting, and transmitting the property to the United States to be disposed of according to the law of the decedent's domicile.

"Second. After having taken possession of the personal property, as provisional conservator, to inventory and carefully appraise the effects, article by article, with the assistance of two competent persons who, together with such officer, shall sign the inventory and annex thereto an appropriate certificate as to the accuracy of the appraised value of each article.

"Third. To collect the debts due to the decedent in his jurisdiction and pay from the estate the obligations owed there by the decedent.

"Fourth. To sell at auction, after reasonable public notice, unless the amount involved does not justify such expenditure, such part of the estate as shall be of a perishable nature, and such further part, if any, as shall be necessary for the payment of the decedent's debts incurred in such country, and funeral expenses, and expenses incident to the disposition of the estate. If, at the expiration of 1 year from the date of death (or for such additional period as may be required for final settlement of the estate), no claimant shall appear, the residue of the estate, with the exception of investments of bonds, shares of stocks, notes of indebtedness, jewelry or heirlooms or other articles having a sentimental value, shall be sold.

"Fifth. To transmit to the General Accounting Office the proceeds of the sale (and any unsold effects, such as investments of bonds, shares of stocks, notes of indebtedness, jewelry or heirlooms or other articles having a sentimental value), there to be held in trust for the legal claimant. If, however, at any time prior to such transmission, the decedent's legal representative should appear and demand the proceeds and effects in the officer's hands, he shall deliver them to such representative after having collected the prescribed fee therefor.

"The Comptroller General of the United States, or such member of the General Accounting Office as he may duly empower to act as his representative for the purpose, shall act as conservator of such parts of these estates as may be received by the General Accounting Office or are in its possession, and may, when deemed to be in the interest of the estate, sell such effects, including bonds, shares of stock, notes of indebtedness, jewelry or other articles, which have heretofore or may hereafter be so received, and pay the expenses of such sale out of the proceeds: Provided, That application for such effects shall not have been made by the legal claimant within 6 years after their receipt. The Comptroller General is authorized, for and in behalf of the estate of the deceased, to receive any balances due to such estates, to draw therefor on banks, safe deposits, trust or loan companies, or other like institutions, to endorse all checks, bills of exchange, promissory notes, and other evidences of indebtedness due to such estates, and take such other action as may be deemed necessary for the conservation of such estates. The net proceeds of such sales, together with such other moneys as may be collected by him, shall be deposited into the Treasury to a fund in trust for the legal claimant and reported to the Secretary of State.

"If no claim to the effects the proceeds of which have been so deposited shall have been received from a legal claimant of the deceased within 6 years from the date of the receipt of the effects by the General Accounting Office, the funds so deposited, with any remaining unsold effects, less transmittal charges, shall be transmitted by that Office to the proper officer of the State or Territory of the last domicile in the United States of the deceased citizen, if known, or, if not, such funds shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts on account of proceeds of deceased citizens, and any such remaining unsold effects shall be disposed of by the General Accounting Office in such manner as, in the judgment of the Comptroller General, is deemed appropriate, or they may be destroyed if considered no longer possessed of any value: Provided, That when the estate shall be valued in excess of $500, and no claim therefor has been presented to the General Accounting Office by a legal claimant within the period specified in this paragraph or the legal claimant is unknown, before disposition of the estate as provided herein, notice shall be given by publishing once a week for 4 consecutive weeks in a newspaper published in the county of the last-known domicile of the deceased, in the United States, the expense thereof to be deducted from the proceeds of such estate, and any lawful claim received as the result of such advertisement shall be adjusted and settled as provided for herein."

"1711. When a citizen of the United States dies in a foreign country and leaves, by any lawful testamentary disposition, special directions for the custody and management, by the consular officer, or in his absence a diplomatic officer, within whose jurisdiction the death occurred, of the personal property in the foreign country which he possessed at the time of death, such officer shall, so far as the laws of the foreign country permit, strictly observe such directions if not contrary to the laws of the United States. If such citizen has named, by any lawful testamentary disposition, any other person than a consular officer or diplomatic officer to take charge of and manage such property, it shall be the duty of the officer, whenever required by the person so named, to give his official aid in whatever way may be practicable to facilitate the proceedings of such person in the lawful execution of his trust, and so far as the laws of the country or treaty provisions permit, to protect the property of the deceased from any interference by the authorities of the country where such citizen died. To this end it shall be the duty of the consular officer, or if no consular officer is present a diplomatic officer, to safeguard the decedent's property by placing thereon his official seal and to break and remove such seal only upon the request of the person designated by the deceased to take charge of and manage his property."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I would like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this is an amendment of a law which has been on the books for many years. It is provided that consuls may take charge of the estates of citizens who die abroad until administrators or executors may be duly qualified. The amendment is to the effect that, in addition to consular officers, diplomatic officers may have the same power. There are many places where consuls are not located, but where diplomatic officers may be.

There is another amendment of the law to the effect that the funds shall go into the hands of the Comptroller General when finally returned to the United States, and the Comptroller General will turn them over to the State Department after notice as to the heirs. If heirs turn up who reside in some State, the estate is turned over to the State where the deceased lived. If there are no heirs, then the estate is turned over to the State of the deceased citizen. If it cannot be ascertained where his State citizenship was, the estate is then turned over to the Treasury of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXCHANGE OF LAND ADJACENT TO SAN JUAN AND RIO GRANDE NATIONAL FORESTS, COLO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8356) for the exchange of lands adjacent to the San Juan National Forest and the Rio Grande National Forest in Colorado, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. L. 465; U. S. C., title 16, sec. 485), entitled "An act to consolidate national-forest lands", and the provisions of the act of February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. L., p. 1090; U. S. C., title 16, sec. 486), entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to consolidate national-forest lands' ", and acts amendatory thereto, are hereby extended to include any suitable offered lands within the boundaries of that portion of the former Mexican grant known as the Tierra Amarilla Grant, lying within the State of Colorado, adjacent to the Rio Grande or San Juan National Forests. Lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance of title, become parts of the national forest nearest to which they are situated, and shall thereafter be subject to the laws, rules, and regulations applicable to said national forest.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this is a bill which relates solely to lands within the State of Colorado, lands formerly a part of the Tierra Amarilla grant, part of which is in a national forest. There are within claims by settlers to lands within the national forest. On the outside of the forest the Government is making claims to lands owned by the settlers. These disputes have been more or less friendly, and the parties have all agreed that they can be worked out and adjusted by an exchange of lands without any appropriation. That is the purpose of the bill, to authorize the exchange. It calls for no appropriation from the Treasury whatsoever.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like very much to hear from the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], who is on the floor, as to whether he is for or against the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am for it.

Mr. HATCH. I had not noticed the Senator from Colorado present. My only reason for making the explanation was that I am a member of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, and the chairman of the committee, who is the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], requested that someone explain the bill during his absence in the Committee on Appropriations. I should be very happy to have the Senator from Colorado make the explanation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator from New Mexico has stated the situation. Naturally we are all in favor of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ATTENDANCE OF MARINE BAND AT G. A. R. CONVENTION

The bill (H. R. 9296) to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the convention of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Springfield, Ill., September 8 to 13, inclusive, 1940, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THEODORE R. TROENDLE FOR THE DAWSON SPRINGS CONSTRUCTION CO.

The bill (S. 4037) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Theodore R. Troendle for the Dawson Springs Construction Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will not the Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. REED. I withhold it.

Mr. BARKLEY. This is a claim growing out of the construction of the veterans' hospital at Dawson Springs, Ky., by Theodore Troendle, who is now quite an old man. The late Senator Logan introduced a bill for the payment of the claim. The Committee on Claims did not feel that it was in a position to pass on the merits of the claim, and I introduced this bill merely to allow this old gentleman to bring suit in the United States District Court to establish his claim if he can. I hope the Senator will not object, because this old gentleman is quite aged, and unless he can establish his claim and get payment within a few years, it will do him no good. I hope the Senator will permit the bill to go through.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this is a request of Congress to waive the lapse of time and the running of the statute of limitations. Once we begin that sort of thing in relation to lawsuits, I do not know where we are going to end.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not done often. This involves a controversy which has been running for a good many years between this gentleman and the General Accounting Office and the Veterans' Administration. It seems to me that there is nothing that can be lost by allowing him to present his case in court. If he cannot establish it, he certainly will not recover. In addition to his age, the difficulty of bringing witnesses to Washington is apparent to everyone.

I hope the Senator will not object to the bill. We have passed other bills permitting citizens to bring suits to establish their claims. I am not passing on the merits of the claim, but the right a person has to present his case certainly should not be questioned.

Mr. REED. The distinguished Senator from Kentucky is so persuasive that I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Kentucky, notwithstanding the lapse of time or the statute of limitations, to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Theodore R. Troendle, for the Dawson Springs Construction Co., of Dawson Springs, Ky., for losses or damages arising out of a contract dated February 2, 1920, for the construction of eight buildings for the United States Public Health Service Sanatorium at Dawson Springs, Ky.: Provided, however, That from any decision or judgment rendered in any suit presented under the authority of this act a writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States may be applied for by either party thereto, as is provided by law in other cases.

M. SELLER & CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2171) for the relief of M. Seller & Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund to M. Seller & Co., Portland, Oreg., certain penalties in the amount of $5,210.36, paid to the collectors of customs at Portland, Oreg., and Seattle, Wash., on April 28, 1927. Said penalties were incurred under the customs laws in the entry of certain merchandise from Germany at a less value than that returned upon final appraisement, such entry having been made without any intention to defraud the revenues of the United States or to conceal or misrepresent the facts of the case or to deceive the appraiser as to the value of the merchandise: Provided, That no part of the amount refunded in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. BRINSKELLE AND CHARLIE MELCHER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2880) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment on the claim of R. Brinskelle and Charlie Melcher, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment on the claim of R. Brinskelle and Charlie Melcher for damages for loss of a fishing cabin located on Warrior River, Jefferson County, Ala., on or about March 6, 1937, because of fire allegedly caused by negligence of Government employees in connection with clearing operations along the banks of the Warrior River and its tributaries.

SEC. 2. Suit upon such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after enactment of this act and proceedings for the determination of such claim, appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgment thereon shall be in the same manner as in the cases over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RALPH C. HARDY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3003) for the relief of Ralph C. Hardy, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the claims of the United States against Ralph C. Hardy, formerly a traffic rate examiner, National Bituminous Coal Commission, in the amount of $328.75; against William W. Addis, formerly a traffic rate examiner, National Bituminous Coal Commission, in the amount $328.75; against E. F. Goudelock, formerly a traffic rate examiner, National Bituminous Coal Commission, in the amount of $271.90; against J. T. Polk, formerly a traffic rate examiner, National Bituminous Coal Commission, in the amount of $328.75; and against C. H. Seaman, formerly a traffic rate examiner, National Bituminous Coal Commission, in the amount of $328.75, resulting from the fact that payments of per diem and other nonpersonal expenses to each of the above-named persons authorized by the National Bituminous Coal Commission in accordance with the terms of his employment were subsequently disallowed by the General Accounting Office, are hereby canceled; and the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby directed to allow credit in the accounts of the disbursing officer for the payments so made.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the said William W. Addis the sum of $328.75, to the said Ralph C. Hardy the sum of $125, to the said J. T. Polk the sum of $328.75, and to the said C. H. Seaman the sum of $328.75, which sums have heretofore been paid to the United States by such persons in partial or complete liquidation of the respective claims of the United States against such persons canceled by section 1 of this act, or have been deducted by the United States when making payment of other claims of said persons against the United States.

SEC. 3. No part of the amount provided for in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I introduced this bill originally for the Interior Department. The subcommittee presided over by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ] held hearings and suggested certain amendments, and I think the bill before the Senate is very just, and the claim should be allowed. I am sorry the Senator from Wyoming is not present to explain the bill in detail. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. KING. My recollection is, from the record, that there was an adverse report by the department having the matter in charge.

Mr. GUFFEY. There was not an adverse report. They asked me to introduce the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Ralph C. Hardy, William W. Addis, C. H. Seaman, R. J. Polk, and E. F. Goudelock."

RANK AND TITLE OF LIEUTENANT GENERAL OF THE REGULAR ARMY

The bill (H. R. 7611) to provide for the rank and title of lieutenant general of the Regular Army, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri and Mr. REED asked that the bill go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, may I briefly explain the measure?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senators withhold their objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I withhold my objection, but I will renew it at the conclusion of the statement of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very well.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I withhold my objection, if the Senator wishes to make a statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it seems that if notice is served in advance that objection is to be made afterward, we might go on with the calendar.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to hear the Senator from Texas. I withhold my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard in other places.

REGISTRATION AND REGULATION OF INVESTMENT COMPANIES

The bill (S. 4108) to provide for the registration and regulation of investment companies and investment advisers, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED and Mr. WILEY asked that the bill go over.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I should like to make an appeal to the Senators who might object to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senators who objected withhold their objection?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a bill of this length and importance should not be passed on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. WAGNER. Would the Senator withhold his objection so that I may make a brief statement to him?

Mr. REED. I should be very happy to do that, but I shall renew my objection when the Senator concludes his explanation.

Mr. WAGNER. Let me say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to say to the Senator from New York that the Senator from Wisconsin also objected.

Mr. WAGNER. Will the Senator from Wisconsin withhold his objection?

Mr. WILEY. I shall be happy to hear the explanation.

Mr. WAGNER. The S. E. C. made an investigation of investment trusts and investment companies, which covered a period of 4 years. After that, legislation was prepared and introduced by me. The Committee on Banking and Currency held hearings for a period of 4 weeks during which the S. E. C. and the industry were heard.

At the conclusion of the hearings the Committee on Banking and Currency suggested to the industry affected and to the S. E. C. that they get together and see if we could not agree upon legislation, by the modern method of cooperation between industry and Government. The better elements of the industry recognized that abuses had existed because of nonregulation, and for their own protection they desired to have their industry regulated.

As the result of conferences covering a period of 3 weeks, they came before our committee and not only agreed upon a bill but urged the committee to pass a bill for the benefit of the industry. We have an opportunity here to render a service to an industry that seeks to be regulated, so as to restore the public confidence that has been impaired in the operation of investment trusts.

They have been here now for months and they think there is a great opportunity in proper regulation for attracting capital in our recovery and defense program. The provisions of the bill are intended to prevent in the future the abuses which were disclosed, not only before our committee but before the Security and Exchange Commission during its investigation. I am pleading for the industry now. A number of individual Senators have also asked, in the interest of the industry and for the protection of investors, that the Congress pass this conservative piece of legislation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. It so happens that the investment-trust business is one which very largely had its origin in Boston, and I happen to know a great many people connected with this industry. I think it is true that there have been some unfortunate happenings during the past decade which required some kind of regulatory action, and that the more responsible and more conscientious elements in the industry were anxious to see those steps taken.

This bill, as the Senator from New York has said, was agreed upon after very painstaking and careful study, in which really almost a miracle occurred, in that all the various elements in the industry were able to get together and organize themselves, and present a common basis for studying the question, and as the result of that effort an agreement which is embodied in this bill was reached between those engaged in the industry and the members of the S. E. C. I submit that that is a very unusual and a very beneficial occurrence—not only beneficial for those who were engaged in the industry, but I think very beneficial to the public, who, after all, are those who stand to gain the most by having this type of activity properly regulated.

I appreciate that it is somewhat unusual, perhaps, to seek to pass a bill of this length at a time like this, but in view of the very special circumstances, and in view of the fact that so much good can flow from the bill, I certainly would be most appreciative if Senators would withdraw their objections.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I wish to ask the Senator from New York if it is not a fact that all who testified on the original bill that was introduced, raising objections to the passage of not only the first bill but the second bill introduced, not only have withdrawn their objections but are now urging the passage of this bill?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

Mr. MILLER. All the witnesses who testified—and the question was gone into thoroughly—now appear as proponents of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I was an advocate of the bill which created the Securities and Exchange Commission. I have been an advocate of most of their activities. Is it not a fact that they have themselves adopted certain rules which would fall within the purview of the so-called Logan-Walter bill?

Mr. WAGNER. There may be some criticism that may be perfectly justified with respect to other laws. But in this legislation I may say to the Senator that not only do the witnesses who appeared before us in opposition to the original bill now support this compromise measure but also it has the unanimous support, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, of the entire industry. It is almost a miracle. I have never known it to happen in my experience as a legislator that the industry affected has sought such regulation. There was not a dissenting voice heard from the entire industry affected against the passage of this legislation.

Mr. REED. I ask that the bill be passed over.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. WILEY. My only reason for objecting was the importance of the legislation, and the extensiveness of the bill. Personally, after the assurances given, I should be glad to withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. WAGNER. I hope that there may not be an objection to my desire to perfect the bill which is now pending by offering an amendment to it, which may lie on the table. I offer the following amendment to the bill——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parlimentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. To what bill is the Senator offering an amendment?

Mr. WAGNER. I am asking that I may offer an amendment to the proposed legislation, and then, after the amendment is agreed to, if it shall be agreed to, I shall ask that the bill remain upon the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment being considered?

Mr. REED. I am not going to object to the offering of the amendment, but I think that justifies the objection I made to a bill of this length, when within 3 minutes after the objection was made an amendment was offered to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

MOUNT OF VICTORY PLOT, CYPRESS HILLS CEMETERY, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

The bill (H. R. 8258) for the marking, care, and maintenance of the Mount of Victory plot in the Cypress Hills Cemetery, in Brooklyn, N. Y., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT MIFFLIN MILITARY RESERVATION, PA.

The bill (S. 3926) to authorize the Secretary of War to provide a license for the construction of a pile dolphin and walkway at Fort Mifflin Military Reservation, and for other purposes was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, under such terms and conditions as are deemed advisable by him, to grant to the Atlantic Refining Co., its successors and/or assigns, a license to construct and maintain a pile dolphin and walkway thereto in the Delaware River at the Fort Mifflin Military Reservation, in the State of Pennsylvania: Provided, That such license shall be granted only upon a finding by the Secretary of War that the same will be in the public interest and will not substantially injure the interest of the United States in the property affected thereby: Provided further, That all or any part of such license may be annulled and forfeited by the Secretary of War if the property is needed for governmental purposes or for failure to comply with the terms or conditions of any grant hereunder, or for nonuse or for abandonment of rights granted under authority hereof.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I seize the interim while the clerk is looking for the next bill to call attention to the fact that it is now 10:20 o'clock p. m., and some of us have been here since 8 o'clock, and all day long.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order has been called for.

Mr. DANAHER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DANAHER. The parliamentary inquiry is directed to the Chair to ascertain whether or not there is pending a motion to adjourn, or would such a motion be in order?

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to say to the Senator that no such motion is pending. I intend to keep the Senate in session but a few more minutes. I hope we can run on until 10:30.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Connecticut that a motion to adjourn is in order, and can be made by the Senator at any time.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Chair for his courtesy. I appreciate it.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 8124) to provide funds for cooperation with public-school districts in Mahnomen, Minn., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CHARGES FOR ELECTRIC ENERGY GENERATED AT BOULDER DAM

The bill (S. 4039) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam was announced as next in order.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I think that bill requires a brief explanation. The title would hardly indicate what it means. The bill arises by reason of the fact that in 1928, after 5 years of debate, we adopted the Boulder Canyon Act. It was quite indefinite in many particulars at that time. In fact, it was an experiment. It is now found necessary to adjust the act so that the rates may be reduced.

Under the act there could be no change in rates until 1945. There may be reductions in costs now which would justify reductions in rates. Seven States were interested in this matter. Four or five power companies were interested in it, and the United States Government was interested in it. For 2 years the Governors of the seven States, through commissions, have met with the Secretary of the Interior and with the representatives of the users of the power in an attempt to obtain an adjustment by which certain matters could be definitely settled. There were matters of uncertainty with regard to how much money should go out of surplus earnings to the upper States and how much should go to various States. A higher rate of interest was being charged on the amortization payments than on the new Government hydroelectric project. Instead of allocating so much for flood control or navigation, $25,000,000 was allocated to flood control, but the interest was required to be paid out of power earnings. It was an impossible situation.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, would the bill cost the Government anything?

Mr. PITTMAN. It would not, but it would make the payments more sure. House bill 9877 is identical with Senate bill 4039.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the substitution of the House bill for the Senate bill and the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9877) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate and to put into effect charges for electrical energy generated at Boulder Dam.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the House and Senate bills are identical. After several weeks of hearings, one change was made by the Senate committee. To make the House bill conform to the Senate bill, I think that amendment should be adopted.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, the House bill is identical with the Senate bill, but the Senate committee unanimously adopted three minor amendments, one on page 6, in line 24; another on page 7, in line 3; and a third on page 7, in line 12.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, what is the purpose of the change?

Mr. CHAVEZ. The purpose of the change is only to have each of the upper-basin States receive an equal share of whatever we might be able to save from California, Arizona, and Nevada.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does it have any effect upon the allocation of funds?

Mr. CHAVEZ. It will have no effect whatsoever on the allocation of funds.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In other words, if the project is not feasible, the division of the funds equally among the States will not have the result of piling up a huge fund for a State which cannot use it.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The feasibility of any particular project will have to be passed upon by the Reclamation Bureau anyway.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No project may be adopted until it is cleared by the Bureau of Reclamation as feasible?

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct.

Mr. President, I offer as amendments to the House bill certain amendments which the Senate committee has made to the identical Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments offered by the Senator from New Mexico will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 24, after the word "and", it is proposed to strike out the word "equitably" and insert the word "equally"; on page 7, line 3, after the word "and", it is proposed to strike out "equitably" and insert "equally"; and on page 7, in line 11, after the word "plan" and the period, it is proposed to insert: "Any moneys accruing for projects in New Mexico and appropriated pursuant to the authorizations contained in this subsection shall be available for (1) the completion by the Bureau of Reclamation of a survey of the Transmountain diversion project on the San Juan River in the State of New Mexico, and (2) for the construction of such project; and such project shall be designed so as adequately to protect the present and prospective uses of water in the State of Colorado and in San Juan County, N. Mex., including those of the Navajo Tribe of Indians, and, after providing for such needs, any water from such project remaining available for use shall be used as the State of New Mexico may determine."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I say a word in regard to the amendment on page 7, line 11? I have the text before me. After the word "project" the first time it occurs in line 18 on page 7, would the Senator object to the insertion of the words "in conformity with the Federal Reclamation law?"

Mr. CHAVEZ. I think that point is covered by the amendment which has been offered. The amendment reads as follows:

> Any moneys accruing for projects in New Mexico and appropriated pursuant to the authorizations contained in this subsection shall be available for (1) the completion by the Bureau of Reclamation of a survey of the Transmountain diversion project on the San Juan River in the State of New Mexico, and (2) for the construction of such project; and such project shall be designed so as adequately to protect the present and prospective uses of water in the State of Colorado and in San Juan County, N. Mex., including those of the Navajo Tribe of Indians, and, after providing for such needs, any water from such project remaining available for use shall be used as the State of New Mexico may determine.

Hence the Reclamation Bureau will have the decision as to whether or not any particular project in New Mexico would be feasible.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, that amendment merely gives the Bureau the right and the duty of making a survey, and clause (2) provides for the construction of such project. I merely desire to add, after the word "project," the phrase "in conformity with the Federal reclamation law." I will say to the Senator that the reason I make the suggestion is because the Bureau of Reclamation seems to be under the impression that it is not clear from this language that the construction would be in accordance with the Federal reclamation law. It is not certain, in other words, whether or not the fund would be reimbursable. I am sure the Senator feels that that is the intention, and that that is what ought to be done. Furthermore, there is the question of whether or not such a project would be feasible.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is not the information I have from the Reclamation Bureau. If we had a copy of the hearings on this particular project the Senator could see that the Reclamation Bureau is entirely satisfied.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was merely asking the question.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senate committee amendment with regard to labor is already in the House bill.

Mr. CHAVEZ. So far as New Mexico is concerned, we want the power to decide, rather than some Government bureau.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ].

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 4039 is indefinitely postponed.

ADDITIONAL REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4107) to transfer the jurisdiction of the Arlington Farm, Va., to the jurisdiction of the War Department and the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1933) thereon.

Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4587) to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to prescribe rules of pleading, practice, and procedure with respect to proceedings in criminal cases prior to and including verdict, or finding or plea of guilty, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1934) thereon.

Mr. MALONEY, from the Committee on Immigration, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7955) for the relief of Louis Rosenstone, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1935) thereon.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 4161) to amend the District of Columbia Revenue Act of 1939, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1936) thereon.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10104) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1940, and June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1937) thereon.

WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ADAMS. I submit the conference report on House Joint Resolution 544, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to (H. J. Res. 544) making appropriations for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 35, 41, 43, 44, 51, 57, 58, 62, and 63.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 5, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 29, 31, 32, 33, 34, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 46, 49, 53, 54, 64, 65, 66, and 67; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ": Provided further, That not to exceed $25,000,000 of funds herein appropriated to the Work Projects Administration may be used by the Commissioner to supplement the amounts so authorized for other than labor costs in any State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia in connection with the prosecution of projects which have been certified by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, as being important for military or naval purposes"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$41,534,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$34,105,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$612,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,610,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$437,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$30,875,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,626,250"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$418,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,536,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$323,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$59,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"(c) In order to furnish the Secretary of Agriculture with additional funds for the purpose of making rural rehabilitation loans to needy farmers, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed, until June 30, 1941, to make advances to the Secretary of Agriculture upon his request in an aggregate amount of not to exceed $125,000,000. Such advances shall be made: (1) with interest at the rate of 3 per centum per annum payable semiannually; (2) upon the security of obligations acceptable to the Corporation heretofore or hereafter acquired by the Secretary pursuant to law; (3) in amounts which shall not exceed 75 per centum of the then unpaid principal amount of the obligations securing such advances; and (4) upon such other terms and conditions, and with such maturities, as the Corporation may determine. The Secretary of Agriculture shall pay to the Corporation, currently as received by him, all moneys collected as payments of principal and interest on the loans made from the amounts so advanced, or collected upon any obligations held by the Corporation as security for such advances, until such amounts are fully repaid. The amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations which the Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding at any one time under the provisions of law in force on the date of this subsection takes effect is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions of this subsection."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment to read as follows:

"No loan shall be made under this section to any person to enable him to subscribe or pay for stock or membership in any cooperative association or branch thereof not organized or in existence on the date of enactment of this joint resolution."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$750,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 11. None of the funds made available by this joint resolution shall be expended on the construction of any building (1) the total estimated cost of which, in the case of a Federal building, exceeds $100,000, or (2) the portion of the total estimated cost of which payable from Federal funds, in the case of a non-Federal building, exceeds $100,000, unless the building is one (a) for which the project has been approved by the President on or prior to May 15, 1940, or for which an issue of bonds has been approved at an election held on or prior to such date, or for which a State legislature has made an appropriation on or prior to such date, or (b) for the completion of which funds have been allocated and irrevocably set aside under prior relief appropriation Acts: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any projects which have been certified by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, as being important for military or naval purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "on projects certified as hereinbefore provided as being important for military or naval purposes"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 15. (a) In employing or retaining in employment on Work Projects Administration work projects, preference shall be determined, as far as practicable, on the basis of relative needs and shall, where the relative needs are found to be the same, be given in the following order: (1) Veterans of the World War and the Spanish-American War and veterans of any campaign or expedition in which the United States has been engaged (as determined on the basis of the laws administered by the Veterans' Administration except that discharged draft enrollees other than those with service-connected disability shall not be considered as veterans for the purposes of this subsection) and unmarried widows of such veterans and the wives of such veterans as are unemployable who are in need and are American citizens; and (2) other American citizens, Indians and other persons owing allegiance to the United States who are in need."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Omit the matter stricken out and omit the matter inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "(e)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "(f)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "(g)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "(except as provided in section 15 (f))"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "section 15 (f) and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 40 (a) The President is hereby authorized through such agency or agencies as he may designate to purchase exclusively in the United States and to transport, and to distribute as hereinafter provided, agricultural, medical, and other supplies for the relief of refugee men, women, and children, who have been driven from their homes or otherwise rendered destitute by hostilities or invasion. When so purchased, such materials and supplies are hereby authorized to be distributed by the President through the American Red Cross or such governmental or other agencies as he may designate.

"(b) There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000,000, to be available until June 30, 1941, for carrying out the purposes of this section including the cost of such purchases, the transportation to point of distribution, and distribution, administrative and other costs, but not including any administrative expense incurred by any non-governmental agency.

"(c) Any governmental agency so designated to aid in the purchase, transportation or distribution of any such materials and supplies may expend any sums allocated to it for such designated purposes without regard to the provisions of any other Act.

"(d) On or before June 30, 1941, the President shall submit to the Congress an itemized and detailed report of the expenditures and activities made and conducted under the authority contained in this section."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 70: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 41. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year 1941, the sum of $50,000,000, to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of effectuating the provisions of section 32 of the act entitled 'An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes,' approved August 24, 1935, as amended, such sum to be in addition to any funds appropriated by such section 32 and to be subject to all the provisions of law relating to the expenditure of such funds."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado for the immediate consideration of the conference report?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, as I understand, this is the conference report on the relief bill?

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Has the House acted on it?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; the House has acted on it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then, in view of the fact that the Senator from Kentucky intends to take a recess, I suggest that the report go over until tomorrow morning. There are one or two important amendments in the report, and I think the Senate should not take it up for consideration at this hour of the night.

Mr. ADAMS. It is a question of the situation, in which we find ourselves; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the report?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. ADAMS. It is not subject to objection; I will state to the Presiding Officer that I have a right to have it considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator asked unanimous consent.

Mr. ADAMS. I withdraw that, and simply submit the conference report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am not at all sure the Senator is right about that. We had an agreement for a call of the calendar. That call has not as yet been concluded.

Mr. ADAMS. I think the Senator knows that a conference report is always in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. A conference report is always in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator wants to go on with it, I will stay with him here as long as he wants to stay.

Mr. ADAMS. Just a moment. Nobody has any disposition to crowd anybody else. The only question is whether or not the majority leader and the Members of the Senate want to go ahead. I am submitting a conference report on the relief bill, which must be passed before this session recesses. If it can be taken up tomorrow and disposed of, well and good, but we have had some experiences recently which lead us to hesitate about leaving ourselves absolutely at the disposal of what may happen in 1 day. So far as I am concerned—and I think I speak for the committee—I am perfectly willing to take it up at any time at the convenience of the Senator from Wisconsin; there is no disposition to crowd it; but the Senator from Wisconsin is just as much concerned in the passage of the relief bill as is any other Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think I have the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. I think the Senator does not have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has the floor. The Senator yielded to the Senator from Wisconsin. The Senator from Colorado asked unanimous consent. The Chair said "Objection is heard." The Senator from Colorado then withdrew his request. Does the Senator ask for immediate consideration?

Mr. ADAMS. I submitted the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. ADAMS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from Colorado cannot hold the floor while such consent is being obtained, and the RECORD will show that the Chair recognized the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. ADAMS. I have not the slightest inclination to hold the floor over the Senator from Wisconsin, but am trying to accommodate the Senator from Wisconsin, who made the objection, and suggested that he would like to have the matter go over. It is merely a question whether or not the welfare of the Senate and of those on relief would be furthered by proceeding tonight or going on tomorrow. It is not my convenience or that of the Senator from Wisconsin which is the primary consideration. So far as I am concerned, of course, I would rather go home and go to bed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have the floor in my own right, and I do not yield to anyone. I desire to make a statement.

In the first place, unanimous consent was obtained for a call of the calendar, and it is my contention that until the call of the calendar is completed that order cannot be upset, except by a recess or an adjournment or unanimous consent granted for another purpose.

In the second place, I understood from the Senator from Oregon, the minority leader, that the Senator from Kentucky had stated that he was going to move a recess of the Senate at 10:30 o'clock.

Mr. President, there are some important issues involved in this conference report, and I merely suggested, if it was the desire and the intention of the majority leader to take a recess in a few moments, that the report should not be disposed of, in my opinion, in so short a time. If the Senate wants to stay here and dispose of it, so far as the Senator from Wisconsin is concerned, I am willing to stay; but I think, in view of the long session which the Senate has had today, that it is not in the interest of orderly procedure or in the interest of sound legislation for the Senate to take up this important conference report at 25 minutes to 11 o'clock, after the Senate has been in session since 11 a. m. this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to say to the Senator from Wisconsin with respect to his objection—the Chair would like to cite paragraph 1 of rule XXVII. After reading that rule, the Chair thinks the Senator is in error, and the conference report, under the circumstances, would be in order. But the Senator from Colorado has now modified his request. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. ADAMS. I submitted the conference report for consideration by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I had announced before the Senator from Colorado came up from the Appropriations Committee, where he and other Senators have been considering the deficiency bill, that we would recess at 10:30. I did not anticipate or know that the conference report was to be filed. It is my understanding that the conference report is a privileged matter and can be taken up during the call of the calendar. We are planning to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning. I think there will be ample opportunity to consider the conference report.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I want to make it clear that your committee, in charge of the deficiency bill, has had upon its shoulders for the past few days an almost unbearable task. We have had the relief bill upon our hands and hearings on it and its consideration upon the floor. We have had conferences, 1, 2, 3, 4, lasting until midnight. We have had the supplemental Army and Navy bill to consider, with hearings before the subcommittee, full committee and consideration upon the floor. We have just come tonight from the consideration of the second deficiency bill. We have been holding hearings for 2 days, and just this moment concluded the bill. So the members of that committee have been giving every ounce of energy they had, and their strength and their time, and it does seem that when we come in here, in an effort merely to accommodate the Senate, in order that it might recess, we are entitled to some little courtesy and consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. ADAMS. I do not refer to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think we all agree that there is no committee in the Senate or any other legislative body that has worked more diligently and more consistently and conscientiously than has the Appropriations Committee on these measures.

Mr. ADAMS. When we come in and try to carry forward the business of the Senate, and we are short of time, then we are "jumped on" as if we were trying to crowd something. As a matter of fact, we are the ones who have been crowded trying to find time to do the business of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is correct about that, and we all appreciate the strain under which the Appropriations Committee has been working. I am perfectly willing to stay here tonight to consider the conference report.

Mr. ADAMS. I am putting it up to the Senator from Kentucky. He is in charge of this program.

Mr. BARKLEY. I said I had agreed to recess; I am going to move to recess, until 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow, and it is my belief that, the conference report being privileged, we can consider it at any time then.

Mr. ADAMS. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that there is to be a meeting of the Banking and Currency Committee at 10:30 in the morning on a very important matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am a member of that committee.

Mr. ADAMS. I am simply saying that we are working on a 24-hour basis trying to do a week's work.

Mr. BARKLEY. I know that we are all anxious to get the appropriation bills disposed of before tomorrow night, conference reports and everything else, and I hope we can do so, regardless of our wishes in reference to a recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado withhold his motion?

Mr. ADAMS. No; I want the conference report made the unfinished business of the Senate, and it is the unfinished business; I have submitted it.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is a privileged matter, and it is not necessary to make it the unfinished business.

Mr. ADAMS. It becomes the unfinished business.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator from Colorado will yield——

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I want to say, in support of what the Senator from Colorado has said, that, as the Senator from Colorado knows, the deficiency bill, which has just been reported, is the result of hearings that have been going on since early morning, and the Appropriations Committee know that it is going to take some time for the consideration of that bill.

Then, it must go to conference; it must go to the House, for a number of items have been added to the bill. If the Senate really wants to recess tomorrow night, it must get rid of some of the bills that are pending. It has got to get rid of this conference report, and what will occur is that when we take the conference report up in the morning, before we have an opportunity to act on it, the war will again be the subject of discussion; the good Lord only knows when the conference report will be disposed of, and when the Senator from Colorado will get a chance to have the deficiency bill considered.

Mr. ADAMS. And the tax bill has to come in from conference.

Mr. BARKLEY. If what the Senator is saying indicates a desire to go on with the conference report tonight, it is entirely agreeable to me to do so.

Mr. BYRNES. I should like to say to the Senator from Wisconsin, who raised the question, that if he would submit to the Senator from Colorado the inquiry he desires to make and received his reply, possibly he would have no objection to the report being considered at this time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have already examined the report. I think it is absolutely unnecessary to force the Senate to consider this matter tonight. I do not see any reason why the Senator from Kentucky cannot carry out his original intention and let the matter go over until tomorrow. I have no disposition unnecessarily to delay the report.

Mr. BYRNES. I know the Senator has not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am fully aware of the importance of the legislation involved; but the Senator from South Carolina knows that the Senate has been in session now for 11¾ hours.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator agree that we shall vote on the conference report not later than 12 o'clock tomorrow?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. So far as I am concerned I should be willing to agree to that, provided we could have a unanimous-consent agreement which would enable us to consider the conference report during the hours between 11 and 12. If other matters are going to be discussed for an hour tomorrow, I should not like to make the agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize that. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its duties tonight, it recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? None is heard, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. I also ask unanimous consent that the conference report on the relief joint resolution be taken up at once, and that not later than 12 o'clock noon tomorrow a final vote be had upon it, and that debate during the hour from 11 to 12—if that much is required—be confined to the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am sorry that the able Senator made the request. There may be some debate from Senators who are not here tonight. I do not see why we cannot carry out the original intention to recess at half-past 10. We shall be here all summer, probably most of the fall, and part of the winter.

Mr. McKELLAR. But the bill will have to be passed before the first of the fiscal year.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that; but the calendar can well remain here until Monday, or a week from Monday. Tomorrow we can vote on the conference report. There are two measures to be considered. I think, under the circumstances, we should carry out the program, start tomorrow at 11 o'clock on this matter, and we shall get through all right.

I must object at this time to a limitation to an hour's debate, because I am not certain that that would provide a convenient length of time for all those who might want to discuss the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, as chairman of the Patents Committee, I received a very urgent request from the War Department, the Navy Department, the Department of Justice, the Department of Commerce, and the Commissioner of Patents for the immediate consideration of a very important bill, the report on which was filed this morning. It has already passed the House. It deals exclusively with the control of information concerning patents during this emergency, and it is deemed so vital that in my judgment it should be immediately considered; and I ask unanimous consent that it may be so considered. It contains only a paragraph or two. It is merely a restatement of the legislation on the books during the war. It has been on the books ever since, and the bill merely extends it to the emergency declared by the President. It permits the Commissioner of Patents to withhold from publication vital information about patents affecting our national defense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the calendar number of the bill?

Mr. BONE. There is no calendar number. I filed the report this morning, and it is on the desk in the hands of the clerk; and I am asking that it be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I do not want to have the conference report on the relief joint resolution displaced.

Mr. BONE. Then, if we cannot consider it in a moment here, I ask that that measure be displaced long enough to consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. ADAMS. There is objection. I want to find out what we are going to do about the conference report.

ADDITIONAL BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

An additional bill and joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KING:

S. 4172. A bill for the relief of Friedl Pfeifer; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. BARKLEY (for Mr. BAILEY):

S. J. Res. 283. Joint resolution authorizing Col. Donald H. Connolly to hold the office of Administrator of Civil Aeronautics in the Department of Commerce; to the Committee on Commerce.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Benjamin Harrison, of California, to be United States district judge for the southern district of California to fill a new position.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of Robert H. Hinckley, of Utah, to be Assistant Secretary of Commerce, vice John Monroe Johnson.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of several officers for appointment in the Regular Army, under the provisions of law.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nominations of sundry Reserve dental officers to be first lieutenants in the Dental Corps, Regular Army.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nomination of First Lt. Edwin Joseph Sunderville, Veterinary Corps Reserve, to be first lieutenant, Veterinary Corps, Regular Army, under the provisions of law.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair), as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the agreement to recess was made; was it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was. The Senate has agreed, when it concludes its session, to recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think I will take chances on recessing at this time, because evidently we can dispose of the conference report tomorrow.

I move that the Senate recess at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until tomorrow, Saturday, June 22, 1940, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JUNE 21, 1940

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m., and was called to order by the Speaker.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of Gunton Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou sovereign God of the universe, as we bow in the hush and joy of Thy presence, may we be conscious of the need of Thy revealing grace.

We pray that we may be responsive to the guidance of Thy spirit. Thou knowest our infirmities; let Thy strength be made perfect in our weakness. Our duties are far beyond our own power; let divine wisdom be manifested in an abundant measure.

Grant in these days of tribulation and evil tidings, when we are mobilizing our material resources for the defense of our sacred liberties, that we may not fail to mobilize our faith in the abiding reality of God, our faith in the inexhaustible resources of God, our faith in the omnipotent rule of the Lord God of Hosts, and our faith in the final triumph of truth and righteousness. Help us to weave out of the loom of life's trials and hard experiences a character that is worthy of being perpetuated by posterity and worthy of receiving Thy benediction.

As Thou hast opened Thy hand of blessing upon our beloved country, so wilt Thou enlarge our hearts with a sincere desire to minister unto needy humanity and all the children of sorrow and affliction.

In the name of the compassionate Christ we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution:

Senate Resolution 283

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
June 20 (legislative day, May 28), 1940.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and deep regret the announcement of the death of Hon. ERNEST W. GIBSON, late a Senator from the State of Vermont.

Resolved, That a committee of six Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adourn until 11 o'clock antemeridian tomorrow.

The message also announced that pursuant to the foregoing resolution the Presiding Officer had appointed Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. BULOW, Mr. BURKE, Mr. GURNEY, and Mr. TOBEY as members of the said committee on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9594) entitled "An act to amend section 12 (b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, by authorizing the transfer of funds to cover advances for crop insurance."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 279. Joint resolution to amend section 4 of Public Resolution No. 54, approved November 4, 1939, entitled "Joint resolution to preserve the neutrality and the peace of the United States and to secure the safety of its citizens and their interests."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 10055. An act making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE, 1941

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10055) making supplemental appropriations for the national defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Messrs. TAYLOR, WOODRUM of Virginia, CANNON of Missouri, LUDLOW, SNYDER, O'NEAL, JOHNSON of West Virginia, TABER, WIGGLESWORTH, LAMBERTSON, and DITTER.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed briefly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

SELECTION OF KEYNOTE SPEAKER AND PERMANENT CHAIRMAN OF DEMOCRATIC AND REPUBLICAN CONVENTIONS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I know that all Members on both sides of the House are deeply gratified when a Member of the House is paid a high compliment, and especially is that true when the compliment is paid our popular and beloved Speaker the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. [Applause.]

On yesterday at Chicago the arrangements committee for the Democratic National Convention did themselves proud when they conferred upon him a great honor by naming the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. BANKHEAD, temporary chairman of the convention and keynoter. [Applause.] Many great speeches have been made on occasions such as that will be. The party banner has been upheld in a grand fashion by many men on those numerous occasions, but those of us who will be members of that convention and others in radioland who will listen to that address will, in my opinion, in sound sentiment, in party defense, and in oratory hear as great, if not the greatest, speech that was ever made on an occasion such as that will be. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Republican side of the House I am sure I express the sentiments of everyone when I say that we, too, are delighted at the high honor that has come to our beloved Speaker. He is a man whom we all hold in the highest esteem. While I could not go so far as to expect the views he may present will appeal to all of us, I am sure he will present the Democratic case most thoroughly and completely. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, if the wishes of the Members on this side of the House were consummated, he would receive even a higher honor than keynoter for his party. [Applause.] I am happy to join in these felicitations and to extend my personal good wishes. It is a distinct honor to the House and it is a choice which will receive universal approval.

Mr. RAYBURN. I thank the minority leader for his splendid compliment and contribution.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, this House often suffers from comparison with the Senate without any justification whatever. I believe there is just as much ability or more, just as many orators in the House as there are in the Senate, and I am proud of the fact that the great Democratic Party has chosen one of their most distinguished Members, Speaker BANKHEAD, to be temporary chairman to make their keynote speech. I know he will do credit to his party and to the House of Representatives.

I have risen, Mr. Speaker, to point out also that the great Republican Party has chosen a Member of this House, a very distinguished Member of this House, the Republican floor leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], to be its permanent chairman and I know he, too, will be a credit to his party and to the House and that he will deliver a great, ringing, sound, American speech. [Applause.]

Mr. WARREN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I, too, share with all the House the satisfaction that comes to this body in having the one who presides over us selected as the keynote speaker of the Democratic National Convention. It is a tribute to one for whom we hold the deepest friendship and attachment and who truly may be called a great American.

The House of Representatives is the fairest body on earth in its appraisal of its membership. It is generous in overlooking for a long time our frailties, it is quick to recognize force and character and ability, and it is always with reluctance when it is finally forced to place its seal of disapproval on anyone. True greatness is never achieved by accident in this body. It is a long road from the time a man enters here to the time he is elevated by his fellows to the greatest of all honors that they may bestow, for whoever presides over the House holds a position second only to the Presidency. There have been only a few weak ones to reach it and only a few have attained it through political exigencies or sectional location. The cornerstone to a man's rise to the Speakership is confidence.

From the day I entered this body I have cherished the friendship of the gentleman from Alabama, WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD. Over 15 years ago he was rated as one of the strong men of the House and since then I have watched with pride his onward career. When the present majority party first organized the House in the Seventy-second Congress, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] was still a private in the ranks. But although he was chairman of no committee in that Congress or during most of the succeeding Congresses he was nonetheless regarded as a commanding figure solely because of his sheer ability and the confidence in which he was held.

Late in the Seventy-third Congress he succeeded the beloved Edward W. Pou, of North Carolina, as chairman of the powerful Rules Committee. At the beginning of the Seventy-fourth Congress he was made majority leader, and when the post of Speaker became vacant in that Congress he was unanimously chosen to fill it and in each Congress since has been reelected.

In all of these high positions he has displayed the same characteristics of a truly winning personality, real force, power in debate, calmness under stress, and unvarying fairness which have marked him since he first became a Member of Congress 24 years ago. History will record him as one of the really great Speakers.

I am happy to join in this tribute to my devoted friend. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, any laudable movement or venture is well along the road to success when wisely and properly begun.

It is with the utmost degree of pride and genuine heartfelt satisfaction that I note the selection by the Democratic National Committee of our loved Speaker to be temporary chairman and to deliver the keynote address at the forthcoming Democratic convention at Chicago. This choice is another demonstration of the wisdom and acumen of Chairman Farley and the other members of our national committee.

Certainly no better choice could possibly be made than the selection of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. It gives every assurance that our convention, from the very outset, will be saturated with the essence of democracy in its fullness, its purity, and its effectiveness.

Few people are so thoroughly versed in the fundamental philosophy of the Democratic Party and few are so familiar with its record of outstanding achievements. Certainly, no one is more worthy or deserving of honor at the hands of his party than the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

His great natural ability, cultivated by years of intense study and assiduous devotion to duty and tempered by long service and experience, qualify him as an outstanding exponent and teacher of the creed and doctrine of pure democracy.

The scholarly achievements, the eloquence, the patriotism, and the statesmanship of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] are unexcelled by anyone.

Certainly there is no position in our Government so high and exalted that he could not fill it with signal honor and unsurpassed distinction.

The Democratic National Committee is to be thanked and congratulated upon its choice, and I can assure those who attend our convention that under the eloquent and logical keynote address of the gentleman from Alabama, Speaker BANKHEAD, the inspiring spirit of democracy will hover over the convention like a gentle benediction. [Applause.]

I cannot close my remarks without stating also that the Republican Party has shown equally good judgment and wisdom in its choice for permanent chairman of its national convention, the gentleman from Massachusetts, the Honorable JOE MARTIN. [Applause.] He has in the highest degree the respect, the confidence, the admiration, and the real affection of the entire membership of this House. There is no one more able to preach and teach the doctrine of Republicanism than the gentleman from Massachusetts, JOE MARTIN, and I congratulate his committee and his party in his selection. They have made a wise choice. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, the House has been signally honored by both of the great political parties in the selection of the gentleman from Alabama, Speaker BANKHEAD, to deliver the keynote address at the Democratic Convention and in the selection of our beloved minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], as the permanent chairman of the great Republican Party. The selection of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] as the keynoter is peculiarly pleasing to those of us who came to this body with him in the Sixty-fifth Congress. Of that large class there are only seven of us left. The Speaker is easily the most distinguished and beloved member of that group.

Speaker BANKHEAD has made a great Speaker, always fair, always good-natured, always courteous. He is a great American whom I am proud to call friend. In my opinion—and I am sure I voice the sentiment of both sides when I say this—the gentleman from Alabama, Speaker BANKHEAD, is big enough to be President of the United States. [Applause.] So is the gentleman from Massachusetts, JOE MARTIN. [Applause.] I do not hope to see you people nominate the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. You could go further and do worse, and you probably will. [Laughter.] I am not so sure that the Republican Party will not display the good sense of making the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] its standard bearer. He also is a great American who commands the respect and affection of our membership. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, there was no action taken by the committee yesterday in arranging for the convention that met with such unanimous accord and with such hearty applause as the selection of our Speaker for this important position. He is qualified for the place by his unerring and sagacious judgment, by his long and eventful political experience, and by his great ability as an orator. No more persuasive and eloquent advocate could have been selected.

But there is one objection to his being chosen for this distinguished duty. There is an unwritten law, a tradition long observed in the convention, that the man who is to be selected as the standard bearer of the party shall not appear on the platform previous to his nomination by the convention.

However, we live in a day in which we are both making and breaking precedents—in an age that is discarding tradition and ceremony where out of keeping with the practical trend of the times. And in the iconoclastic readjustments of the hour there is no rule of procedure that could be more easily or more happily dispensed with than this one. [Applause.] Judging by the general acclaim given the suggestion made by my friend, the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] just now, there is every reason to believe that if the Speaker were nominated he would have the unanimous support of his colleagues in the House of Representatives on both sides of the aisle. [Laughter and applause.]

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in anticipation of a consummation so devoutly to be wished, I congratulate the committee, the party, and the Speaker on this great and distinguished honor which has come to him and through him to every Member of the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, it is only fitting and proper that the two leaders of the House, our beloved Speaker and our equally beloved minority leader, should receive the recognition they have from their respective parties. It is not only a credit to the two great political parties of the country but it is an honor which both of them richly and properly deserve, because they have both earned it. Both of them have evidenced leadership in the House which has commanded the respect and the attention of the entire country. [Applause.] Their leadership has always commanded the respect of their colleagues.

Naturally I am proud of the selection of the gentleman from Massachusetts, JOE MARTIN, not only because he comes from Massachusetts but because there is a close personal friendship between us. I am particularly proud of the selection of our Speaker as the temporary chairman and the keynoter of the Democratic convention. I am proud not only because of the friendship I have for him personally but because of the respect that is so universally extended to him by all who know him or know of him.

The one thing that has impressed me about the gentleman from Alabama, Speaker BANKHEAD, in my 12 years of contact with him is his broadness of character and of mind, his intense love of country, his fairness in his dealings with his fellow men, and the great capacity and courage that he possesses as a legislator. Another thing that has impressed me is the fact that he looks at things from a national angle. The gentleman from Alabama, Speaker BANKHEAD, has earned the position which he occupies because of his ability and because of the confidence, as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] so ably stated, that we, his colleagues, have in him; but over and above that, the gentleman from Alabama, Speaker BANKHEAD, is an American in every sense of the word. [Applause.] He does not think in terms of Alabama; he does not think in terms of sectionalism; he thinks in terms of the welfare of the Nation and of the entire 48 States, a man whose very actions and expressions are permeated with tolerance and love of his fellow man; a man who symbolizes to the highest extent humanly possible the great ideals for which our Government stands. [Applause.] He fittingly occupies the position that he now holds, and he is well equipped to fill any position within the power of the people of this country, and I predict with confidence that the public positions that he will occupy will not be confined to that of Speaker of the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, of course, I am delighted that my distinguished friend and my nearest neighbor in this House, our illustrious Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama, WILL BANKHEAD, has been selected as the keynote speaker at the Democratic national convention. I am also delighted to know that our friend the gentleman from Massachusetts, JOE MARTIN, has been selected to preside over the Republican convention. I wish he had been selected to deliver the keynote address.

If American institutions are to endure, it will be because of the strength, the ability, the courage and statesmanship manifested by the membership of this House. We are the only people on the Federal pay roll, with the lone exception of the Vice President of the United States, who can gain our positions only by a vote of the people. A President may come from the Vice Presidency or the Cabinet, a Senator may be appointed by the Governor; but no man or woman can occupy a seat in this House until he or she has received a majority of the votes of the people voting in that particular district. This House truly represents the voice of the American people.

There have been 10 Presidents who had never occupied a seat in either House, if you take into consideration the Continental Congress in which George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and John Adams all served. Only 10 men have ever been elevated to the Presidency who had never occupied a seat in either House of Congress.

If by any chance our present great leader, our present President, should decline the nomination, the Democratic Party could not do better than to select as his successor our distinguished Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama, WILL BANKHEAD. [Applause.] And if the Republican Party should exercise its wisdom, it could not do better than to select as its standard bearer the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]. [Applause.]

Then we would have two great leaders of the two great parties trained in this, the greatest of all governmental schools, battling on the great fundamental principles that separate the two great parties in this country. Then, indeed, would we have a battle, pitched on the highest plane and based entirely upon fundamental American principles; and if they are not selected for those places, then it would behoove the two great parties to select them for the next highest places on the two tickets. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, when the two great parties cast about to find men to serve in important capacities in their respective conventions, it was most natural that they turned to the House of Represenatives, that in these recent years is deservedly looked upon as the conservative and safe legislative branch of the Government [applause]; and when they came to this body it was quite natural that they turned to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], who will acquit himself with honor, and, I am sure, with delight and entire satisfaction to the Republicans, and, perhaps, with considerable discomfort to we Democrats [laughter and applause]; and it was equally natural that they turn to the great Speaker of the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

When I came to this body 18 or 19 years ago, I seized upon the gentleman from Alabama, BILL BANKHEAD, as my ideal of a Congressman; and while I do not want to dwell at length upon his many personal charms and virtues as a man and a citizen and a legislator, I do want to mention one or two things that in my judgment stand in bold relief today in his character and equipment for any honor that the American people would wish to give him. And, Mr. Speaker, there is no honor that the American people could give the gentleman from Alabama, BILL BANKHEAD, that he would not fill with distinction because of his splendid qualifications and equipment. In the first place, with his intimate knowledge of parliamentary rules and procedure, the gentleman from Alabama, BILL BANKHEAD, in my judgment, is without a peer in this or the other body as a parliamentarian. He likewise possesses an intimate understanding of the various and devious ways of governmental routine and procedure, an indispensable qualification for a man who is going to serve today in the legislative branch of the Government. As a Democrat he is deeply ingrained and steeped in the sound, safe, and conservative philosophies of the Democratic Party. He will make a great speech, I am sure. In addition to these qualifications I should comment upon the fact that while I have seen the speaker in this body, upon many occasions when he was in the heat of the fight, when influences and passion were sweeping down upon him, I have never yet seen the gentleman from Alabama, BILL BANKHEAD, caught off balance or lose his head. If there is one thing that America needs today in men in high office, whether in the legislative branch or the executive branch of the Government, it is men who have the great virtue of being able to stop, look, and listen, and act deliberately and without impulse. [Applause.]

I have seen the Speaker under trying circumstances. I have always found that calm, inquiring, judicious attitude of being able to stop and take a situation or proposition and weigh it upon its merits and try to come to a conclusion that is justified. I am very glad, Mr. Speaker, to pay my personal tribute to the Speaker of the House, and it is my great satisfaction that he is to make the keynote speech at the Chicago convention.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL].

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to thank the membership of the House for the splendid tributes that have just been paid to our beloved Speaker. Speaker BANKHEAD is Alabama's first citizen. He is first in our confidence, first in our esteem, and first in our affections; and the people of Alabama share with you, without qualification, the judgment expressed here this morning that he is worthy of any honor and fit for any trust within the gift of the people of the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition for a few moments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I shall detain you for only a moment. I would be less than a human being if I did not confess to you that I have been almost overwhelmed and overcome with sentiments of gratitude and appreciation for the very kindly and very complimentary things that have been said by friends on both sides of the aisle this morning in connection with my selection as the temporary chairman of the National Democratic Convention. And I join most deeply and affectionately in the praise that has been bestowed upon the great minority leader in this House, the gentleman from Massachusetts, JOE MARTIN, in the very fine compliment that has been paid him by his party in making him the permanent chairman of the Republican National Convention. [Applause.]

I have served in this House now for practically a quarter of a century. It is a long, long time. I have naturally striven to give the best years of my life and whatever poor talents I may have possessed and to undertake in humble positions, and in more elevated positions, that have been accorded me through the confidence of my associates, the duties of a Representative of an average congressional district of Alabama, and I have always endeavored, as has been suggested by my beloved friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], not only to regard or attempt to regard the local economic conditions of my home district but also to envision at large the best interests of the American people everywhere, regardless of section.

I have asked for this moment merely to express to you my deep and heartfelt appreciation of these rather noble expressions on the part of my colleagues out of their affectionate partiality for me, and to assure you that it has been a great comfort and privilege for me to have served with so many men who have passed out of the scene of action in this House, and to have served with all of you gentlemen who are still here; and regardless of the sharp issues that may arise in the coming Presidential election, I think I am justified in expressing a sentiment of regret that probably it may be unfortunate for the unity and solidarity and best judgment of the American people in the great crisis with which we are confronted that a Presidential election is to come on this year—and, although I am a Democrat, of course, loyal to my party traditions and principles, and have been fighting its battles for more than 40 years, I feel and know that, regardless of these temporary political passions that excite us—the desire to obtain positions of power and control of the Government—all of us in trying times like this, deep down in our hearts are going to do our dead level best to preserve the great liberties and freedom which are the cherished heritage handed down to us by our forefathers, and dedicate our real services to those fundamental and pressing things which make for the preservation of those great ideals that we worship and cherish. [Applause.]

COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. ALEXANDER addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HOBBS presented a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 5138) to make unlawful attempts to interfere with the discipline of the Army, the Navy, and the Coast Guard; to require the deportation of certain classes of aliens; to require the fingerprinting of aliens seeking to enter the United States; and for other purposes, which was ordered to be printed.

THE RESIGNATION OF SECRETARY WOODRING

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, headlines in this morning's Post read: "Forced out for trying to save defenses, Secretary Woodring is quoted." Secretary Woodring told friends in Topeka 3 weeks ago, a small clique of international financiers was seeking to force him out as Secretary of War, because he opposed stripping our defenses to aid the Allies.

I am an advocate of adequate defense—

Said Woodring—

but I will never stand for sending American boys into Europe's shambles. There is a comparatively small clique of international financiers who want the United States to declare war and get into the European mess with everything we have, including our manpower.

I'm not going to stand for it, and I'm not going to resign until forced to do so.

They don't like me because I'm against stripping our own defenses for the sake of trying to stop Hitler, 3,000 miles away. Eventually they will force me to resign, and I'll be darned glad to come back to Kansas where the people have their feet on the ground, and are not easily swayed by demagoges and subtle propaganda.

We are about to see a coalition cabinet an accomplished fact. A war cabinet, if you please. Watch this cabinet, I warn you—watch the President I warn you. If the President gets us into war at this time it would be the greatest disgrace and calamity that could come upon America. We Members of Congress must keep our feet on the ground and not permit anybody to get us into war at this time. Where is our Neutrality Act? Where is the peace of American people to be preserved? In the Congress.

I am not going to vote to go into the European war under any condition. No reason can be given for such a course at such a terrible cost. I am against war when peace can prevail. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix pertaining to Harry Bridges and my appearance before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and before the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

RESIGNATION OF SECRETARY WOODRING

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the President removed Hon. Harry H. Woodring as Secretary of War. News dispatches this morning indicate that there may have been an ulterior motive in his removal. As a Kansan and a friend of the Secretary I am today introducing a resolution for the appointment of a joint committee of the Senate and House to make a thorough investigation. These questions should be answered:

Was Mr. Woodring removed because he cooperated with the Chief of Staff and our Army officials instead of Harry Hopkins and Secretary Morgenthau?

Was he removed because he opposed the sale and transfer of military supplies that we need ourselves?

Was he removed because he favored a program of national defense for our Nation instead of intervention in Europe?

Was he removed in the interest of the third-term movement, or was it because the international bankers could not control him?

This is no time to deceive the people. They are entitled to the truth. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a radio address given by Frank T. Bow on the subject Labor Versus "Fifth Column."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in two particulars: One, permission to extend my own remarks; and the other to extend my own remarks and to include therein a letter and a list of names.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, it is stated with confidence by one of the Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority that when the deficiency bill comes back here there will be an authorization for a new $65,000,000 project, $25,000,000 to be immediately available to build a new dam and a steam generating plant, all under the cloak of national defense.

In the tempo and anxiety of the times opportunities for leakage, wastefulness, and extravagance are unlimited. Against the plea of national defense resistance is difficult. In fact, any proposal labeled national defense is a signal for affirmative action. The T. V. A. has been quick to take advantage of such a situation. Until we know more about this project and until our committees investigate it, this request ought not to be granted. If experience proves anything, it is that T. V. A. proposals will bear examination.

The generosity of the Congress to the Tennessee Valley Authority prompts me to say that in times like these when financial stability is the first line of the national defense, the Tennessee Valley Authority ought not to make this request; but having made it, and having by its customary cupidity had it inserted into this bill in another body, it seems to me it is our obligation as patriotic Americans to refuse it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix and to include therein a letter from the president of the National Coal Association.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short quotation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I have two requests, one to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial appearing in the New York Herald Tribune entitled, "Our Galloping President," and the other request is to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAWKS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for two extensions of my remarks in the RECORD and to include certain tables from the Department of Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from my home-town newspaper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, in listening to the recent laudatory remarks I was almost persuaded that the war between the Republicans and Democrats was off. Perhaps that was the result of the recent coalition Cabinet. I want to say to my Republican friends, however, that it is only when there is great sickness, a desperate sickness, that there is a call for a transfusion of blood. Further, I want to say to my Republican friends that when Colonel Knox and Colonel Stimson, the two leading interventionists in the Republican Party, go into the Cabinet of the Democratic administration all it will do is confirm in the minds of the people that the Democratic Party is the interventionist party and under President Roosevelt is actually the war party in the United States. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen on the Republican side, especially the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], have been groping for many months for an issue. They think for a moment that they have an issue, then within a fortnight it usually vanishes into thin air.

They now have seized upon the slogan or want to seize upon the slogan that the Republican Party is the peace party. Of course, if the Republican Party wants to be a peace-at-any-price party, it may have that plank with no contest. The members of the Republican Party are trying to create the impression upon the American people that in all probability the Democratic Party may be the war party.

The Democratic Party is not a peace-at-any-price party and never has been, nor have the people of the United States. [Applause.] The Democratic party at this time is not the war party, it will not be the war party, but it intends to be, wishes to be, and it will be the party for the defense of America and its great institutions. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include two short newspaper articles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. THILL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a brief Flag Day address delivered by the former national commander of the American Legion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for two extensions of remarks, in one to include an editorial and the other to merely extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TIBBOTT asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article by the Librarian of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH]?

There was no objection.

REVENUE BILL OF 1940

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, the House passed a sensible tax bill. The Senate Finance Committee reported a sensible tax bill. But on yesterday or the day before, the Senate added on to that bill two very serious and highly detrimental amendments. Reading from the New York Times editorial may I say that one introduced by Senator LA FOLLETTE would impose in addition to the regular corporation income tax a surtax ranging up to 40 percent against profits in excess of 20 percent on invested capital. The editorial goes on to say that an amendment of that sort would keep invested capital or dollars that want to be invested in a sort of cyclone cellar, it would depreciate the value of the dollar, and it would to that extent injure national defense.

TAX MISTAKES MADE BY THE OTHER BODY

The Senate bill would interfere indirectly with the financial equilibrium of the Nation. The House bill generally and appropriately advanced taxes 10 percent. The Nation is perfectly willing to accept this additional tax burden. It does this for the sake of defense. It is unwilling, however, to accept an improper and unjust tax burden. The so-called La Follette amendment provides a thoroughly unfair tax burden. It seeks to impose, in addition to the regular corporate-income tax, a heavy surtax ranging as high as 40 percent against profits that might exceed 20 percent on invested capital. This so-called excess-profits tax is on a parity as far as unfairness and injustice is concerned with the now dead undistributed-profits tax. We "kicked" that tax "out of the window." We should "kick" this new proposition likewise "out of the window."

What is invested capital? I defy any man here to define it or determine it. Furthermore, if we cannot define it logically and justly and must leave it to the arbitrary definitions of tax gatherers, see what havoc will be created.

Furthermore, this tax bill is a bill to aid national defense. What in thunder connection can there be between earnings in invested capital and defense? There is no relation whatsoever.

Amendments of this character discourage the Nation in putting money into old or even into new enterprises. It is very easy for a corporation to lose vast sums of money in any one year. To be successful it must set aside reserves yearly from its profits. It cannot set aside adequate reserves to offset huge and unpredicted losses in any one year if you have taxes of the type to be covered by the La Follette amendment. This is the kind of tax that kills the goose that lays the golden egg. To paraphrase the simile, it takes the powder out of national defense.

There was another amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, Senator CONNALLY, which was just as obnoxious as the La Follette amendment. It would impose a long and harsh set of taxes, effective automatically upon the declaration of war. "It would," and I again quote the New York Times editorial—

Increase corporation taxes and jump the normal income tax rate to 10 percent and surtaxes on individual incomes in the higher brackets to 80 percent. It is not necessary to raise the question now whether this would be a good war-tax measure or not. But it is clearly unwise to adopt in advance any hypothetical measure to go into effect automatically on a declaration of war. A war-tax measure could be passed quickly enough if war should actually come. But a "when and if" tax measure of this sort, passed in advance, is not taken seriously enough at the time of its passage to get the study it demands. The Senate, in fact, passed this measure without thinking it worth while to study it at all. Defense calls for drastic taxation; but it also calls for careful taxation; for what is most important in war is maximum production for its prosecution, and any tax that imperils that end defeats its own purpose.

RELIEF AND WORK RELIEF APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 544) making appropriations for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Pending the reading of the statement, Mr. Speaker, may I say that there is only one amendment in disagreement. I believe there is little difference of opinion on the conference report itself, so it is my hope, if it is agreeable to the gentlemen on the other side, that we can debate the conference report for a few minutes, after which I will move the previous question on the conference report, and then give one full hour to debate on the amendment in disagreement. I wonder if that would be agreeable to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Does not the gentleman believe we perhaps ought to extend that hour on the amendment a little?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. All the applications for time I have had from both sides up to this time aggregate 55 minutes.

Mr. TABER. If that is so, that is all right.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to (H. J. Res. 544) making appropriations for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 35, 41, 43, 44, 51, 57, 58, 62, and 63.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 5, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 29, 31, 32, 33, 34, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 46, 49, 53, 54, 64, 65, 66, and 67; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: " : Provided further, That not to exceed $25,000,000 of funds herein appropriated to the Work Projects Administration may be used by the Commissioner to supplement the amounts so authorized for other than labor costs in any State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia in connection with the prosecution of projects which have been certified by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, as being important for military or naval purposes"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$41,534,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$34,105,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$612,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,610,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$437,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$30,875,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$25,626,250"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$418,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,536,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$323,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$59,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the Hoouse recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"(c) In order to furnish the Secretary of Agriculture with additional funds for the purpose of making rural rehabilitation loans to needy farmers, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed, until June 30, 1941, to make advances to the Secretary of Agriculture upon his request in an aggregate amount of not to exceed $125,000,000. Such advances shall be made: (1) with interest at the rate of 3 per centum per annum payable semiannually; (2) upon the security of obligations acceptable to the Corporation heretofore or hereafter acquired by the Secretary pursuant to law; (3) in amounts which shall not exceed 75 per centum of the then unpaid principal amount of the obligations securing such advances; and (4) upon such other terms and conditions, and with such maturities, as the Corporation may determine. The Secretary of Agriculture shall pay to the Corporation, currently as received by him, all moneys collected as payments of principal and interest on the loans made from the amounts so advanced, or collected upon any obligations held by the Corporation as security for such advances, until such amounts are fully repaid. The amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations which the Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding at any one time under the provisions of law in force on the date this subsection takes effect is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions of this subsection."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment to read as follows:

"No loan shall be made under this section to any person to enable him to subscribe or pay for stock or membership in any cooperative association or branch thereof not organized or in existence on the date of enactment of this joint resolution."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "; and (4) subject to the approval of the President, for projects involving rural rehabilitation of needy persons: Provided, That the cost (including all overhead expenses) of any dwelling or any other building the construction of which is hereafter undertaken in connection with such rural rehabilitation shall not exceed $750 and $400, respectively"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$750,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 11. None of the funds made available by this joint resolution shall be expended on the construction of any building (1) the total estimated cost of which, in the case of a Federal building, exceeds $100,000, or (2) the portion of the total estimated cost of which payable from Federal funds, in the case of a non-Federal building, exceeds $100,000, unless the building is one (a) for which the project has been approved by the President on or prior to May 15, 1940, or for which an issue of bonds has been approved at an election held on or prior to such date, or for which a State legislature has made an appropriation on or prior to such date, or (b) for the completion of which funds have been allocated and irrevocably set aside under prior relief appropriation Acts: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any projects which have been certified by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, as being important for military or naval purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "on projects certified as hereinbefore provided as being important for military or naval purposes"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 15. (a) In employing or retaining in employment on Work Projects Administration work projects, preference shall be determined, as far as practicable, on the basis of relative needs and shall, where the relative needs are found to be the same, be given in the following order: (1) Veterans of the World War and the Spanish-American War and veterans of any campaign or expedition in which the United States has been engaged (as determined on the basis of the laws administered by the Veterans' Administration except that discharged draft enrollees other than those with service-connected disability shall not be considered as veterans for the purposes of this subsection) and unmarried widows of such veterans and the wives of such veterans as are unemployable who are in need and are American citizens; and (2) other American citizens, Indians, and other persons owing allegiance to the United States who are in need."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Omit the matter stricken out and omit the matter inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "(e)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "(f)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "(g)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 59: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "in an amount exceeding $100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "(except as provided in section 15 (f)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "section 15 (f) and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 40. (a) The President is hereby authorized through such agency or agencies as he may designate to purchase exclusively in the United States and to transport, and to distribute as hereinafter provided, agricultural, medical, and other supplies for the relief of refugee men, women, and children, who have been driven from their homes or otherwise rendered destitute by hostilities or invasion. When so purchased, such materials and supplies are hereby authorized to be distributed by the President through the American Red Cross or such governmental or other agencies as he may designate.

"(b) There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000,000, to be available until June 30, 1941, for carrying out the purposes of this section, including the cost of such purchases, the transportation to point of distribution, and distribution, administrative and other costs, but not including any administrative expense incurred by any nongovernmental agency.

"(c) Any governmental agency so designated to aid in the purchase, transportation or distribution of any such materials and supplies may expend any sums allocated to it for such designated purposes without regard to the provisions of any other act.

"(d) On or before June 30, 1941, the President shall submit to the Congress an itemized and detailed report of the expenditures and activities made and conducted under the authority contained in this section."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 70: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 41. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year 1941, the sum of $50,000,000 to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of effectuating the provisions of section 32 of the Act entitled 'An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes', approved August 24, 1935, as amended, such sum to be in addition to any funds appropriated by such section 32 and to be subject to all the provisions of law relating to the expenditure of such funds."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 544) entitled "Joint resolution making appropriations for work relief and relief, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941," submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On No. 1: This amendment eliminates the provision of the House bill which established a schedule of average monthly employment of relief workers for the months of July, August, September, October, and November, 1940, in the event that the President, under the authority contained in section 1 (a) of the bill, apportions the funds appropriated by such section over a period of less than 12 months. The House recedes.

On No. 2: This amendment includes refrigerated cold-storage plants within the enumeration of the types of projects for which funds appropriated to the Work Projects Administration under section 1 (a) are to be available. The Senate recedes.

On No. 3: This amendment provides that the funds appropriated to the Work Projects Administration under section 1 (a) of the bill may be used to furnish office quarters in connection with projects for refrigerated cold-storage plants and electric transmission and distribution lines or systems enumerated in section 1 (b). The Senate recedes.

On No. 4: This amendment includes within the enumeration of the projects under section 1 (b) training for manual occupations in industries engaged in production for national-defense purposes. The Senate recedes.

On No. 5: The House bill included within the enumeration of projects in section 1 (b) "miscellaneous projects, which shall include drought conditions." The Senate amendment strikes out "which shall include drought conditions." The House recedes.

On No. 6: This amendment provides that not to exceed $25,000,000 of the funds appropriated to the Work Projects Administration may be used to supplement the amounts authorized to be expended for other than labor costs in any State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia in connection with projects certified by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy as being "important to the national defense." The conference agreement accepts this provision and modifies it so that it relates to projects certified as being "important for military or naval purposes."

On No. 7: Section 1 (d) of the House bill provides that on and after January 1, 1940, in administering funds for the Work Projects Administration not to exceed three-fourths of the total cost of all non-Federal projects approved after such date which are undertaken within any State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia shall be borne by the United States and not less than one-fourth of such total cost shall be borne by the State and its political subdivisions or by the Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia, as the case may be. This Senate amendment exempts from this requirement projects which have been certified by the Secretary of War or by the Secretary of the Navy as being "important to the national defense" and projects which authorized necessary temporary measures to avert danger to life, property, or health in the event of disaster or grave emergency caused by flood, storms, fire, earthquake, drought, or similar cause. The conference agreement adopts the provision of the Senate amendment with clarifying changes and the modification that the projects with respect to which such certification is required shall be those certified as being "important for military or naval purposes."

On Nos. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17: Amendment No. 8 increases the aggregate amount which may be obligated for administrative expenses of the Work Projects Administration in the District of Columbia and in the field from $39,348,000 to $43,720,000. Amendments Nos. 9 to 12, inclusive, provide for increasing the specific items for which the amount provided by amendment No. 8 is to be used as follows: Salaries, from $32,310,000 to $35,900,000; communication service, $580,500 to $645,000; travel, $3,420,000 to $3,800,000; and printing and binding, $414,000 to $460,000. In the event that the President apportions the funds appropriated by section 1 (a) over a period of less than 12 months, amendment No. 13 provides that the amount which may be obligated for such administrative expenses is not to exceed $32,500,000 in lieu of $29,250,000; and amendments Nos. 14, 15, 16, and 17 provide for the following increases: Salaries, from $24,277,500 to $26,975,000; communication service, $396,000 to $440,000; travel, $2,403,000 to $2,670,000; and printing and binding, $306,000 to $340,000. The conference agreement reduces the amount of the increases made by these Senate amendments by 50 percent in each case.

On Nos. 18 and 21: The House bill appropriated $115,000,000 to the Department of Agriculture for assistance through rural rehabilitation to needy farmers and relief to other needy persons. The Senate amendment No. 18 reduces this appropriation to $75,000,000, but amendment No. 21 provides additional funds for rehabilitation loans to needy farmers by directing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make advances for such purpose to the Secretary of Agriculture until June 30, 1941, in an aggregate amount of not to exceed $125,000,000. The conference agreement reduces the amount provided in amendment No. 18 to $59,000,000, but retains the provisions of amendment No. 21 with clarifying changes.

On Nos. 19, 53, and 54: These are clarifying amendments. The House recedes.

On No. 20: This amendment increases from $6,000,000 to $7,500,000 the maximum amount of the appropriation to the Department of Agriculture under section 2 (a) that may be used for administration. The House recedes.

On Nos. 22 and 23: These amendments are clerical changes in subsection letters. The House recedes.

On Nos. 24 and 25: These Senate amendments make certain clarifying changes in the provisions of the House bill relating to loans by the Secretary of Agriculture, and impose a penalty for willful violation of such provisions which corresponds to that in other statutes providing for agricultural loans by agencies in the Department of Agriculture. The House recedes.

No. 26: The Senate struck out the House provision prohibiting any loan from being made by the Secretary of Agriculture to any person to enable such person to subscribe or pay for stock or membership in any cooperative association. The conference agreement restores the House provision modified so that the prohibition only extends to loans for the procurement of membership in any cooperative association or branch thereof not organized or in existence on the date of the enactment of the joint resolution.

On Nos. 27 and 30: These amendments add to the enumeration of projects for which the appropriation to the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration may be used, projects approved by the President involving rural rehabilitation for needy persons. The House recedes on amendment No. 27, and the conference agreement retains the provisions of amendment No. 30 with a limitation that the total cost of any dwelling or other building hereafter constructed in connection with rural rehabilitation should not exceed $750 and $400, respectively.

On No. 28: This amendment increases from $3,500,000 to $5,000,000 the amount appropriated to the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration. The conference agreement fixes the amount at $4,000,000.

On No. 29: This is a technical amendment made necessary by amendment No. 30.

On Nos. 31, 32, 33, and 34: These amendments provide for establishing special or separate industry committees to recommend the minimum rate or rates of wages to be paid under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to employees (including home workers and piece workers) in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands, or both, who are engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce. They also provide that wage orders issued by the Administrator pursuant to the recommendation of any such committee are to supersede orders under existing law. There is also a limitation that no minimum-wage rate may be recommended or approved which will give any industry in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands a competitive advantage over any industry in the United States. The House recedes.

On No. 35: This statement provides that the appropriation of $1,700,000 for the Bureau of Indian Affairs may be apportioned by the President for a lesser period than 12 months (but not less than 8 months) if in his judgment such action is required to meet unemployment conditions during such lesser period. The Senate recedes.

On Nos. 36, 37, 38, 39, and 40, relating to administrative agencies: These amendments increase the amounts for bureaus of the Treasury Department for administrative expenses in connection with carrying out the provisions of the joint resolution as follows: Procurement Division, from $3,225,000 to $3,400,000; Division of Disbursement, from $1,724,516 to $1,954,516; and Office of Commissioner of Accounts and Deposits from $3,827,400 to 4,628,841; they also preserve the existing State geographical distribution of field offices engaged under these appropriations in the functions of procurement, disbursing, and accounting for relief activities. The House recedes.

On No. 41: Makes a technical correction in connection with an administrative agency. The Senate recedes.

On No. 42: The Senate appropriated $830,000 for the Office of Government Reports, and the House bill carries $500,000. The conference agreement recommends $750,000.

On No. 43: The House bill carried authority for the Commissioner of Work Projects to allocate from Work Projects Administration funds not to exceed $40,000,000 for Federal projects. The Senate reduced this amount to $20,000,000. The Senate recedes.

On No. 44: The House bill carries a provision in connection with sponsors' contributions to Work Projects Administration projects requiring that the rules and regulations for carrying such sponsorship requirements into effect shall allow credit in the valuation of sponsors' contributions in kind only to the extent that such contributions represent a financial burden which is undertaken by the sponsor on account of W. P. A. sponsored projects. The Senate struck this provision out and the Senate recedes.

On No. 45: This amendment limits the amount that may be expended on any Federal building project to $100,000, and the amount for any non-Federal building project to $100,000 from Federal funds, but exempts from such prohibition projects approved by the President prior to May 15, 1940, those for which an issue of bonds has been approved at an election held on or prior to such date, those for which funds have been allocated and set aside under prior relief appropriation acts and those which the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy have certified as being important to the national defense. The conference agreement accepts the Senate amendment modified so as to add to the exemptions from the cost limitation, projects for which a State legislature has made an appropriation on or prior to May 15, 1940, and to define projects "important to the national defense" as those which are important for "military or naval purposes."

On No. 46: The House section dealing with hours of work and the earning schedule of W. P. A. workers contains provision that the Commissioner of Work Projects shall reduce the required 130 hours of work per month of W. P. A. workers to not to exceed 65 hours in the case of relief workers with no dependents and shall correspondingly reduce their earnings. The Senate struck out this provision and restored the authority in the current law, making it permissive for the Commissioner to require a lesser number of hours per month for such workers and reduce their pay accordingly. The House recedes.

On No. 47: This amendment authorizes the Commissioner to make exemptions from the limitations of section 14 (a) on monthly earnings and hours of work on projects determined to be of "value to the national defense." The conference agreement authorizes such exemptions on projects certified by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy as being "important for military or naval purposes."

On No. 48: The House provision in section 15 (a) requires that the determination of employment or retention in employment on W. P. A. work projects shall be on the basis of relative need, establishes the order of preference on that basis, and follows closely the provision of the current law dealing with the same subject, except that it gives to the unmarried widows of veterans and to the wives of such veterans as are unemployable the same status as veterans and is also designed to exclude from a status as veterans the World War discharged draft enrollees; the House provision also includes a requirement that W. P. A. employment shall be given on a part-time basis to veterans, their widows, or wives, sufficient to make their income equal to the income from a full-time W. P. A. employment if their income from other governmental sources should be less than income from a full-time W. P. A. employment.

The Senate struck out the House provision and inserted a substitute which gives, without regard to their respective relative needs as between themselves or in relation to others, preference to veterans, their wives, or widows; the Senate provision does not include the House provision relative to part-time employment for those in the veterans' classification, but includes the veterans' status for discharged draft enrollees who were excluded from that classification by the House bill; the Senate provision also requires that employment shall be given by regions so far as practicable and feasible.

The conference agreement recommends a substitute for both House and Senate language; it restores the current law on this subject which provides that employment and retention in employment shall be given on the basis of relative need, and shall, where the relative needs are found to be the same, be given first to veterans and then to others; the substitute provision modifies the current law, however, to include the features of the House and Senate provisions giving to the unmarried widows of veterans and the wives of such veterans as are unemployable the same status as veterans, and to exclude discharged draft enrollees from a status as veterans, except such draftees as have a service-connected disability.

On No. 49: This is a technical amendment. The House recedes.

On No. 50: This amendment eliminates the provision of the House bill which exempted from the requirements relating to removal from the relief rolls of heads of families 45 years of age or older with either a dependent spouse or one or more dependent parents or minor children. It added to the exempt classes relief workers who have made reasonable effort and have not been able to secure private employment. The conference agreement eliminates both provisions.

On No. 51: This amendment makes available $5,000,000 of the appropriation for prosecution of public projects for use by the Commissioner in aiding in investigating and certifying employable persons for employment on Work Projects Administration projects. The Commissioner is also to approve the methods or plans for such service in each case, and there is a limitation that the aid to any State or agency is not to exceed one-third of the estimated cost of such service. The determinations of the Commissioner are to be final. The Senate recedes.

On Nos. 52, 55, and 56: These amendments are clerical changes in subsection letters. The conference agreement makes further changes made necessary by the Senate recession on amendment numbered 51.

On Nos. 57 and 58: These amendments strike out the limitation in the House bill that none of the funds made available shall be used for the operation of any theater project, and make a clerical change. The Senate recedes.

On No. 59: This amendment qualifies the limitation of the House bill that no part of the funds made available shall be used for radio broadcasting so that the limitation applies to radio broadcasting "time." The conference agreement limits the amount which may be used for radio broadcasting to $100,000, and eliminates the word "time."

On Nos. 60 and 61: These are technical amendments made necessary by amendment numbered 51. The conference agreement makes the necessary changes resulting from the action on such amendment.

On Nos. 62, 63, 64, and 65: Section 33 of the House bill prohibits the use of the funds in the joint resolution, either by Federal or non-Federal agencies, for purchasing, establishing, relocating, or expanding mills, factories, stores, or plants which would manufacture, handle, process, or produce articles, commodities, or products (other than those derived from the first processing of sweetpotatoes) in competition with existing industries. The Senate amended the House provision so as to eliminate "stores" from the category of establishments enumerated, to eliminate "handle" and "process" from the category of enumerated operations of the establishments, inserted the words "for sale" which changed the meaning of the House provision from one of prohibition against "manufacturing, handling, processing, or producing" in competition with existing industries to one of "manufacturing or producing for sale" in competition with existing industries; and also included the first processing of naval-stores products among the exemptions.

As a result of the conference agreement, the words "stores", "handle", and "process", stricken out by the Senate, are placed back in the bill, the words "for sale" inserted by the Senate are retained, and naval-stores products are added to the exemption from the operation of the section.

The section as agreed upon will, therefore, prohibit the use of the funds in the joint resolution, either by Federal or non-Federal agencies, for purchasing, establishing, relocating, or expanding mills, factories, stores, or plants which would manufacture, handle, process, or produce articles, commodities, or products for sale in competition with existing industries but would not prohibit such use of the funds, if otherwise lawful under the terms of the joint resolution, and the articles, commodities, or products are not for sale in competition with existing industries.

On No. 66: The Senate amendment provides for the appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of any administrator or other officer named to have general supervision at the seat of Government over the work and program contemplated under the appropriations if the salary received under the appropriations is $5,000 or more per annum; and for the appointment of any State or regional administrator receiving such a salary, except those now serving as such under other law. Section 1761 of the Revised Statutes is not to apply to such an appointee. His salary may not be increased within a period of 6 months after confirmation. The House accepts the Senate amendment.

On No. 67: Section 38, inserted by the Senate, authorizes the President to provide such training within the Civilian Conservation Corps for enrollees thereof in noncombatant subjects essential to the operation of the Military and Naval Establishments as he considers may contribute materially to the national defense. The House recedes.

On No. 69: This amendment appropriates $50,000,000 to be expended by the President, through such agencies as he may designate, for the purchase in the United States of agricultural, medical, and other supplies for the relief of war refugees. Distribution is to be made through the American Red Cross or such governmental or other agencies as the President may designate, and the costs of such distribution are to be paid out of the appropriation. The President is to make an itemized report to the Congress on or before January 3, 1941. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment with clarifying changes, provides that administrative costs and costs of purchases, distribution, and transportation to the point of distribution are to be paid out of the appropriation (exclusive of administrative expenses of any nongovernmental agency), makes the appropriation available to June 30, 1941, and requires the report of the President to be made on or before such date, and provides that any governmental agency so designated by the President may expend any sums allocated to it for the purposes of the section without regard to the provisions of any other act.

On No. 70: The Senate amendment appropriates an additional $100,000,000 for disposal of surplus agricultural commodities in accordance with the provisions of section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended. The conference agreement recommends an appropriation of $50,000,000, and modifies the Senate language so that the appropriation of $50,000,000 will be subject to all of the provisions of law relating to the expenditure of the funds appropriated by section 32.

Amendment in disagreement

The committee of conference report in disagreement Senate Amendment No. 68 relating to the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, with this conference report we present one of the most satisfactory relief bills ever submitted to the House. Notwithstanding the fact that it contains some of the most controversial subjects that have come before the House at this session, the conferees have reached agreement on every item in the bill with the single exception of the one item on the T. V. A. We bring that back because we feel that in view of its long consideration by the legislative committee having jurisdiction in the House, there should be opportunity for consideration and debate before final action is taken on its disposition in a bill of this character.

The bill as it passed the House aggregated $1,111,000,000. As it passed the Senate it had been increased to $1,224,000,000, and as recommended for final action in this conference report it totals $1,157,000,000. In other words, while the conference report recommends an increase to $45,000,000 over the House figures, that is $67,000,000 less than the figure proposed by the Senate. This, of course, is exclusive of the $125,000,000 authorized for rehabilitation loans from Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds. With these modifications, as agreed to by the managers on the part of the two Houses, we trust the bill will be generally satisfactory to the Members of the House.

By way of brief recapitulation of the salient features of the report, as agreed to in conference, we struck from the bill the provision for monthly apportionment. This was done on the theory that the provisions of the bill for administration should be more elastic and more readily adjustable to the emergency needs of the country, and in the hope that the number of men absorbed by private industry would increase to a point where it would not be necessary to employ the full quota as apportioned in the House provision. There is every reason to believe that the relief burden throughout the country will be greatly lightened by the fact that we are providing at this session of Congress more than $5,000,000,000 in cash and in contract authorizations to carry out the defense program. This ought to take up large quantities of surplus labor and to that extent reduce the number of men for whom provision must be made from the funds carried in the relief bill.

We also give preferment for projects certified by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy for national defense, $25,000,000 to be available for other than labor costs in important projects for naval and military purposes; such projects to be exempt from the 25-percent requirement on sponsor's contributions; and in such national emergencies as flood, fire, drought, and similar disasters.

With regard to the limit of cost on buildings constructed by W. P. A., the conference report imposes a limitation of $100,000 on the construction costs of all buildings. The current law places a cost limit of $50,000 on such Federal projects and $52,000 on non-Federal projects. Under the provisions of the bill as modified in conference, the limit is now $100,000 on both Federal and non-Federal projects.

To the relative-need provision, which was subjected to amendment in the House, we restore in the conference report the provisions of the current law with the exception that we include in the exemption widows of veterans and the wives of unemployable veterans. Otherwise the bill follows the current law.

The 18-month clause, which was variously amended in both the House and the Senate, is reported by the conferees after considerable consideration in the form in which it was sent by the House to the Senate, with the single exception that the amendment added in the House exempting heads of families over 45 years of age is eliminated.

On farm security it will be recalled that the House appropriated $115,000,000 cash, and the Senate provided authorization for loans of $125,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. As finally written, the House appropriation is reduced to the Budget estimate of $59,000,000 cash, and the authorization for loans of $125,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is retained, making a total provision for farm security of $184,000,000.

In view of the fact that some apprehension was expressed when the item was up for consideration on the floor of the House that provision for this purpose would be inadequate, it may be noted that the $184,000,000 is in lieu of an item of $161,500,000 for the year 1940, the current year, and $180,000,000 for the year 1939—last year. In other words, we provide in the bill, as amended by the conference report, $23,000,000 more for 1941 than for the current year and $4,000,000 more than for the year 1939.

The provision relative to the purchasing of memberships in cooperatives—a prohibition which was inserted by amendment in the House and which the Senate struck from the bill—was retained, with the limitation that the funds should not be provided for the purchase of membership in any cooperatives which might be established in the future, but the prohibition would not apply to cooperatives now in existence.

On the Fair Labor Standards Act, as applied to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, an agreement was reached which seems to meet the needs of the situation. You will recall that there was general agreement that there was need for some sort of readjustment with respect to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, but it was generally conceded that these readjustments ought not to interfere with the law as administered in the United States. I will read from the statement on the conference report the paragraph on that provision involving amendments Nos. 31, 32, 33, and 34:

These amendments provide for establishing special or separate industry committees to recommend the minimum rate or rates of wages to be paid under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to employees (including home workers and piece workers) in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands, or both, who are engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce. They also provide that wage orders issued by the administrator pursuant to the recommendation of any such committee are to supersede orders under existing law. There is also a limitation that no minimum wage rate may be recommended or approved which will give any industry in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands a competitive advantage over any industry in the United States.

A subject which has been under general recent discussion and which has been much discussed in the newspapers in the last 3 or 4 days is that of noncombatant training for C. C. C. enrollees. The conference report recommends a provision under which C. C. C. enrollees shall receive training in cooking, baking, engineering, communcations, and similar subjects which would be of advantage in peacetime pursuits after discharge from the camps and which, at the same time, would, if unexpectedly it should be necessary to call them to service in the Army, be of great service both to the men and to the Nation in time of war. There is no provision here which would induct them into military service in time of war and, of course, as a matter of fact, they could not be inducted into the service unless Congress should so enact or unless they volunteered, and there is no implication or requirement of any kind whatsoever that the boys receiving this training shall occupy any different status in time of war or in time of peace as result of this legislation.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I did not quite understand the gentleman's statement just made as to how much money was to be furnished to the C. C. C. for that particular training. I am very much interested in the nature of that training also. Was that made clear?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The idea has gone abroad that any reference to the "training" of C. C. C. boys means military training, such training as is given in countries which invoke compulsory military training. This training is in no sense military training, but is merely basic training which will fit these boys for a profession in industry when they leave the C. C. C. and go back into civilian life. No especial amount of money is provided for the purpose and none is needed. It is in connection with the other work of the camps and is out of funds already provided, with facilities already furnished, and under the direction of personnel already in the service.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. This basic training is to give impetus to the training they have already been receiving by way of tractor and truck driving, care and repair, and all that sort of thing of a mechanical nature?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. This is simply supplemental and without additional cost, and there is no additional appropriation and no earmarking of funds of any kind.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I approve of that part of the program. I know something of the practical educational benefits many C. C. C. enrollees have received and am proud of it. Within the limits of the material equipment those camps have, these young men should get much basic vocational, mechanical training fitting them for usefulness in peace or war. And many more should get it.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I think everyone who is sincerely interested in these boys and who wants not only to provide work for the boys and relief for their families, but who also wants to make this service a stepping stone for the future of these boys, will approve of this idea.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman assures us that this training is not military in character?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It is not. It is to all effects the usual vocational training provided in the average high school.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan.
